LEACH C. J. AND MOCKETT J.

Vasantam Venkayya — Appellant

Vasantam Raghavamma— Respondent.

Appeal No. 261 of 1940, Decided on 29th April 1941, against appellate order of Sub-Judge, Tenali, in A. S. No. 63 of 1940.

 Hindu law—Maintenance—Wife obtaining decree for maintenance—Subsequent co-habitation with husband—Decree becomes ineffective and cannot be enforced.

A decree obtained by a Hindu wife against her husband for maintenance differs in no important respect from an order for permanent alimony embodied in a decree for judicial separation, and therefore when the wife subsequent to the decree resumes co-habitation with her husband, the English principle can be applied viz., that the decree becomes ineffective and cannot be enforced. If she is compelled to leave him after resuming co-habitation she should apply for a fresh decree : (1887) 18 Q B D 778, Applied ; Case law reviewed.

[P 2*c* ; P 3*d*,e,f]

A. Lakshmayya — for Appellant.

K. Kotayya — for Respondent.

Leach C. J.—This appeal raises the question whether a wife who has obtained a decree for maintenance can enforce it after having co-habited with her husband. The appellant is the husband of the respondent. In 1930 the respondent instituted a suit in the Court of the District Munsif of Bapatla for a decree for maintenance. She alleged that her husband had so illtreated her that she was unable to live with him. On 23rd June 1930, by consent, a decree was passed in her favour for Rs. 120 per annum. Shortly after this decree had been passed the parties decided that they could live together happily and the wife returned to the husband. They lived together for several years. According to the appellant the second separation did not take place until 24th August 1937, but according to the respondent, it took place on 15th July 1935. Admittedly they lived together for over five years and during this period the respondent bore a son to her husband. On 2nd May 1939 the respondent filed an application for execution of the decree which she had obtained on 23rd June 1930. She asked for the payment of Rs. 663-12-0 being maintenance calculated at the decretal rate from 15th January 1935. The appellant opposed the application. He contended that by reason of the fact that his wife had returned to him and had lived with him for five years thereafter the decree had become a nullity. The District Munsif overruled the objection and his decision was concurred in by the Subordinate Judge of Tenali on appeal. This appeal is from the order of the Subordinate Judge. The appellant maintains the contention which he advanced below. For the respondent it is said that the decree not having been set aside, adjusted or satisfied, she is at liberty to execute it. Her learned advocate went so far at one stage to say that she could have executed the decree against her husband during the five years she was living with him but later asked the Court to regard the decree as being suspended during the period they were living together.

In (1813) 1 Dow 235 : 3 E R 684[1] Lord Eldon held the general doctrine to be clear that a reconciliation after a separation entirely did away with the effects of the separation. This doctrine was applied by a Division Bench composed of Hawkins and A. L. Smith JJ.

1. (1813) 1 Dow 235 : 14 R R 55 : 3 E R 684, Bateman v. Countess of Ross.

in (1887) 18 Q B D 778[2] and by Jeune P. and Gorell Barnes J. in (1904) L R P 145.[3] In (1887) 18 Q B D 778[2] the Justices of the County of Leicester made an order under S. 4, Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878, that the wife should be no longer bound to co-habit with her husband and that he should pay to her a weekly sum for her maintenance. After the order had been passed the wife resumed co-habitation with the husband but the reunion did not prove to be permanent. The question was whether she was entitled to enforce the order which she had obtained against him before she resumed co-habitation. It was held that the order was annulled by reason of the subsequent resumption of co-habitation and therefore the wife could not enforce payment of the weekly sums. Hawkins J. said :

> It is impossible to suppose that the Legislature, in giving Magistrates power to release a wife from the obligation of co-habitation by reason of imminent danger from her husband's violence, intended to confer upon them jurisdiction to make an order which should give a wife liberty to live apart from, and resume co-habitation with her husband when and as often as she should think fit, and compel her husband to maintain her at all times when it pleased her to separate from him, even though her safety no longer required a separation.

If she was compelled to leave him after resuming co-habitation she should apply for a new order. In discussing the judgment of Lord Eldon in (1813) 1 Dow 235,[1] Hawkins J. pointed out that the general principle stated by Lord Eldon was expressly recognized by the Court of Appeal in (1886) 31 Ch D 524[4] and that in (1885) 15 Q B D 239[5] Lord Esher in speaking of weekly alimony ordered to be paid to a wife by the Divorce Court had said that they were not payments of a life annuity; they might be stopped at any moment if the husband and wife returned to co-habitation. In (1904) L R P 145,[3] it was held that the effect of the condonation of an offence which is specified as a ground of complaint within the terms of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, does not depend on the wording of any section of the Act but on the common law. In that case the Court had no hesitation in holding that the resumption of co-habitation put an end to the cause of complaint and therefore the power of the Justices to make an order passed away altogether.

The decision in (1887) 18 Q B D 778[2] was applied by Beasley J. in 2 Rang 163.[6] In that case the petitioner obtained a decree for judicial separation from her husband and embodied in it was an order for the payment to her of permanent alimony. The decree was passed in 1903 and the wife lived apart from her husband until 1st February 1907. On that date she returned to him and they lived together until 25th October 1921, a period of over 14 years. The wife then left the husband and applied for execution of the decree for alimony which she had obtained in 1903. Relying on (1887) 18 Q B D 778,[2] Beasley J. held that she was not entitled to execute the decree. If she desired to obtain an order for maintenance or alimony she was bound to institute fresh proceedings, founded on her allegations of further cruelty. The same principle was applied in 8 Rang 460[7] where it was held that a bona fide reunion must be interpreted as removing the basis on which an order for maintenance rests and therefore as vacating the order. In 20 M L J 12,[8] a Division Bench of this Court held that a Magistrate was bound to refuse to enforce an order under S. 488, Criminal P. C., on the ground that the relationship of husband and wife had ceased to exist since the date of the order. The Allahabad High Court has given similar decisions: see 1888 ALL W N 217[9] and 19 ALL 50.[10]

The learned advocate for the respondent has relied on 50 Mad 663,[11] 58 ALL 379,[12] I L R (1938) ALL 535[13] and 26 Bom 707[14] and this is a convenient stage to examine these decisions. In 50 Mad 663,[11] Curgenven J. held that when a wife has obtained an order for maintenance under S. 488, Criminal P. C., and has subsequently returned to her husband the order is not thereby put an end to but its operation is merely suspended during the period of co-habitation. This decision runs directly counter to the principle embodied in the judgment in (1887) 18 Q B D 778.[2] I can see no difference in principle between an order passed under S. 488 of the Indian Code of Criminal Procedure and an order under the Matrimonial Causes Act of 1878 or the English Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895. If the principle stated by Lord Eldon is to be applied there can be no question of the suspension of the order. The order goes entirely.

In 26 Bom 707[14] a wife had obtained a decree for maintenance against her husband and when she applied to execute it he objected to the execution on the ground that she had lost her right to maintenance inasmuch as she left his house without any cause and without his consent. It was held that no modification of the decree could be allowed in execution on grounds not recognized in the decree itself as giving a right to such modification. This decision has really no bearing here. 58 ALL 379[12] was decided by a single Judge of the Allahabad High Court who concurred in the opinion expressed by Curgenven J. in 50 Mad 663.[11] In I L R (1938) ALL 535[13] the question was whether reduction of a decree for maintenance could be claimed in execution proceedings but it was held that it could not. That question is also far from the present one. The English authorities are in favour of the appellant and most of the Indian authorities. The learned advocate for the respondent has, however, suggested that the English decisions have no application because the provisions of the Indian Divorce Act cannot be applied to them and a Hindu wife is not entitled to sue for a judicial separation. This is an argument which I am not prepared to accept. It is true that the Indian Divorce Act does not apply to the parties and that a Hindu wife may not sue for a decree for judicial separation, but she can sue for a decree requiring her husband to maintain her if she is compelled to live apart. A decree obtained by a Hindu wife against her husband for maintenance differs in no important respect from an order for permanent alimony embodied in a decree for judicial separation. There being no difference in principle I can see no reason why the English authorities should not be applied.

The respondent mainly relies on the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. She points to the fact that under that Code a decree remains in force unless it has been satisfied or adjusted and the satisfaction or the adjustment has been recorded. The present case is not concerned with a matter of procedure or the adjustment or satisfaction of a decree. The question is whether the Court is to disregard a sound principle of law and enforce a decree the basis of which has by the action of the parties themselves been demolished. By returning to her husband the respondent became disentitled to claim maintenance against him. The decree which she had obtained must, it seems to me, be regarded in the circumstances as having become ineffective. By going back to her husband the wife restores the position to what it was when they were married. It seems to me that the rule stated in (1887) 18 Q B D 778[2] must be given effect to here if justice is to be done. For these reasons I would allow the appeal and dismiss the application for execution. This will not prevent the respondent from obtaining a fresh decree if she left her husband on the second occasion as the result of his illtreatment of her, but this is not a question which can be considered in this case. There will be no order as to costs here or below.

Mockett J. —I agree with the judgment of my Lord. I prefer the judgment of Beasley J., in 2 Rang 263[6] to the judgment of Curgenven J., in 50 Mad 663[11] and to that of Ganganath J., in 58 ALL 379.[12] I consider that the judgment of Beasley J. should be followed. As the learned Judge has pointed out, and as my Lord has pointed out, the decree in a case as this in the words of A. L. Smith J., comes to an end from the resumption of co-habitation. I have asked the learned counsel for the respondent whether it is possible for him to distinguish a decree passed in a suit for maintenance from a decree passed under the Divorce Act or an order passed under S. 488, Criminal P. C. He has said that it is impossible to do so, so far as the basis is concerned. That must be so because the basis of all these orders is that if the husband neglects to maintain his wife, she by reason of his unlawful neglect is entitled to maintenance. That is important in this case, for this reason. The parties, as my Lord has indicated, went before the Court and admitted that shortly after the consent decree, they had lived together as husband and wife, there being a difference as to whether the period was five or seven years. That fact was therefore within the knowledge of the Court and therefore no investigation by the Court was required to ascertain it. In a decision of Burn J., and myself in which Burn J., gave the judgment of the Court, A. A. O. No. 446 of 1938, a question arose which is of some assistance to us here. It is a well ascertained principle, and supported by innumerable decisions, that an uncertified adjustment cannot be recognized by an executing Court.

In the case before us, it was within the knowledge of the Court from its own records that the decree sought to be executed had been paid. The Court took the view that no question of O. 21, R. 2 arose as there was no question of an uncertified adjustment. The only question was whether there was any provision in the Code of Civil Procedure which compelled the Court to perpetrate what it knew to be an injustice, and the decision was that with those facts within its knowledge execution should be refused. I think that the position is analogous to this case. It was within the knowledge of the executing Court that the whole basis of this decree had disappeared by act of parties. I think that it would be equally wrong for such a decree to be executed with that knowledge as it would be to execute the decree in the case to which I have just referred. I desire to emphasise again, as my Lord has done, that nothing in the decision in any way affects the law as it has been held to be by this High Court in relation to O. 21, R. 2 of the Code. I further wish to guard myself against deciding anything with regard to a case in which the Court is invited to make an inquiry in the circumstances of the case. When such a case arises it can be decided. As already indicated I agree with my Lord that this appeal should be allowed.

Seemakurthi Manikyam — Petitioner

Jonnavithula Manikyamma — Respondent.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 9 of 1939, Decided on 20th January 1941, to revise order of District Munsif, Rajahmundry, D/- 4th November 1938.

* Civil P. C. (1908), S. 60 (1) (b) — "Tools of an artisan" — Artisan does not include musician.

The word "artisan" does not mean "artist" and therefore it does not include musician. Hence, the musical instruments used to earn a livelihood are not "tools of an artisan" within the meaning of S. 60 (1) (b): ('17) 4 A I R 1917 U B 4, Ref.; ('32) 19 A I R 1932 All 344 and 32 Bom 10, Expl. [P 5c,e,g]

T. Satyanarayana — for Respondent.

Order.—The petitioner in this civil revision petition in execution of the decree obtained by him in Small Cause Suit No. 633 of 1937 on the file of the District Munsif of Rajahmundry attached a sewing machine, a harmonium, a fiddle and a veena which belonged to his judgment-debtor, who was a Brahmin widow. The judgment-debtor filed an application for the release of the articles from attachment, and the order passed by the District Munsif of Rajahmundry on that application has given rise to this revision petition. The learned District Munsif, finding that the judgment-debtor made her living by sewing and teaching music and that the sewing machine and musical instruments were consequently "tools of an artisan" within the meaning of S. 60 (1), cl. (b), Civil P. C., allowed the application and released the articles from attachment. It is conceded for the petitioner that the finding that the sewing machine was a "tool of an artisan" cannot be questioned. The only questions for determination are, therefore, whether a musician is an artisan within the meaning of S. 60 (1) (b), Civil P. C., and whether, if so, musical instruments are the tools of an artisan within the meaning of the same section.

It is urged by the learned advocate for the petitioner that the cases cited by the learned District Munsif do not support his conclusion. The District Munsif referred to the ruling of a single Judge of the Upper Burma Judicial Commissioner's Court in 38 I C 414[1] and to decisions of the Allahabad and Bombay High Courts in A I R 1932 ALL 344[2] and 32 Bom 10.[3] The first case is of no assistance as the learned Judge, without deciding whether a musician was an artisan, held that his musical instruments were not tools within the meaning of S. 60 (1), cl. (b) Civil P. C. With respect, if I was of opinion that a musician was an artisan, I should have no hesitation in holding that the musician's instruments were tools of an artisan within the meaning of S. 60. In the Allahabad case[2] it was held that cooking vessels (utensils) and the "paraphernalia" of a soap-maker were tools of an artisan, and in the Bombay case,[3] that a person engaged to drive an engine on board a steamer was an artisan within the meaning of the Emigration Act. It does not seem to me that it necessarily follows from either of these decisions that a musician is an artisan. The learned District Munsif however was of opinion that these decisions justified a liberal interpretation of the terms "artisan" and "tools of an artisan" and relying on a definition of artisan in Dr. Anandale's Dictionary as "one skilled in any art or trade, a handicraftsman, a mechanic" found that the musical instruments in question were "tools of an artisan" within the meaning of S. 60 (1) (b), Civil P. C.

In the Allahabad and Bombay cases referred to above, the learned Judges who decided the cases based their decisions on the definitions of "artisan" given in standard dictionaries. In the Allahabad case, Niamatullah J. referred to the definition in Murray's dictionary—namely "one who practises or cultivates an art—an artist." A musician would no doubt fall within the scope of this definition but I do not think that the definition is one which can be accepted. In 32 Bom 10,[3] the definition of an artisan given in Webster's dictionary was accepted—"one who is engaged in a mechanical employment." The Oxford English dictionary defines an artisan as (i) "an artist"—a meaning attached to the word which was stated to be obsolete and (ii) "one who is employed in any of the industrial arts, a mechanic, handicraftsman, artificer." I have no doubt that in common speech "artisan" does not mean "artist" now and has not meant it for a very long time.

For the petitioners I have been referred to a ruling of this High Court in an old case reported in 1 Mad 174.[4] In that case it was ruled that a washerman was not an artisan within the meaning of Madras Act, 3 of 1871. Section 3 of the Act sets out the classes of village officers to which the Act applies, and it is plain that under the ruling of this High Court the only village artisans among the classes mentioned in S. 33, cl. (4) would be the village carpenter, blacksmith and potter. Neither a village barber, washerman, astrologer, a priest is an artisan within the meaning of the Act. The ruling of course relates to an artisan within the meaning of the Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act, but it is not of interest as, in my opinion, it follows common usage, and it certainly would not permit the inclusion of musicians in the category of artisans. Moreover, the Bombay and Allahabad decisions referred to by the learned District Munsif, while they no doubt give a wider meaning to "artisan" than "handicraftsman" or "artificer" do not take the definition beyond the scope of "one who is employed in any of the industrial arts." A musician is not employed in an industrial art, and I think that the learned District Munsif was wrong in his conclusion that there was authority for attaching a sufficiently wide meaning to "artisan" to include a musician. This view is justified by a reference to S. 60 (1) (b), Civil P. C., itself. In the same clause "tools of artisans" are freed with the "implements of husbandry" of an agriculturist from liability to attachment. It seems plain that probably the Legislature intended to provide that the tools of certain types of working men should not be liable to attachment. If a musician's instruments are within the meaning of "tools of an artisan" it is clear that the implements required for his profession by any professional man must come within the definition, as, for instance, the instruments of a surgeon or a dentist. I have no doubt that if the Legislature had intended that the implements required by any man in order to carry on his profession should be freed from liability to attachment it would have made its intention plain.

For the reasons given I am of opinion that the musical instruments in question in this case were not "tools of an artisan" within the meaning of S. 60 (1), cl. (b), Civil P. C., and should not have been released from attachment. The order of the lower Court is therefore reversed and the petition is allowed. The lower Court has found that the respondent used the musical instruments in order to earn her livelihood. In the circumstances of the case, I make no order as to costs.

Appeal No. 9 of 1939, Decided on 14th February 1941, against appellate order of Sub-Judge, Kurnool, D/- 24th September 1938.

 Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, Rr. 58 and 63 — Order under R. 58 becomes conclusive when it is passed and continues to be so unless decision in suit under R. 63 is different — Property attached in execution of decree released on objection of third party — Execution application not having asked for any other relief dismissed —Decree-holder's suit under O. 21, R. 63 eventually dismissed — Order dismissing execution petition becomes conclusive when it was passed — Execution petition cannot be said to remain pending until suit under R. 63 is instituted or between date of its institution and its final disposal — Second execution petition filed more than three years from date of dismissal of first execution petition is time-barred — Plaint in suit under O. 21, R. 63 cannot be treated as application in accordance with law within Art. 182 (5), Limitation Act — Nor can declaratory suit under O. 21, R. 63 be regarded as step-in-aid of execution within Art. 182 (5), Limitation Act.

The words, "subject to the result of such suit" in O. 21, R. 63 come into operation only when the result of the suit under O. 21, R. 63 is different from the result arrived at by the executing Court under O. 21, R. 58. The order of the executing Court is otherwise final and conclusive when it is passed and continues to be so unless the result of the suit under O. 21, R. 63 is different. [P 8*d*,e]

Where the property attached in execution of a decree is released from attachment on objection by a third party and the execution petition not having asked for any further relief is dismissed and the suit by the aggrieved decree-holder under O. 21, R. 63 is also eventually dismissed the order dismissing the execution application cannot be said to have remained pending until the institution of the suit under O. 21, R. 63 or between the date of its institution and its final disposal, but must be deemed to have become conclusive on the date on which the execution was dismissed and any execution application filed more than three years after that date must be taken to be time-barred. The plaint in the declaratory suit cannot be treated as an application in accordance with law within the meaning of Art. 182 (5), Limitation Act nor can the declaratory suit under O. 21, R. 63 be regarded as a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of that article. Nor can the Court in which the suit under O. 21, R. 63 is filed be regarded as a proper Court within Art. 182, Expl. 2 : ('30) 17 AIR 1930 Oudh 468, Dissent. ; ('15) 2 A I R 1915 Mad 495 ; ('39) 26 AIR 1939 Pat 138; ('28) 15 AIR 1928 Mad 1201 and 17 Cal 268, Expl. [P 10*e*,f,g,h; P 11*a*,c; P 12*a*,b]

Abdur Rahman J. — The only question to decide in this appeal is whether an application for execution presented by the decree-holder more than three years after the dismissal of his first petition can be, in view of the pendency of a subsequent declaratory suit, which he had brought to get rid of an order made by the executing Court accepting a third party's claim petition, held to be within time in spite of the fact that the suit instituted by the decree-holder challenging the validity of the order of the executing Court had failed. This would depend on the decision as to the character and effect of the order of dismissal passed by the executing Court on accepting the objections raised by the third party to the attachment and on the question whether the declaratory suit can be regarded to be a step-in-aid of execution of the decree within the meaning of that expression as used in Art. 182, sub-cl. (5), Limitation Act. If the order accepting the claim petition and cancelling the attachment is to become final only on the dismissal of the suit brought against the third party claimant and the execution application in which the order had been passed in his favour is to be deemed to remain pending in spite of its dismissal by the executing Court or if the steps, consisting of the institution of a declaratory suit questioning the correctness of the order passed in execution and on its failure of carrying the matter in appeal, taken by the decree-holder to remove the obstruction caused to him by the third party in raising objections to the attachment successfully, despite their failure to achieve the desired result, can be regarded to have been taken in continuation of the execution proceedings in such a manner as to keep the execution petition pending and alive, the execution petition filed by the decree-holder subsequently must be held to be within time. If, on the other hand, the order passed by the executing Court accepting the objections is to be held as final and remains in view of the dismissal of the declaratory suit, unaffected and if the steps taken by the decree-holder in instituting such a suit cannot be considered to be passed in execution of the decree or in continuance of the execution proceedings, the subsequent application for execution must be held to be barred and the time spent in carrying on the declaratory suit cannot be calculated in counting the three years within which the second application should have been made after the disposal of the first one and/ or disregarded as being irrelevant altogether.

The facts out of which the above question of limitation has emerged for decision are that a decree was passed on 25th September 1929 in O. S. No. 825 of 1929. The decree-holder made an application for execution (E. P. No. 610 of 1930) on 17th October 1930 for attachment and sale of an immovable property. It was attached but the third party objected to the attachment on the ground that the property had been sold to him on 2nd June 1928 and that the judgment-debtor was not in possession of the attached property. This claim was allowed on 8th September 1931 and the application for execution dismissed. The decree-holder brought a suit (O. S. No. 774 of 1931) to set aside the order passed by the executing Court and for a declaration that the property attached by him belonged to his judgment-debtors and was liable to attachment in execution of his decree. The suit was dismissed on 14th December 1934 by the trial Court. An appeal was taken against that decree by the decree-holder to the Subordinate Judge of Kurnool (A. S. No. 70 of 1935). This was also dismissed but the learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment observed that a sum of Rs. 600 towards the unpaid balance of the price of the property purchased by him was still in the hands of the respondent who had put forward the sale in his favour and that the decree-holder might take out execution of that amount by appropriate proceedings. As the Subordinate Judge inspite of this observation, considered that the only questions to decide in that appeal were whether the property belonged to the judgment-debtor, and was liable to attachment in execution of the decree and on those two points he found himself against the decree-holder, he dismissed the appeal. In paras. 9, 10 and 11 of his judgment, he observed as follows:

> 9. The further question that was argued and has to be considered is whether in the circumstances it is open to the plaintiff, in the present suit to proceed against the said sum of Rs. 600, as being the unpaid purchase money in the hands of the vendee. I should agree with the lower Court (vide 31 All 443[1]), 'that when on a sale part of the sale consideration remains unpaid, the vendor has a lien on the property sold for the unpaid purchase money. But this does not entitle any decree-holder of the vendor to bring the property to sale in execution of his decree as property of his judgment-debtor. He may attach the unpaid portion of the purchase money which is due to his judgment-debtor and enforce his lien on the property but he cannot cause the property purchased by a third party to be sold for the recovery of the unpaid purchase money to which he, as decree-holder, is not entitled': vide also A I R 1935 Mad 872.[2]
> 10. For plaintiff, reliance is placed on the ruling reported in 40 Mad 733.[3] It cannot however be said on the facts of this case, that the plaintiff's right to proceed against the unpaid purchase money is a consequential relief. As observed, all that has to be considered in this case is whether the property, which plaintiff now seeks to proceed against, still belongs to his judgment-debtor, or it has ceased to be his property. The sale, it should be found, is a true and bona fide transaction and was not a fraudulent one brought about with a view to cheat the creditors; on the other hand, it was brought about with a view to help the creditors, and to see that the best advantage is secured to them.
> 11. Thus the suit having been brought to vacate the claim order and mainly to establish the right of the plaintiff to proceed against the properties conveyed to defendant 1, in execution of his decree in O. S. No. 825 of 1929 and since it has been found that the properties have by virtue of the sale ceased to be the properties of defendants 2 and 3, plaintiff can be held entitled to no relief in the present suit as brought.

After the suit was dismissed, a fresh application for execution (E. P. No. 338 of 1936) was presented by the decree-holder on 16th March 1936, that is, after the expiry of almost four years and a half after his petition E. P. No. 610 of 1930 had been disposed of. This was made with the object of attaching the sum of Rs. 600 alleged to have been in the hands of the respondent as observed by the learned Subordinate Judge, Kurnool, towards the balance of the price which had remained unpaid. The application having been presented more than three years after the last petition was dismissed, it would be apparently barred by time. But limitation was attempted to be saved, (a) as the second application of 1938 was alleged to be in continuation or revival of the first application (E. P. No. 610 of 1930) and (b) as the suit to set aside the order of the executing Court allowing the claim was claimed to be a continuation of the execution proceedings and regarded to be a step-in-aid of the execution under Art. 182, sub-cl. (5). These contentions did not find favour with the District Munsif of Kurnool who dismissed the application as being barred by limitation. On appeal against that order (A. S. No. 21 of 1938) the Subordinate Judge of Kurnool found the decree-holder to have been taking all necessary steps diligently for the execution of his decree and to have filed the present execution application within a few days after the appellate Court's decision in A. S. No. 70 of 1935 clarifying the rights of the parties, was pronounced and since he held that the acceptance of the claim petition and the consequent dismissal of the execution application were only subject to the result of the suit instituted for challenging the order passed by the executing Court on the claim petition, E. P. No. 338 of 1936 was declared by him to have been presented in time. The order of the first Court was thus reversed. The garnishee appeals and the short question for decision, indicated in the beginning of this judgment turns on the character of the orders passed by the executing Court on 8th September 1931 allowing the appellant's claim and dismissing the execution petition and on the effect of the suit brought under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C.

Rule 60 of the same order provides that where, upon an investigation, the Court is satisfied that the property when attached, was not in the possession of the judgment-debtor or of some person on his behalf or under him or that even being in the possession of the judgment-debtor was not in his possession on his own account or as his own property, the Court shall make an order releasing the property, wholly or to such extent as it thinks fit from attachment. Since the only application before the Court was in respect of the property claimed by the respondent and the executing Court found that the whole of the property had been sold to him and did not belong to the judgment-debtor, the property had to be released from attachment. There was no other prayer in the application for execution presented on behalf of the decree-holder and the Court was in view of the order passed by it in favour of the claimant, unable to proceed further and unless it was prepared to adjourn the proceedings to a further date for any sufficient reason, the application had to be dismissed. The Court did, in fact, dismiss the application on 8th September 1931. Order 21, R. 63 reads as follows :

> Where a claim or an objection is preferred, the party against whom an order is made may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but, subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive.

In order to determine the character of the order passed by the executing Court, the last words of the section should be borne in mind. The section, as we read it, lays down in unmistakable terms that the order of the executing Court passed on a claim or an objection is conclusive, the only exception being as to the result of the suit which the decree-holder or the third party, against whom the objections may have been decided, may bring to establish his respective contentions in regard to the property in dispute. The words, "subject to the result of such suit" were, in our opinion, meant to come into operation only when the result of such suit was different from the result arrived at by the executing Court. The order of the executing Court is otherwise declared to be conclusive, that is to say, according to our reading it was final and conclusive when it was passed and continued to be so. It would have been different if the contingency, that is, of a different conclusion having been arrived at in such suit, had arisen. Since the final result of the suit brought by the decree-holder in O. S. No. 774 of 1931 was against him, the order passed by the executing Court accepting the respondent's objections and the consequential dismissal of the application for execution remained undisturbed, and, to use the language of the section, conclusive.

The Oudh Chief Court has, however, taken a different view in 6 Luck 234[4] and held that an order cancelling or maintaining an attachment by the executing Court becomes final only on the date of the decision of the suit authorized by this rule and the order passed by the executing Court dismissing or filing the application on the adjudication of the claim petition cannot be construed as a final decision. With great respect to the learned Judges who decided that case, we are unable to concur in this opinion. The order was, as we have already observed, conclusive and, in view of the fact that the decision of the civil Court was not in any way different, it continued to be so. Had no suit been brought under the provisions of this rule, the order would not have remained in a state of suspended animation until the period of limitation provided for the institution of such a suit expired. Why should a different result be held to follow if a suit such as permitted by this rule is instituted after the expiry of say 11 months unless there is something in the words of this rule or any other provision of law which may compel us to employ the fiction of a relation back and unsettle its finality or effectiveness that existed before that date? If a claim by a third party were disallowed, the execution would have proceeded and the property attached by the decree-holder would have been brought to sale. The mere institution of the suit would not have had the effect of stopping the course of execution.

It is true that a decree or an order against which an appeal has been preferred continues to remain executable in spite of the appeal; but this is so on account of the provisions contained in O. 41, R. 5 (1), Civil P. C. There is no corresponding provision in regard to the orders passed in execution and the person who wants the execution of the order passed by the executing Court stayed will have to move the Court, hearing the suit brought under R. 63, for an injunction. It may also be remembered in this connexion that two orders were passed by the execution Court on 8th September 1931. The objections of the appellant were allowed by one and the execution petition of the respondent was dismissed by the other. One may have followed the other both in point of time and consequence, but the appellant-objector was not a party to the latter order dismissing the application for execution and could not get it set aside by any process of law. This would have been open to the decree-holder alone against whom the third party's objections were accepted and that only when and if the civil Court had been of a different opinion. In that case, not only the order passed by the civil Court would have been substituted for the order passed by the executing Court but the consequential order of dismissal would have been, in order to give effect to the judgment of the civil Court, as contemplated by the words "subject to the result of such suit," vacated.

Let us now examine the decision in 6 Luck 234[4] in order to elicit any further reasons which may have been given by the learned Judges to come to a different finding. This matter, we find, has been very briefly dealt with towards the end and the only reason given to differ from the view taken in 17 Cal 268[5] is that the learned Judges in the latter case failed to consider the effect of the declaratory suit brought under the provisions of O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C. Had the learned Judges of the Oudh Chief Court, and we speak with deference, borne in mind that the attachment in regard to 1/3rd share in the Calcutta case was never set aside by the executing Court and "that the decree-holders could, notwithstanding the order in the claim case, have prosecuted their application for execution against the 1/3rd share which was not released then" and the suit in respect of this 1/3rd share even if brought was superfluous, they would not have said what they did in regard to the declaratory suit brought under R. 63. No other reason has been given for the opinion that "if the suit succeeds, proceedings continue. If the suit fails, the proceedings fail simultaneously." It is not quite correct to say first of all that if the suit succeeds, proceedings continue in all cases. They would not, if the suit succeeded was brought by a third party. In that case, proceedings in execution would, at least as far as the third party's claim was concerned, come to an end. Moreover, if they had stopped on account of the decision of the executing Court being against the decree-holder, they would be, in the event of his success, capable of being revived; but to say that they would continue in that case may create a little ambiguity and give rise to an impression that they had never stopped in fact, which is far from being correct. The latter statement, however, that if the suit fails, the proceedings fail simultaneously cannot be, for the reasons that we have already given, accepted by us. The order by the executing Court cancelling or maintaining an attachment is liable to be affected by the result of the suit, if the result is different and not otherwise.

In support of his contention that the proceedings in a suit under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C., are a continuation of the proceedings in execution, reliance was placed by Mr. Sampath Iyengar on the line of cases represented by the decisions in 38 Mad 535[6] and 17 Pat 588,[7] where the alienations of the property attached by a decree-holder were held to be hit by the rule of lis pendens even if they were effected after the acceptance of objections raised to the attachments by third parties and before suits to test the correctness of these orders were brought by decree-holders. The other decision cited in support of his contention by learned counsel for the respondent was 52 Mad 465[8] where a suit under R. 63 was held to be in continuation of the execution proceedings when the question relating to the want of a separate notice before a suit was brought against a body like the Court of Wards was raised in defence.

In order to appreciate these decisions it is well to remember that an enquiry into the objections raised to the attachment of a property in execution of a decree under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C., is, as the terms of that rule indicate, a limited one; but, inasmuch as they can be raised by a third party only and an appeal is, therefore, incompetent in law, some machinery had to be devised for a further examination of the question whether the property was either wholly or partially liable to be sold for the debt due under the decree. This was provided by giving a remedy to the aggrieved party in the form of a separate suit. What had to be done therefore by the executing Court itself under S. 47, Civil P. C., in case any objection to the liability of the property for being sold in execution was raised by the judgment-debtors or their legal representatives, and the appellate tribunal from that Court, had to be done on the intervention of a third party by a civil Court in an independent action. The appeal, therefore, as against the decision of the executing Court had, instead of being taken to the Court which had appellate jurisdiction over it, to be made to an independent tribunal which may be even inferior in status, and in practice it very often is so, to that of the Court executing the decree. Since the real point to be decided in both these proceedings relates to the liability of the property to be sold, either wholly or partly, for the debt due under the decree (although the grounds for that decision may be either put more elaborately or stated more extensively in the subsequent action) and the lis is necessarily the same, the application of the rule of lis pendens to any alienation made after the decision of the executing Court and before that of the civil Court or Courts, is understandable. In fact, the very words, "subject to the result of such suit" used in R. 63, make it clear that the Legislature did not, after the decision of the executing Court, intend to set the attached property at large, so that it could be alienated or otherwise disposed of without being affected by a contrary result, if any, arrived at in the civil Court. If the result happens to be the same, as that of the executing Court, the alienation by the claimant or the sale in execution of the decree remains unaffected. If, on the contrary, the result is different, the foundation of title on the basis of which the claimant in the one case and the decree-holder in the other were acting disappears, with the result that any alienation or sale must be, in view of the words "subject to the result of such suit" regarded to have been made as dependent on the adjudication of the title in favour of the alienor or in that of the judgment-debtor as the case may be.

We must for the above reasons dissent from the view taken by the Oudh Chief Court in 6 Luck 234[4] and hold that the finality or conclusiveness of the order passed in execution was not disturbed by the decision of the civil Court particularly when the result of the adjudication by both the tribunals was the same. Nor is it possible to accept the contention that the execution application in spite of the order of dismissal passed on 8th September 1931 could be deemed to remain pending either from that date upto the time when the civil suit under R. 63 was instituted or between the date of its institution and of its final disposal. As observed before, two orders were passed on 8th September 1931. The objections by the third party were accepted by one and since by reason of the decree-holder's default in not asking for any further relief in those proceedings, the Court was unable to proceed further with the application for execution, it was dismissed. The last words of O. 21, R. 57 lay down the effect of such a dismissal. By virtue of those words the attachment ceased to exist. It may have been revived if the civil Court came to a conclusion different from that arrived at by the executing Court. But in the absence of that event, the orders of the executing Court passed on 8th September 1931 were conclusive. The execution application E. P. No. 610 of 1930 cannot, therefore, be regarded to have remained pending until the decision of the Subordinate Judge in Appeal No. 70 of 1935.

This brings us to the contention advanced on behalf of the respondent that the institution of the civil suit O. S. No. 774 of 1931 should be regarded to be a step in execution of the decree within the meaning of Art. 182, sub-cl. (5), Limitation Act, and limitation should be held to start from the date of the final order passed in appeal by the Subordinate Judge of Kurnool in A. S. No. 70 of 1935. This article of the Limitation Act gives a period of three years for the execution of a decree or order of any civil Court (not provided by Article 183 or S. 48, Civil P. C.), starting from the date of the final order passed on an application made in accordance with law, where such an application has been made, to the proper Court for execution or to take some step-in-aid of execution of the decree or order. Explanation 2 to this article defines the expression "proper Court" to mean the Court whose duty is to execute the decree or order. In order to attract the provisions of this article, it is contended on behalf of the decree-holder that the plaint filed by him in O. S. No. 774 of 1931 should be regarded to be in the nature of an application as used in Art. 182 (5) and as that was presented by him to the Court which was bound to execute the decree with the object of taking a step-in-aid of execution of his decree, it should be held to fall within the ambit of that clause of the Limitation Act and limitation should be held to start from the date of the final order passed thereon. There is no doubt that if the plaint can be, for the purpose of Art. 182 (5), Limitation Act, regarded to be an application made in accordance with law, the Court receiving the plaint as the Court whose duty it was to execute the decree, and the act of filing the plaint as a step-in-aid of the execution of his decree, this contention ought to prevail.

It may be conceded that the plaint was filed by the decree-holder with the object of getting rid of the finding of the executing Court which was to the effect that the property was not liable to be proceeded against in execution of his decree and that this may be therefore regarded as a step-in-aid of execution. The next question is whether it was filed in the proper Court, i. e., the Court whose duty it was to execute the decree. It may be that the Court executing the decree and the Court receiving the plaint and trying the suit was, by accident and not by design, the same; but, we are of opinion that this accidental coincidence is immaterial and does not make the Court entertaining the civil suit as the proper Court whose duty it was to execute the decree. But assuming our opinion to be incorrect in that respect, and admitting that the Court trying the suit was bound by law to execute the decree, the main point to consider is whether the plaint can be regarded to be an application for the purposes of this article of the Limitation Act and made in accordance with law. Learned counsel for the respondent contends that it should be so and relies again on the decision in 6 Luck 234[4] to which we had occasion to refer in another connexion. This decision is undoubtedly in favour of his contention but the question is if it is correct. The reasons given by the learned Judges for their opinion are: firstly, that as long as the Court receiving the plaint happens to be the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree, the requirements of the article that the application must be made to the proper Court must be deemed to have been complied with. We have referred to this aspect of the matter already although very briefly and in view of what was said by the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court in 37 Bom 559[9] it is unnecessary to discuss the matter at any length.

9. ('13) 37 Bom 559: 20 I C 252: 15 Bom L R 557, Murugappa Mudiwallappa Kotanhalli v. Baswantrao Khalilappa Desai.

The reasons given by the learned Judges of the Oudh Court are not, in our opinion, sufficient or convincing. What is it but an accident that there happened to be only one Court in existence in the place in which the suit could be, with reference to the value and the territorial situation of the property involved, instituted? Why should a reference to the question involved in the two proceedings be considered to be relevant to determine whether the Court is proper or otherwise? Broadly speaking, it is improper for a Court to sit in judgment on its own decision, and an attempt is usually made by the person who is aggrieved by the order of the executing Court to institute his suit in another Court. This is proper. Even if there may be no technical objection in some cases to the hearing of the suit by the executing Court, the opinion may have been formed after such an elaborate enquiry that it may not be easy for the Judge trying the civil suit to hear and determine the suit without being affected to some extent at least by his previous conclusions. The learned Judges of the Bombay Court were not considering the case of a plaint at all but that of an application under the Succession Certificate Act and had therefore no occasion to say anything about the plaint being treated as an application within the meaning of Art. 182.

The second reason given by the learned Judges for holding that a plaint may be, in certain cases, treated as an application for the purposes of the article was that unless there was anything to indicate that the term "application" has been used in the article in any narrow or restricted sense or by way of an antithesis to a "plaint" or to any other document such as a memorandum of appeal, it may be held to cover a plaint as well. As a reason for this decision they referred to S. 47 (2), Civil P. C., and observed that in proper cases, a plaint in a suit could be treated as an application. They attached great importance to the fact that in such cases the article of limitation held in various Courts to be applicable is one that would apply to applications and not to suits thereby implying that the plaints have been held in certain cases to have lost their individuality altogether and were to be regarded as mere applications. But in converting a plaint into an application for the purposes of Art. 182, Limitation Act, we are afraid the learned Judges happened to overlook the provisions of Ss. 2 (10) and 3, Limitation Act. There is no definition of suit in the Act but S. 2 provides that unless there is something rea pugnant in the subject or context, "suit" does not include an appeal or an application. Section 3 of the Act also makes a distinction between the institution of a "suit" and the making of an "application." It was unnecessary to rest the distinction on what the learned Judges called "ordinary parlance." Since a suit is, according to the explanation in S. 3, instituted when the plaint is presented to the proper Court, the Act clearly draws a line between the presentation of a plaint and making an application and it cannot be obliterated unless there was something repugnant in the subject or context. There is nothing in Art. 182 which may call b for that treatment (54 ALL 1067[10] at p. 1074).

The reason given by the learned Judges that the Court may in certain cases treat a proceeding under S. 47, Civil P. C., as a suit and a suit as a proceeding seems to be however beside the point. Even if a suit is to be treated as a proceeding under S. 47 (2) of the Code, it nonetheless remains a suit and this in spite of the fact that the Courts have, in treating the suit started on the institution of a plaint as an execution proceeding, applied Article 182 (5), Limitation Act, which would be applicable to applications only and not to suits. It must be remembered that a c suit could only be treated under this section as an application when it was found that a suit could not otherwise be competent. It was an indulgence granted to a party at the option of the Court to treat the suit as a proceeding in execution and once the suit was treated as such a proceeding, the limitation under Art. 182 (5) was held to be applicable. It must, however, be remembered that the suit did not become an application for all purposes, but it was at the option of the Court treated as a proceeding for a certain purpose and that is about all. The provision in sub-cl. (2) of S. 47, Civil P. C., does not convert the suit into an application for d all purposes. On the contrary the very fact that a clear provision was made in Sec. 47 leaves it beyond any doubt that the suit was not for any other purpose to be treated as a proceeding.

In view of the provisions contained in Ss. 2 and 3, Limitation Act, it was incorrect, if we may say so with respect, to rely on the interpretation put on the rules of the Supreme Court and it is not, for that reason, safe to look to the English decisions for guidance in this respect. Nothing else was contained in this judgment or was said at the e bar which may lead us to construe the plaint presented in O. S. No. 774 of 1931 to be an application within the meaning of that term as used in Art. 182 (5), Limitation Act. Nor can it be said to have been made in accordance with law. Applications to constitute a step-in-aid of execution have to be filed in the execution proceedings themselves and not in any other suit or proceeding however intimately connected the latter might be with the proceedings of the former. A feeble attempt was made by learned counsel for the respondent in the end to show that the order passed by the Subordinate Judge of f Kurnool dismissing the appeal (A. S. No. 70 of 1935) was, in view of his finding that a sum of Rs. 600 had, out of the price, remained unpaid, wrong and that he should have granted a declaration that the abovementioned sum of Rs. 600 along with the vendor's lien on the property, if not the property itself, were liable to attachment. But this point was considered by the learned Subordinate Judge in the above quoted paras. 9 to 11 of his judgment and decided against the respondent rightly or wrongly, it is unnecessary to say now, with the result that the decree-holder's suit was ordered to be dismig sed. This became final and it is impossible for us while hearing a second appeal on the question whether the application for execution presented in 1936 was within time, to hold that O. S. No. 774 of 1931 should not have been dismissed but decreed in the manner suggested by learned counsel for the respondent. The result of the civil suit was, as contemplated by O. 21, R. 63 that of a dismissal and this is enough to decide the fate of the respondent's contention and of the appeal. For the foregoing reasons, the decision of the Subordinate Judge must be reversed and E. P. No. 338 of 1936 held to be barred by limitation. The appellant will h have his costs of the appeal in this Court.

Order. — It seems to me quite clear that when, by the tripartite arrangement known as "havala," a debt due by A to B is cancelled and for it is substituted a debt due by A to C, there being also a discharge of B's separate obligation to C, this cannot enable A to claim under S. 8 of Act 4 of 1938, that his debt to C is a renewal of the debt to B. C is not the same creditor as B nor is he an assign of B in respect of A's original debt. The revision petitions are dismissed with costs, one set in C. R. P. No. 439 of 1939.

Kasturi Seshagiri Rao — for Respondent.

Order. — The only question argued in this civil revision petition relates to the jurisdiction of the Court below to entertain the suit. The issue has been found for the plaintiff and the defendant has preferred this revision petition. The suit was for damages for breach of contract for delivery of certain perforated steel sheets according to specification to the plaintiff who is a merchant trading at Bezwada. The defendants who are carrying on business at Bombay are the representatives of a Belgium firm of steel manufacturers. The plaintiff averred that the defendants broke the contract by failing to deliver the goods and they sued in the District Munsif's Court at Bezwada alleging that their cause of action arose in part at Bezwada. The defendants pleaded inter alia that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit as no part of the cause of action arose at Bezwada. The issue was tried by consent of parties as a preliminary issue and the letters by means of which the contract was concluded have been included in the record. The lower Court took the view that the indent form which the defendants finally sent to the plaintiff to be duly completed and returned after the specifications and quotations had been exchanged must be taken to be the offer and the plaintiff's posting it duly signed and completed was the acceptance and that, therefore, the contract was concluded at Bezwada. The learned District Munsif was further of opinion that the Court had jurisdiction as the goods were to be received finally at Bezwada via Madras.

Mr. Rajagopala Ayyangar, the learned counsel for the petitioner, urged that the view taken by the learned District Munsif was unsustainable. He contended that the plaintiff's return of the indent form duly completed and signed was merely a customary formality which the defendants required their customers to observe in such cases, and that the contract was really concluded by the defendants' telegram from Bombay accepting the plaintiff's order for the goods at the price quoted by the defendants. Mr. Rajagopala Ayyangar further submitted that the correspondence showed that the contract was on C. I. F. terms and that the shipping documents were to be delivered against payment at Bombay, while the harbour at which the goods were to be unloaded was Madras. The place of delivery, he therefore argued, must be taken to be either Bombay or Madras and not Bezwada. The respondent's learned counsel, Mr. Seshagiri Rao did not attempt to repel these contentions but sought to support the decision of the Court below on the ground that if the telegram was to be treated as the acceptance its receipt by the plaintiff was a part of the cause of action and as this was admittedly at Bezwada, the Court below had jurisdiction to entertain the suit under S. 20, cl. (c), Civil P. C. The decision of Ramesam J. in 46 M L J 371[1] was cited in support of this contention. After referring to the decisions holding that in suits arising out of contracts a part of the cause of action must be deemed to arise where the letter containing the offer was received, the learned Judge held that the receipt of acceptance when the contract was complete was a part of the contract "there being no reason why acceptance should be in a worse position than offer." The learned Judge distinguished the case in (1918) 1 K B 128,[2] by pointing out that it did not appear from the affidavit on which the application was based that any letter of acceptance was received at West Hartlepool and the case in 27 Mad 355,[3] by observing that no attempt was made there to support the judgment under appeal on the ground that the letter of acceptance was received in Kurnool.

Mr. Rajagopala Ayyangar urged that this decision should not be accepted as sound because it was opposed to the two later cases decided by Divisional Benches of this Court and reported in 65 M L J 455[4] and I L R (1940) Mad 195[5] in both of which the decision should have been the other way if 46 M L J 371[1] were to be regarded as good law. In both these cases which arose out of suits filed on the original side of this Court, it appears no doubt from the statement of facts that the communication of acceptance was received at Madras. But it is to be observed that no point was made of such receipt as being part of the cause of action and the decision of Ramesam J. referred to above does not appear to have been brought to the notice of the learned Judges who held that the cause of action in each case did not arise in part within the original civil jurisdiction of this Court. It was also argued that there was no real analogy between the receipt of an offer and the receipt of an acceptance; for, while the former was an essential step in the making of a contract as there could be no acceptance unless the offer was received, the receipt of acceptance was not necessary to complete the contract which was concluded as soon as the letter of acceptance was posted as settled by a long course of decisions. The argument is not without force, and I should have hesitated to follow the decision of Ramesam J., if there was nothing more to support it than the analogy of the receipt of an offer on which, apparently, it was based. But there is authority for the view that although an acceptance is complete as against the proposer as soon as the letter containing it is posted, it is a continuing act until it reaches the person to whom it is communicated and may thus be taken to be made also at the place where it is received. This was the view taken in (1875) 32 L T (N S) 778[6] which arose out of a motion for a writ of prohibition to the Mayor's Court on the ground that it had no jurisdiction to entertain an action for money due on an account stated as the whole cause of action did not arise within the city of London. The defendant in that case received out of the city some goods which he had ordered from the plaintiff and in answer to a letter requesting payment of the price wrote that he would remit the amount as requested as soon as possible. This letter was posted at the defendant's place of residence out of the city and was received by the plaintiff at his place of business in the city. It was argued on the analogy of cases relating to acceptance of an offer that the account must be deemed to have been stated out of the city where the defendant's letter was posted but the Court held that although a statement of an account was analogous to the acceptance of a contract and it was settled law that a contract was concluded as soon as the acceptance was posted, the statement, like the acceptance, was a continuous act until it reached the person to whom it was communicated and that, therefore, the defendant's letter was an account stated to the plaintiff at the place where the letter received it, i.e., the city of London. Lord Coleridge C. J., observed at p. 780 :

> It has been pointed out, indeed, and with perfect truth that the cases referred to have stopped at this point with laying down as law that a contract is complete when its terms are accepted, and that the acceptor need not wait till the other party receives his letter notifying his acceptance. But then that was all that it was necessary to decide in all those cases, (1818) 1 B & Ald 681;[7] (1849) 8 C B 225[8] and (1872) 7 Ch A 587,[9] and the Courts there needed not to go on and say whether the acceptance was a continuous act; still, all the reasoning in the cases upon which the judgments are founded, though the judgments themselves are confined to the points necessary to be decided, is applicable to the further proposition which we are now considering, viz., that the acceptance continues to be an act done by the person accepting in a uniform and unbroken course of dealing until it reaches the other person to whom it is notified. And, in my opinion, although when he sends it off by post it is made then as against him, it is nonetheless made also when it reaches the mind of the offerer by reason of its having also been made before. This leads me to be unable to distinguish an acceptance so explained from a statement of an account; and so, to apply the proposition to the facts in this case, I should say that, although an account was undoubtedly stated at Copthorne, wherever that may be, it was nonetheless stated again when the letter containing the admission was received in the city.

Lindley and Archibald JJ. expressed a similar opinion. Denman J. while agreeing that an account must be deemed to be stated where the person to whom it was addressed received the statement, doubted the applicability of the analogy of the posting of the letter of acceptance concluding a contract, to the case of an account stated. He added however :

But, I do agree, that, if the letter speaks at the moment it is posted, it is in the nature of a continuous statement, and speaks also at the moment when it is received.

It will thus be seen that though the point actually decided related to an account stated, the decision was based on general principles applicable to all contracts and this has been recognized in Hals. Vol. 8 p. 191 where this decision among others is cited as an authority for the proposition that where an offer is made and accepted through post, a part of the cause of action arises where the letter accepting the offer is posted and a part where it is delivered. In this view, a part of the cause of action in the present case must be taken to have arisen at Bezwada where the defendants' telegram accepting the plaintiff's order was received by the plaintiff. Mr. Rajagopala Ayyangar cited two English cases, viz., (1888) 20 Q B D 640[10] and (1902) 1 K B 867[11] as being in conflict with (1875) 32 L T (N S) 778[6] referred to above. In the former an order to make certain bets was transmitted by postal telegraph by the plaintiff residing outside the City of London to the defendant within the city, who telegraphed that the order had been carried out, and it was held that the contract of agency was made in the city and that the action was properly laid in the Lord Mayor's Court as the whole cause of action arose within the jurisdiction of the city. This, however, does not conflict with the view adumbrated in (1875) 32 L T (N S) 778[6] for, as already observed, all that was held in the latter case was that an acceptance must also be deemed to have been made where the offerer has received it. The fact, therefore, that the contract of agency could also be deemed to have been made at the plaintiff's place of residence without the City of London did not militate against the exercise of jurisdiction by the Lord Mayor's Court within whose jurisdiction the contract was concluded by the despatch of the defendant's telegram notifying the carrying out of the plaintiff's order.

The case in (1902) 1 K B 867[11] related to an alleged wrongful dismissal of the plaintiff who was employed in England by a letter posted by his employer, the defendant, who was residing abroad. It was held that there was a complete breach of the contract when the letter giving notice of dismissal was posted abroad and that the English Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the action under O. 11, R. 1 (e) of the Rules of the Supreme Court which authorized service out of the jurisdiction of a writ of summons in cases, inter alia, where the action was "in respect of a breach committed within the jurisdiction of a contract wherever made." The facts were entirely different and the provision under which the case was decided did not make the exercise of jurisdiction by the Court depend upon the arising of the cause of action wholly or in part within the jurisdiction. I cannot therefore regard the case as being in conflict with (1875) 32 L T (N S) 778.[6] For the reasons indicated, I hold that the Court below is competent to try the suit and accordingly I dismiss the civil revision petition with costs.

Application No. 1563 of 1941 (in Appln. No. 865 of 1941), Decided on 22nd August 1941.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 33, R. 5 — Application in High Court to sue in forma pauperis —Cause of action arising outside jurisdiction — Defendant not having address nor residing within jurisdiction — Leave to sue not obtained—Application must be dismissed.

b In the absence of leave to sue an application to the High Court to sue in forma pauperis must be rejected when the cause of action has arisen outside the jurisdiction of the High Court and the defendant neither has address nor resides within its jurisdiction. [P 16*g*, h]

(b) Tort—Slander — Damages are at large— Until whole evidence is examined damages cannot be said to exceed particular sum so as to entitle Court to refer plaintiff to Court of lower pecuniary jurisdiction.

In a claim for damages for slander, the damages are at large and until there has been an examination of all the evidence, the amount of the damages cannot be ascertained nor can it be said that they cannot in any event exceed any particular sum. Consequently the Court cannot refer the plaintiff to c a Court of lower pecuniary jurisdiction on the ground that the amount of damages claimed could not exceed a particular sum. [P 16*h*]

Plaintiff in person.

Order. — The appellant before me applied to sue in forma pauperis. His application was summarily dismissed by the learned Master against whose decision this appeal has been preferred. The plaint is drafted by the appellant himself and although it does not set out as concisely and succinctly the matters of the claim which he desires to prefer as would have been the case had a qualified and experienced lawyer been the draftsman, the substance of the d claim which he makes against the two defendants is as follows: Defendant 1 is a doctor living in Secunderabad in the dominion of Nizam and is employed by the State Railways. Defendant 2 is an advocate of this Court living in Vizagapatam. The appellant appears to allege that defendant 1 in Secunderabad wrote a medical certificate in respect of the plaintiff which contained defamatory matter concerning his mental condition. There is no allegation that the letter was published in Madras and the appellant before me has stated that this was not the case. Defendant 2 is alleged to have made oral statements containing matters to the same effect as were written in the medical certificate of defendant 1. These oral statements, it is alleged, were made in Madras within the jurisdiction of this Court. It is alleged that the statements both in the medical certificate and orally made by defendand 2 are defamatory of the plaintiff. The plaint does not use the language which would have been employed by a professional gentleman and it is not alleged in the form which is adopted in England that in consequence of the defamatory statements, the plaintiff has suffered in his character, credit and reputation and has been brought into public odium, hatred and contempt. But the substance is that by reason of the f written and oral statements, he has been defamed and has suffered damage. The claims preferred are for a declaration that the medical certificate is invalid and for Rs. 12500 damages in respect of the defamatory statements.

The learned master dismissed the application on the following grounds. In so far as defendant 1 is concerned, leave to sue had not been obtained. On the face of the plaint, defendant 1 lives in Secunderabad and the cause of action of which complaint is made against him arose in Secunderabad also. Consequently, the learned Master held that g the plaintiff would have failed in the suit. In regard to defendant 2, the learned Master held that the damages claimed could not in any event exceed Rs. 5000 and consequently the plaintiff should be referred to a Court of lower jurisdiction to agitate his claim. In regard to defendant 1, I agree with the finding of the learned Master and there is no need for me to elaborate the reasons which he expresses. Leave to sue not having been obtained, the cause of action arising outside the jurisdiction of this Court and the defendant not having an address or residing within its jurisdiction, the learned Master's conclusion is correct and in regard to defen- h dant 1, this appeal fails.

In regard to defendant 2, I am satisfied that the appeal should be allowed. Although the claim is not neatly or clearly expressed it is one for damages for slander, a claim in which the damages are at large and until there has been an examination of all the evidence, the amount of the damages cannot be ascertained nor can it be said that they cannot in any event exceed any particular sum. The learned Master examined in some detail whether there would be any damage flowing from some allegations which the plaintiff made in his plaint, such as, he was caused mental suffering and had lost the benefit of the hospitality of his friends. Those matters, as I see them, were included as grounds to increase the damage in addition to what ordinarily would flow from the establishment of a slanderous statement made by the defendant in regard to the plaintiff. It is not necessary to consider those matters in detail now. This is not an action for wrongful dismissal although the plaintiff says in consequence of the statements of which complaint is made, he was dismissed from his employment by the railway company in Hyderabad. The claim so far as defendant 2 is concerned is one for damages for slander. The grounds upon which the learned Master summarily dismissed the application for leave to sue are wrong. The appeal is allowed and the learned Master is directed to enquire into the application for leave to sue defendant 2 in forma pauperis in the usual way. The appellant appears in person and there will be no order as to costs.

GENTLE J.

Madhava Rao alias Chinnakannan, minor by his mother and next friend Sironmoni Ammal — Plaintiff

v.

Administrator-General of Madras and others — Defendants.

C. S. No. 72 of 1940, Decided on 23rd August 1940.

Will—Construction — Demonstrative or specific gift—Intention of testator must be gathered from will as a whole—First gift and subsequent direction of fund out of which it should be paid —Absence of existence of such fund at death of testator — It is payable out of general estate.

In considering the provision of a will one must refer to it as a whole in order to ascertain the intention of the testator. [P 18c]

If there is first a gift and then a subsequent direction of the fund out of which it should be paid, it would be demonstrative and would be payable out of the general estate, in the absence of the existence of the fund at the date of the death of the testator. [P 18c]

A testator who had three sons made provisions for two sons of gift of a large and a small house to each and to the third a small house and a large house to be purchased out of the fixed deposit in a certain bank when it matured. The deposit matured before the death of the testator. The testator had also provided that the balance out of the money collected from bank, mortgages and promissory notes after purchasing a house for the third son should be divided equally among his three sons :

Held that the testator wished to make equal provision for all his sons and that the testator intended to make a gift of a sum of money in favour of the third son which sum was to be spent on the purchase of a house and that this gift was not a specific but a demonstrative gift and the direction that it was to be paid out of a specified fund did not make the gift a specific one. Therefore it was to be provided out of the general estate. [P 18f, g]

V. Sundararajan — for Plaintiff.

S. Rangaswami Iyengar, Administrator-General in person.

S. S. Rajagopalan, T. K. Rajagopalan and M. A. Rajagopalan — for Defendants.

Order. — This originating summons is taken out for the purpose of construing the will of the late C. Manicka Mudaliar who died on 19th January 1936 having made his last will and testament, on 22nd January 1935. He left two widows, by the senior widow one son who is defendant 2, and by the junior widow two sons, defendant 3 and the plaintiff. The Administrator-General of Madras is now administering the estate and is defendant 1. The matter for decision is whether a gift in favour of the plaintiff of a sum of Rs. 12,000 was specific or demonstrative, and if specific, whether it has been adeemed. To help to answer the problems to be considered, one must ascertain as far as one can, what the intention of the testator was, as expressed in his will. In regard to defendants 2 and 3, he gave to each of them a large and a small house in Madras and lands in the mofussil. To the plaintiff he gave specifically a small house in Madras and lands in the mofussil. The will then provides as follows :

> Further there is a sum of Rs. 14,000 in fixed deposit in my name in the Indian Bank, Madras, out of that amount, I have given Rs. 12,000 to this son. With that sum of Rs. 12,000 my executors shall as early as possible purchase a house of the value of about Rs. 12,000 in Madras.

The fixed deposit matured between the date of the will and the death of the testator and it is common ground that after the date of its maturity the testator purchased a house in Madras for the sum of Rs. 10,000. On behalf of defendants 2 and 3, it is contended that the gift of Rs. 12,000 in favour of the plaintiff was specific and that it was to be paid out of the fixed deposit with the Indian Bank; as there was no such fund at the date of the deceased's death, the legacy has been adeemed and must fail. On the other hand, on behalf of the plaintiff it is contended the legacy was demonstrative and whilst the legacy was primarily to be paid out of the fund with the Indian Bank, as that did not exist at the death of the testator, his other estate is responsible for the payment of the legacy.

Later in the will, the testator provides that moneys advanced by him on promissory notes and on mortgages as well as the money in the bank should be collected, and the amount spent for the purchase of a house for the plaintiff being deducted, the balance should be divided into three shares, each of his sons, the plaintiff and defendants 2 and 3, being entitled to a share. Later still, in this will, the testator says that he had appointed his three sons as residuary legatees of all his moveable and immovable properties. It is clear that the testator intended that the money which he had directed should be spent upon the purchase of a house should not be divisible amongst the three sons as he expressly excludes this from the moneys to be divided between the plaintiff and defendants 2 and 3. When considering the general residuary clause in the will, one must give a meaning to the earlier provision. There can be no doubt that the testator wished to make equal provision for all his sons. Having given to defendants 2 and 3 a large and a small house in Madras, he gave only a small house to the plaintiff, and expressly provided for the purchase of a large house.

Emphasis has been placed by learned counsel on behalf of the other two sons that the gift of Rs. 12,000 to the plaintiff was expressed to be out of a sum of Rs. 14,000 in fixed deposit and thus, there has not been a general gift of a legacy. It is conceded that if there had been first a gift and then a subsequent direction of the fund out of which it should be paid, it would have been demonstrative and would be payable out of the general estate, in the absence of the existence of the fixed deposit account in the bank at the date of the death. I think it is laying too much emphasis on the position of words or sentences to make the wish of a testator to be dependent upon such position.

Section 142, Succession Act, provides that where a testator bequeaths to any person a specified part of his property which is distinguished from all other parts of his property, the legacy is specific. Section 150 provides that where a testator bequeaths a certain sum of money and refers to a particular fund or stock so as to constitute the same, the primary fund or stock out of which payment is to be made, the legacy is to be deemed to be demonstrative. The latter part of the explanation provides that where the legacy is directed to be paid out of specified property, it is demonstrative. To these two sections, there are a large number of illustrations. I can find but little, if any help in some of these illustrations, the wording of some of them in both sections being substantially identical. For instance, one of the illustrations to section 142 provides that an annuity of Rs. 500 out of the rents of the zamindari of W is a specific legacy, whereas an illustration under S. 150 provides that Rs. 1000 out of the sum of Rs. 2000 due to the testator is demonstrative legacy. I merely refer to these to show the conflicting nature of the illustrations which are given.

In considering its provision, one must refer to the will as a whole in order to ascertain the intention of the testator. Seeing the provision made for two sons of gifts of a large and a small house to each, the gift of one small house to the plaintiff, and provision for the purchase of a larger house indicates that the testator wished to provide for his three sons in the same way and to the same extent. The direction that out of the moneys at the time of the date of the will which were deposited with the Indian Bank, a sufficient sum was to be paid to purchase the other house together with the later provision in the will that the balance of the bank deposit was to be divided equally between the three sons after they had been deducted from the deposit the moneys to be spent upon the purchase of a house, to my mind, shows that the testator intended to make a gift of a sum of money in favour of the plaintiff, which sum was to be spent on the purchase of a house and that this gift is not a specific but a demonstrative gift and the direction that it was to be paid out of a specified fund does not make the gift a specific one.

There will, therefore, be a direction that defendant 1 will provide out of the assets of the testator in his hands a sum of Rs. 12,000. Learned counsel on behalf of the plaintiff, who is a minor, states that the house which was purchased for Rs. 10,000 can be given to the plaintiff, subject to the approval of the Court, in respect of the legacy of Rs. 12,000. The learned Administrator-General for defendant 1 tells me, and I accept it, that this house, although Rs. 10,000 was paid for it, in fact it is worth Rs. 12,000 and indeed even more than that. Defendant 1 will therefore take the necessary steps to place this house in the name of the plaintiff and the income thereof will be paid to him or to his guardian as the case may be. No other order is necessary save that the costs of all parties will be paid out of the assets. I fix the plaintiff's costs at Rs. 350 including all out fees and a expenses, defendant 2's at Rs. 175 and for defendant 3 I fix the guardian's fee at Rs. 125 and Rs. 75 to the Administrator-General. Prayer 4 of the originating summons seeks for a direction from the Court regarding the disposal of some jewellery. This jewellery is now the subject-matter of a suit in the City Civil Court, and it is unnecessary to dispose of this matter now. The abandonment by the plaintiff of the relief in respect of this jewellery is in no way to prejudice his rights, if any, in regard to it.

C.R.K./K.S. Order accordingly.

G. Gopalaswamy — for Petitioner.

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

Leach C. J. — The petitioner was convicted by the Joint Magistrate of Karur under S. 500, Penal Code, for the defamation of his wife. He was ordered to pay a fine of Rs. 100 and in default of payment to undergo simple imprisonment for three months. The defamatory words had been uttered by the petitioner when giving evidence in support of a complaint filed by him to the effect that his wife had been guilty of theft. In the course of his evidence in support of the complaint he accused his wife of unchastity. They had quarrelled and she was living separately but in the same building. The e conviction of the petitioner was confirmed by the Sessions Judge of Trichinopoly on appeal. The petitioner now asks this Court to set aside the conviction on the ground that a complaint of defamation which is based on a statement in Court can only be filed by the Court in which the statement was made. There are conflicting decisions of this Court on the question. In three cases Lakshmana Rao J. has expressed the opinion that the complaint must be filed by the Court, while Burn J. has expressed an opinion to the contrary.

The first of the decisions by Lakshmana f Rao J. was given in 1939 M W N 192.[1] In that case the petitioner charged the son-in-law of the respondent with theft of certain documents and records and in an affidavit filed in support of an application for a search warrant stated that some of the articles had been secreted in the house of the respondent. A search warrant was issued and in accordance with this authority the respondent's house was searched. Nothing was however found there and the son-in-law was ultimately discharged. The learned Judge considered that as the complaint of defamation was founded on false evidence the offence g would fall within S. 193, Penal Code, and was only cognizable on a complaint by the Court. In support of his order Lakshmana Rao J. relied on the decision of this Court in 59 Mad 165[2] to which reference will be made presently. The learned Judge expressed a similar opinion in 1939 M W N 320[3] and in 1940 M W N 867.[4] The opinion of Burn J. was stated in 1933 M W N 1263[5] and is to be gathered from the following excerpt from his judgment:

> The mere fact that the defamation is committed in, or in relation to, criminal proceedings in a Court is not a reason for requiring the sanction of that Court or for requiring that Court to prefer a com- h plaint . . . . . The petitioner in this case has complained of the acts which have, according to him, caused harm to his reputation ; he has no concern with the same acts in so far as they may have constituted an offence against public justice.

The provisions of S. 195, Criminal P. C., do not apply to defamation. This Court has held in 49 Mad 728[6] that a person who is defamed by a witness when in the witness-box is at liberty to file a complaint against his defamer under the provisions of the Penal Code. When such a right exists it can only be taken away by an express statutory provision to that effect. There is nothing in S. 195, Criminal P. C., or in any other part of that Code, or in any other enactment which takes away this right.

We consider that an examination of the judgment in 59 Mad 165[2] does not render real support for the opinion that when a person is defamed in evidence given in support of an offence which falls within the purview of S. 195, Criminal P. C., the Court in which the defamation takes place must lay the complaint charging the witness with defamation. In 59 Mad 165[2] the facts were these: A civil Court had held that a promissory note had been fabricated and had dismissed the suit. Thereupon the defendant, without asking the aid of the civil Court, filed a complaint charging the maker, the writer and the attestors of the instrument with forgery, an offence falling in the circumstances within the mischief of S. 195, Criminal P. C. On a preliminary objection being taken to the effect that the maker of the instrument could not, in view of the provisions of S. 195 (1) (c), Criminal P. C., be charged, except on the complaint of the Court, the complaint so far as the maker was concerned was dismissed, but the Magistrate proceeded with the charge against the attesting witnesses. Madhavan Nair and Burn JJ. held this to be wrong, and stated that parties should not be allowed to evade the provisions of S. 195 (1) (b), Criminal P. C., by filing a complaint under another provision of the Penal Code if an offence under S. 193 of that Code or of any other of its sections mentioned in S. 195 (1) (b), Criminal P. C., had been committed. In that case the complaint was based on a forged instrument which had been given in evidence, and we do not read the judgment as placing in the same category a charge of defamation which is an entirely personal matter. That question was not under consideration.

We consider that the opinion expressed by Burn J. in 1933 M W N 1263[5] is preferable and it is to be remembered that Burn J. was a member of the Bench which decided 59 Mad 165.[2] It is also in point to mention that the opinion of Burn J., in 1933 M W N 1263[5] accords with a much earlier decision of this Court and one given by a Bench: see 1 Weir 585.[7] There a Magistrate had held that the sanction of the Court was required to a proceeding for defamation in respect of a statement made in Court and as sanction had not been accorded dismissed the complaint filed by the person alleged to have been defamed. The complainant applied to this Court to correct the order in revision and this was done. In fact no attempt was made to support the Magistrate's order which was described by this Court as being untenable. It may be mentioned that opinions which have been expressed by other High Courts support the opinion of Burn J.: see 48 Cal 388,[8] I L R (1940) ALL 314,[9] I L R (1937) Nag 338[10] and I L R (1937) Nag 425.[11] The petition will be dismissed.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 503 and Petn. No. 474 of 1941, Decided on 13th August 1941, to revise order of Sub-divisional First Class Magistrate, Namakkal, D/- 13th May 1941.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 144—Sub-Magistrate refusing to pass order under S. 144 for want of sufficient grounds — Sub-divisional Magistrate in appeal can pass order under S. 144 if he considers it necessary on material before him.

The Sub-divisional Magistrate in an appeal against the order of the Sub-Magistrate refusing to pass order under S. 144 on the ground that there were no sufficient grounds, has ample power by reason of S. 144 (1) to pass the order under S. 144. If on the material available to him he considers an order under S. 144 to be necessary, it is his duty to pass such order whether the material is gathered by him or by the Sub-Magistrate is immaterial. [P 21 b, c]

N. Somasundaram — for Petitioners.

K. E. Rajagopalachari — for Respondent.

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

FACTS — There was a petition for an order under S. 144, Criminal P. C., before the Stationary Sub-Magistrate who after enquiry as he did not find sufficient grounds refused to pass an order. The matter was taken up to the Sub-divisional Magistrate. Before the Sub-divisional Magistrate it was contended by the respondents there and the petitioners here in the revision petition that after the matter had been enquired into and disposed off by a competent Court the Sub-divisional Magistrate had no jurisdiction to enquire into and pass an order in the same matter. The Sub-divisional Magistrate overruled the objection and proceeded with the enquiry. Against this order the present revision petition is filed.

Order. — The Sub-divisional Magistrate had ample power under cl. (1) of S. 144, Criminal P. C., to pass the order he did. The Sub-divisional Magistrate is responsible for preserving law and order within his jurisdiction, and if on the material available to him he thinks that an order under S. 144, Criminal P. C., is necessary, it is his duty to pass such an order. Whether the material is gathered by himself or by the Sub-Magistrate is irrelevant. The petition is dismissed.

M. Ranganatha Sastri — for Appellant.

K. Krishnaswami Ayyangar and K. S. Jayaram — for Respondents.

King J. — Respondent 1 in this appeal was the plaintiff in two suits which came finally to be numbered as O. S. No. 15 and O. S. No. 24 of 1938 on the file of the Subordinate Judge of Kurnool. These were suits mainly, and in O. S. No. 15 wholly, for the recovery of money due on promissory notes. The claim in O. S. No. 15 was for Rs. 21,788 ; that in O. S. No. 24 for Rs. 4698. While these suits were pending, respondent 1 on 1st November 1937 executed a deed of transfer in favour of the present appellant. By this deed he assigned to the appellant 'the entire amounts due in respect of the two suits' for a consideration of Rs. 8000. The consideration was to be paid within 15 days of the passing of the decrees in the two suits, but in no case before a date in February 1938. It was also provided that if a decree were not granted in the more important suit (O. S. No. 15) payment of the Rs. 8000 would not be due, and any payment which might actually have been made should be refunded. On the same day (1st November 1937) appellant executed in favour of respondent 1 a promissory note for Rs. 8000 which was expressed as payable on demand. Decrees in the two suits were in due course passed, that in O. S. No. 15 on 22nd September and that in O. S. 24 on 25th November 1938. The sum of Rs. 8000 was not paid by the appellant within the 15 days stipulated, and has not yet been paid. On 9th March 1939 respondent 1 sent a lawyer's notice to the appellant repudiating the transfer on the ground of the nonpayment of the consideration within the stipulated time. In April 1939 appellant applied under O. 21, R. 16 and S. 146, Civil P. C., to execute the decree in O. S. No. 15. The judgment-debtor (respondent 2) remained ex parte but respondent 1 opposed his application. The learned District Judge of Kurnool held that appellant could not execute the decree both because respondent 1 did not in fact transfer the decree to him, and also because O. 21, R. 16 and S. 146 gave him no right to do so. Against this order the present appeal has been filed.

That the decree was in fact transferred by respondent 1 to appellant seems to us beyond all dispute. In the deed respondent 1 says : " I have this day transferred to you the entire amounts due in respect of the two suits." This language is appropriate only to a completed transaction, and the expression "sums due in respect of the suits" can mean only "sums decreed in the suits." That this is so is made clear by a later passage in the deed where respondent 1 says : "The amounts due under the decrees in the said two suits are due to you only." It is difficult to understand what exactly the learned Judge's findings are in this matter but he appears in some way to have convinced himself both that the deed does not mean what it says and that it was not meant to be acted upon. On the former point he refers to discrepancies between the deed and the promissory note, but it is obvious from the references to the promissory note in the deed that it is the deed which embodies the agreement between the parties as to how the promissory note is to be treated so that any discrepancies are of no importance. On the latter point the District Judge emphasizes the fact that after the decrees were passed appellant did not pay and respondent 1 did not demand payment of the Rs. 8000 which was due ; but this proves nothing whatever as to the intentions of the parties in November 1937. This case is merely another example of the all too common practice of the purchaser of property refusing to pay for it even though he enjoys or claims to enjoy it.

The learned Judge has also introduced into his judgment various irrelevant comparisons with the transactions of the betting-ring, and has stigmatized the bargain between respondent 1 and appellant as undesirable speculation in the result of litigation. We can see no justification for this criticism. The situation as disclosed by the documents is a simple one in which when the agreement was made no blame appears to us to attach to anyone. Respondent 1 was prepared to prosecute his suits, and obtain decrees but in view of the trouble and uncertainty involved in realizing his money after the decrees, he sold the right to execute them to the appellant for a sum which both men must have thought to be reasonable and it is also reasonable that payment should be postponed until after the decrees were in fact granted. The case for respondent 1 at the arguments before us was that the deed of 1st November 1937 embodied not a completed transaction but only an agreement to transfer. As we have already pointed out such a case is directly contrary to the plain terms of the document. That such a transaction as is embodied in the transfer deed is perfectly valid is clear on the authority in (1912) 3 K B 474[1] and this position has not been challenged by the learned advocate for respondent 1.

The question then arises whether appellant as transferee of the decree, has a right to execute it. It is contended first on his behalf that he can do so under O. 21, R. 16. Much might perhaps be said for this contention were the matter res integra, but it was decided as long ago as 1906 in 17 M L J 391[2] that the language of S. 232 (the equivalent in the old Code of our present R. 16) cannot be construed so as to apply to a case where there was no decree in existence at the time of the assignment. Appellant's learned advocate has not been able to show us that this interpretation has been overruled or dissented from in the 35 years which have elapsed since it was given, or convince us that the slight modifications in the present R. 16 have any bearing upon it. We are not in these circumstances prepared to hold that the present appellant can execute this decree under R. 16.

We think, however, the appellant can undoubtedly execute the decree under the provisions of S. 146. That section so far as it applies here, provides that "save as otherwise provided by this Code" where an application may be made by any person; that application may be made by a person claiming under him. What then is the meaning of "save as otherwise provided by this Code." According to the learned advocate for respondent 1 where the transferee of a decree desires to execute it definite provisions are laid down by R. 16; and therefore he can do so only if his case conforms to those provisions. The learned advocate for the appellant interprets the phrase more liberally as permitting applications under S. 146 which do not conflict with the provisions of the Code. On these two diverse views we prefer to choose the latter, and indeed are bound to do so by virtue of the decision of a Full Bench of this Court reported in 44 Mad 919.[3] That was a case no doubt where a decree was already in existence at the date of the transfer, but what was transferred was not in the words of R. 16, "the interest" of the decree-holder but a fraction only of that interest. The learned Judges in 44 Mad 919[3] were inclined to hold that R. 16 might apply to the case before them, but they went further and held that even if it did not, the transferee must be permitted to execute it under S. 146 or perhaps even under S. 151 (vide the headnote and passages in particular on pp. 923, 924 and 932). It is true that the learned Judges recognise that if R. 16 prohibits a particular application it cannot be made under S. 146 or S. 151. The question then is "does R. 16 prohibit the present application?" We are unable to hold that merely because R. 16 has been interpreted as applying only to decrees in existence at the time of the transfer, it prohibits an application by a transferee who obtained the transfer of a decree, a transfer which is legally valid and is embodied in a written deed (as R. 16 requires) before the decree was actually passed. To permit execution by such a transferee, in our opinion, in no way violates the principles which are embodied in R. 16 or in O. 21 generally. The appellant here is the true owner of the decree, and he has his written title deed, and that is all that the law requires.

The learned District Judge has not, in our opinion, correctly understood the ruling in 44 Mad 919[3] and has relied upon the rulings of other High Courts. Though these were again cited before us, it is unnecessary to examine them in detail, though we may point out that they all deal with the assignment of something more than a future decree. It cannot, therefore, be argued against the present appellant that the terms of his assignment deed would compel him to make an application under O. 22, R. 10. There is no case which lays down the proposition that a transferee to whom a future decree (and nothing else) has been expressly assigned cannot execute it. But whatever the views of other High Courts may be, our own High Court has negatived the proposition that O. 21, R. 16 is all inclusive in this matter and following the principles laid down in 44 Mad 919,[3] we hold that the appellant is entitled to execute the present decree. The appeal is accordingly allowed and E. P. No. 28 of 1939 will be restored to file and disposed of according to law. Respondent 1 must pay the appellant's costs here and in the Court below.

Practice—Review—Appeal heard by Bench—One of Judges absent at time of review application — Review should be disposed of by other Judge alone and not by another Bench.

According to the invariable practice of the Madras High Court, even in first appeals, the application for review is heard and decided only by the Judges who heard the appeal or where one of them is absent by the other Judge sitting alone. It cannot be heard by another Bench : 16 Cal 788 ; 9 I C 532 (Cal) and C. M. P. No. 516 of 1934, Rel. on. [P 23*h* ; P 24*a*]

Order. — It is argued that this application for review can be heard only by a Bench as it relates to a decree in a first appeal. The point is directly covered by the decisions of the Calcutta High Court in 16 Cal 788[1] and 9 I C 532.[2] Both cases related to second appeals which were heard by two Judges as they used to be even in this Court till a few years ago. In the former case the Judges say this at pp. 792 and 793 :

> As I said just now, at the time this rule was returned Wilson J. had gone away on furlough and another gentleman had been appointed to perform his duties, and consequently, he had ceased to have any jurisdiction as a Judge of this Court for the time. He was not at the time attached to the Court, and consequently, Beverley J. was the only one of the Judges who heard the appeal who remained attached to the Court, and was, in my opinion, the only Judge who could be appointed to hear this application. So that, in our opinion, Beverley J. was quite right in deciding that he had jurisdiction to hear the matter, and was in fact the only person who could hear it. That ground therefore fails.

This is in accordance with the invariable practice of this Court. Even, in first appeals the application for review is heard and decided only by the Judges who heard the appeal or where one of them is absent by the other Judge sitting alone. Appeal No. 196 of 1928 was decided by Reilly and Burn JJ. C. M. P. No. 516 of 1934 was filed for review of that decree. Burn J. ordered notice and directed that the review application should be posted before a Bench. It was accordingly posted before Burn and Mockett JJ. Apparently, it was then discovered that even after notice, the review petition should be disposed of by Burn J. alone. Then this order was passed on 7th December 1939 :

. . . . . Adjourn this to some day next year when I have time to deal with it myself. This is not yet a matter for a Bench.

Thereafter it was heard by Burn J. alone and disposed of finally on 30th January 1940. The application was dismissed on the merits. I hold that this application can be heard by me. On the merits, I hold that there are no grounds for granting the review asked for. The petition is accordingly dismissed.

Second Appeal No. 1156 of 1938, Decided on 14th August 1941, against decree of District Court, Cuddapah, in A. S. No. 55 of 1937.

 Madras Co-operative Societies Act (6 of 1932), S. 51 (1) (b) — Registrar or Arbitrator appointed by him is "Court" within S. 52, T. P. Act—Registrar's or arbitrator's decision is "order" within S. 52, T. P. Act—Reference to Registrar in respect of immovable property under S. 51 (1) (b) — Mortgage pending reference — S. 52, T. P. Act, applies.

The word "Court" in S. 52, T. P. Act, is comprehensive enough to include the Registrar or the arbitrator appointed by him under the Madras Act, 6 of 1932 : ('34) 21 A I R 1934 Mad 40 and ('40) 27 A I R 1940 Mad 932, Rel. on ; ('30) 17 A I R 1930 Mad 869, Approved. [P 25a]

The decision of the Registrar or the arbitrator is an "order" within the meaning of S. 52, T. P. Act. Consequently a mortgage of immovable property subsequent to the reference in respect of the same to the Registrar under S. 51 (1) (b) is affected by the doctrine of lis pendens. [P 24f; P 25c,d]

Judgment. — The plaintiff who is the appellant in this second appeal brought a suit for recovery of a sum of money due on a mortgage deed executed by Venkatayya defendant 1, in his favour on 14th November 1932. Defendant 1 had executed a mortgage of the items covered by the plaintiff's mortgage and of some other items in favour of defendant 2, the Co-operative Society, on 7th September 1927. There being some amount due on the mortgage in favour of defendant 2, proceedings were taken under the Madras Co-operative Societies Act of 1932. In terms of S. 51, cl. 1 (b) there being a dispute between the society and a member, the dispute was referred to the Registrar for decision. The Registrar referred the dispute for disposal to an arbitrator under S. 51, cl. (2) (c). The arbitrator gave his decision, which under S. 51, cl. (6) (b) is final and is not liable to be called in question in any civil or revenue Court. Thereafter the society itself purchased the property in execution and subsequently transferred it to defendant 3. The plaintiff's mortgage was executed after the dispute between defendants 1 and 2 was referred to the Registrar under S. 51, cl. (1) (b). The mortgage in favour of the plaintiff being subsequent to the reference to the Registrar under S. 51 (1) (b), the question is whether such a transfer is affected by the doctrine of lis pendens. Section 52, T. P. Act, provides that :

During the pendency in any Court having authority in British India, or established beyond the limits of British India by the Governor-General in Council, of any suit or proceeding which is not collusive and in which any right to immovable property is directly and specifically in question, the property cannot be transferred or otherwise dealt with by any party to the suit or proceeding so as to affect the rights of any other party thereto under any decree or order which may be made therein, except under the authority of the Court, and on such terms as it may impose.

It has been held in a number of decisions of this Court that the Registrar is a Court. This position is not seriously challenged. In A I R 1930 Mad 869[1] it was held that the Registrar was a Court for the purposes of S. 195, Criminal P. C. In A I R 1934 Mad 40[2] it was held that for the purpose of S. 52, T. P. Act, he is a Court. So likewise in (1940) 2 M L J 388.[3] It is argued by Mr. Sampath Iyengar, learned advocate for the appellant, that the word "Court" in S. 52, T. P. Act, does not include a Registrar or an arbitrator appointed by the Registrar under the provisions of the Madras Co-operative Societies Act, 1932. The word "Court" as mentioned in S. 52 appears to me to be comprehensive enough to include the Registrar or the arbitrator appointed by him under the Act. Reference was made to S. 57B of the Act (6 of 1932), but that section has no application because it enacts that for certain purposes the Registrar or any person empowered by him in that behalf shall be a civil Court for the purpose of Art. 182 of Sch. 1, Limitation Act, 1908, which provides for execution of decrees of civil Courts. The amendment itself was rendered necessary by a decision of Cornish J. in 70 M L J 31,[1] which held that the Registrar was not a civil Court for the purposes of Art. 182, Limitation Act. We are not now concerned with the question whether the Registrar is a civil Court, but whether he is a Court under S. 52, T. P. Act. The decision of Walsh J. in A I R 1934 Mad 40[2] is a decision directly in point. That was a decision that the Registrar or the authority appointed by him was a Court for the purpose of S. 52, T. P. Act. I entirely agree with that decision.

Then it is said that S. 52 refers to a decree or order and that the decision of the Registrar or the arbitrator is not a decree or order. Here the word "order" is used in general terms. In this case we have an order passed in a proceeding in a Court and, therefore, this argument has no force. A reference to the Registrar under S. 51, cl. (1) (b), Madras Act, 6 of 1932, and the proceedings taken thereafter are all substitutes for a suit in a civil Court. A more speedy and effective remedy is given by S. 51, cl. (1) and the sections following. But for S. 51 of the Act (6 of 1932) a suit would have been filed in the civil Court and clearly the doctrine of lis pendens would have applied. Any person who takes a mortgage or other alienation subsequent to the institution of a suit or other proceeding cannot say that he is not bound by the decree or order passed in it. In this case, the proceedings under S. 51, Madras Act, 6 of 1932, being a substitute for a suit in the civil Court, it is obvious that reason requires that the same result would follow. Otherwise, there will be no finality to a decision of the arbitrator or the Registrar even though such decision was in a proceeding in which a right to immovable property was specifically raised and decided. A right to immovable property being directly in question, the alienation made in favour of the plaintiff cannot prevail over the rights obtained under the decision of the Registrar. The property was subsequently sold as the plaintiff did not care to redeem or to pay up the amount adjudged by the Registrar or by the arbitrator appointed by him and the same was purchased by defendant 2 and sold later on to defendant 3. These proceedings are binding on the plaintiff and his suit was, therefore, rightly dismissed. The second appeal is dismissed with costs. Leave to appeal is refused.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 416 and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 402 of 1940, Decided on 4th October 1940, to revise order of Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Narasaraopet, in C. A. No. 22 of 1940.

Madras Forest Act (5 of 1882), S. 56 — Presumption under.

The presumption under S. 56 is expressly restricted to proceedings taken under the Act or in consequence of anything done under the Act. Consequently, in the absence of evidence that the timber was stolen from any reserve forest no presumption under S. 56 can be drawn. [P 25*h*]

P. Basi Reddi — for Petitioners.

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

FACTS.—The offence the petitioners were charged with is that four Yepi pillars alleged to have been stolen from the reserve forest were found in the cattle shed of accused 1. The defence was that the said pillars were purchased by accused 2's father about ten years back. It was also urged that there was no evidence to prove that the said pillars were stolen property. The lower Court relying on the presumption to be drawn in Sec. 56, Forest Act, held that the burden of proving the contrary rested on the petitioners and finding the defence evidence unreliable confirmed the conviction of the petitioners under S. 411, Penal Code. Against this conviction the present revision is filed.

Order. — The presumption under S. 56, Madras Forest Act, (Act 5 of 1882), is expressly restricted to proceedings taken under that Act or in consequence of anything done under that Act, and there is no evidence in this case that the timber in question was stolen from any reserve forest. The conviction of the petitioners under S. 411, Penal Code, is therefore set aside and the fines if levied will be refunded.

Where a petition has complied with the provisions of Ss. 5 and 6, the Board has no power to reject it under S. 7. It must dismiss the petition under S. 17 if no settlement has been arrived at before the expiration of 12 months contemplated in S. 17. [P 26*h* ; P 27*a*,b]

T. M. Krishnaswami Ayyar and A. Balasubramania Iyer — for Petitioner.

Government Pleader, S. Panchapagesa Sastri and T. E. Ramabhadra Chariar — for Respondents.

Leach C. J. — This is an application for the issue of a writ of certiorari for the purposes of quashing an order of the Debt Conciliation Board, Cuddalore. The record shows that the order complained of has been passed without jurisdiction and the application will be granted. On 18th September 1939 the debtor-respondents filed a petition under S. 4, Madras Debt Conciliation Act, 1936, asking for the settlement of their debts. Section 5 of the Act states that every application shall be in writing and shall be signed and verified in the manner prescribed by the Civil Procedure Code for signing and verifying plaints. Section 6 sets out the particulars which a debtor must give in his application. If the application does not comply with the requirements of S. 5 or S. 6, S. 7 requires the Board to reject it.

When an application has been accepted as complying with the provisions of Ss. 5 and 6 the Board must by reason of S. 8 pass an order fixing a date and place for the hearing of the application, and notice of this order must be sent by registered post to the applicant and his creditors. Section 9 gives the Board power to dismiss an application at any stage of the proceedings if the Board does not consider it desirable or practicable to effect a settlement of debts or if in its opinion the applicant fails to pursue his application with due diligence or if it includes a claim which the Board considers is collusive and intended to defraud a creditor. Section 17 states that if no amicable settlement is arrived at under sub-s. (1) of S. 14 within 12 months from the date of the application under S. 4 the Board shall dismiss the application. There is no power to extend the proceedings beyond 12 months.

In this case the Board dismissed the petition, which the debtor-respondents filed on 18th September 1939 because of non-compliance with the provisions of S. 6. The order dismissing the petition was passed on 11th November 1939. A dismissal under S. 7 does not preclude a debtor from filing a fresh application and this course being open the debtor-respondents adopted it five days later. The new petition was found to be in order and the Board took the steps which it was bound to take in view of the provisions of S. 8. The debtor-respondents obviously did not proceed to serve their creditors or the legal representatives of deceased creditors with due diligence. The creditor who has instituted the present proceedings alleges that the debtor respondents did not do so because they intended to delay the proceedings as far as they possibly could with the object of being allowed to file a fresh petition at the end of the 12 months. The petitioner is a secured creditor and has obtained a mortgage decree against the debtor-respondents. Whether there is some excuse to be found for their failure to serve the creditors or whether they deliberately neglected to do so as the result of a deep laid plot on their part matters not for the purpose of deciding the application now before the Court.

What is important here is that on 12th November 1940 four days before the expiration of the 12 months contemplated by S. 17 the debtor respondents filed an application asking the Board to dismiss their petition by an order purporting to be passed under the provisions of S. 7 of the Act and this the Board did. There is no doubt that in taking this action the Board acted contrary to the spirit and the letter of the Act. The second petition having complied with the provisions of Ss. 5 and 6, the Board had no power to reject it under S. 7 and its action in purporting to do so can only be regarded as an evasion of its statutory duty under S. 17. That section leaves no option to the Board. If before the expiration of the 12 months no settlement has been arrived at the debtor's petition must, as already stated, be dismissed. It is common ground that a dismissal under S. 17 would have prevented another petition being filed. It may be that in some cases, especially where there is a large number of creditors and some of them die after the application has been filed, it is not possible to comply within the 12 months with all the Act contemplates, but that is a defect in the Act which the Court cannot remedy. The remedy lies with the legislative authority. On other occasions this Court has had to point out defects in this Act. The omission to give a Board power to extend the proceedings beyond 12 months if it considers it right and proper to do so, perhaps, adds another to the list of defects. The fact that the Board considered it to be equitable to give the debtor-respondents an opportunity of filing still another petition is, however, a matter which the Court cannot take into consideration. What the Court has to decide is whether the Board had jurisdiction to dismiss the petition under S. 7 of the Act in the circumstances of this case. Obviously it had not the jurisdiction. Consequently the Board's order will be quashed.

The result is that the petition will still be regarded as being on the file and it will be the duty of the Board to pass an order of dismissal under S. 17. The petitioner is entitled to his costs which will be paid by the debtor-respondents.

In re P. D. Curtis, an insolvent — Applicant — Petitioner.

Application No. 202 of 1941, in I. P. No. 159 of 1938, Decided on 4th August 1941.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (1909), S. 60 — S. 60, Civil P. C., cannot be invoked to get rid of appropriation of salary under S. 60, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act.

Section 60, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, is not at all concerned with attachments. When a Court makes an order under S. 60, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, appropriating the salary it does neither in fact nor in form direct the attachment of the property of the insolvent ; and consequently S. 60, Civil P. C., cannot be invoked for the purpose of enabling the insolvent to get rid of an order for the appropriation of his salary under S. 60, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act.

[P 27*g*, h]

S. J. S. Fernandez — for Petitioner.

Official Assignee in person.

Order. — This is an application taken out by the insolvent for an order for the following reliefs : (i) for an order to revoke the order attaching the insolvent's salary ; (ii) for the refund of the amounts of allocation recovered beyond a total period of two years ; and (iii) for the suspension of the allocation ordered for a month pending disposal of the present application. The insolvent in this case was by an order made by this Court in July 1938 directed to pay an allocation of Rs. 25 which was subsequently increased by an order dated 9th April 1940 to Rs. 125. On 22nd October 1940 the allocation was reduced to Rs. 100. These orders were duly communicated to the insolvent who has in all paid allocation for 31 months. The insolvent now applies for a revocation of the allocation order not by virtue of any provision contained in the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, but under the provisions of S. 60, Civil P. C., relating to attachments. The applicant's learned counsel relies on S. 60(1)(i) which fixes the limit for the portion of the salary of a public officer or a servant of a railway company or local authority, liable to be attached. There is a proviso to this clause which says that :

> Where the whole or any part of the portion of such salary liable to attachment has been under attachment, whether continuously or intermittently for a total period of 24 months, such portion shall be exempt from attachment until the expiry of a further period of 12 months and where such attachment has been made in execution of one and the same decree, shall be finally exempt from attachment in execution of that decree.

It is on this clause that the applicant relies in support of his contention. It is not however suggested that S. 60, Civil P. C., applies in terms to the present case. But it is argued that S. 60, Civil P. C., and S. 60, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, must be read together ; even doing so, I do not see how it helps. For S. 60, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, is not at all concerned with attachments. Sub-section (2) under which the orders against the insolvent were made is concerned with the jurisdiction of the Court to make an order for the appropriation of an insolvent's salary and income to the extent to which it is liable to attachment in execution of a decree or of any portion thereof. When a Court makes an order under S. 60, it does neither in fact nor in form direct the attachment of the property of the insolvent ; and I am unable to see how S. 60, Civil P. C., can be invoked for the purpose of enabling the applicant to get rid of a liability placed upon him by an order under S. 60, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. There is no justification for either prayer No. 1 or No. 2. Nor can I see any merit in prayer No. 3. The insolvent has had all his salary except the portion appropriated. I am not, therefore, satisfied that there should be any suspension of the order of allocation. The application is dismissed. Leave refused.

LEACH C. J. AND CHANDRASEKHARA AYYAR J.

Swaminatha Pillai — Appellant

Letters Patent Appeal No. 36 of 1940, Decided on 20th August 1941, against judgment and order of King J., in C. M. S. A. No. 251 of 1938, D/- 17th September 1940.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 16—Transfer of decree to benamidar of one of judgment-debtors — Decree cannot be executed against other judgment-debtor.

A judgment-debtor is not entitled to do something in the name of a dummy which the law does not allow him to do in his own name. Therefore a judgment-debtor cannot get the decree transferred in his benamidar's name and seek to execute it against other judgment-debtor. [P 28*f*, g]

(b) Second appeal—Finding of fact.

A decision of the first appellate Court on a question of fact is binding in second appeal. [P 28*g*]

(c) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 41 — One of judgment-debtors paying off decree but getting it transferred to his benamidar—Decree bought from such benamidar for valuable consideration and in good faith—Principle of S. 41 held applied and judgment-debtor held liable.

One of the judgment-debtors paid the decree-holder and got the decree transferred in his benamidar's name. The decree was bought from such benamidar by another for valuable consideration and in good faith and he took out execution against the judgment-debtor :

Held that the principle of S. 41 applied and the judgment-debtor was liable : (1839) 113 E R 35, Rel. on. [P 29*b*]

Held further that even assuming that the judgment-debtor's action in obtaining a transfer of the decree in the name of benamidar was justifiable and that he could be regarded as an innocent party this would not help him because wherever one of two innocent persons has to suffer by the act of a third person the person who has enabled the third person to occasion the loss must sustain it. The judgment-debtor certainly allowed the benamidar to hold himself out as the holder of this decree and having done so he cannot be preferred to the purchaser who bought the decree for valuable consideration and in full good faith: (1787-94) 2 T R 63, Rel. on. [P 29*c*]

T. V. Muthukrishna Iyer — for Appellant.

A. C. Sampath Ayyangar—for Respondents.

Leach C. J. — The question involved in this appeal is whether the appellant shall be allowed to profit by a scheme (for which he himself was responsible) to defeat the provisions of R. 16 of O. 21, Civil P. C. One Srinivasa Iyengar obtained a money decree against the appellant and one Idumban Chettiar. The appellant had become the surety for money owing by Idumban Chettiar and the decree was obtained in a suit filed to enforce repayment of the loan. In order to avoid execution proceedings being instituted against him, the appellant paid the decree-holder and naturally he desired to recover the amount from the principal debtor. Instead of adopting the proper course, which was to file a suit against Idumban Chettiar the appellant arranged with the decree-holder to transfer the decree to one Murugesa Padayachi. The decree-holder, having been paid, raised no objection to this course. It has been established that Murugesa was acting as the benamidar for the appellant, who hoped that with the decree standing in the name of a stranger to the suit he would be able to execute it against Idumban Chettiar. Proviso 2 to R. 16 of O. 21, Civil P. C., states that where a decree for the payment of money against two or more persons has been transferred to one of them it shall not be executed against the others. As Murugesa was actually the appellant's benamidar the transfer of the decree meant the transfer to the appellant himself. The appellant was not entitled to do something in the name of a dummy which the law does not allow him to do in his own name.

While Murugesa was the ostensible owner of the decree he sold it to Krishna Padayachi, the respondent. The respondent paid Rs. 1000 as the consideration. He had no inkling of the appellant's claim and throughout acted in good faith. At any rate, that is the effect of the finding of the first appellate Court and its decision on the question of fact is binding upon us. The respondent having become the transferee of the decree he wished to execute it against the appellant and accordingly instituted execution proceedings in the Court of the District Munsif of Kumbakonam. The District Munsif held that he was not entitled to an order in execution, but on appeal to the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam this decision was reversed. The appellant then appealed to this Court, but King J. agreed with the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the appeal. The present appeal has been filed under the provisions of Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, the learned Judge having given the necessary certificate.

a Mr. T. V. Muthukrishna Iyer conceded that in obtaining a transfer of the decree in the name of Murugesa the appellant was guilty of what in law amounts to a fraud. His object was no doubt to escape the payment of the court-fee which a suit to recover from the principal debtor would involve, but in view of the very emphatic provision contained in proviso 2 to R. 16 of O. 21 the appellant was clearly not entitled to do what he endeavoured to do. The reason given by King J. for dismissing the appellant's appeal was that he had allowed Murugesa to appear as the owner of the decree and consequently the principle embodied b in S. 41, T. P. Act, applied. That section only relates to immovable property, but the principle has been applied where moveable property has been sold to a bona fide purchaser for value by the ostensible owner. The learned Judge in the course of his judgment drew attention to the judgment in (1839) 10 A & E 90=113 E R 35 = 8 L J (NS) Q B 193.[1] That the principle can be applied to moveable property as well as to immovable property cannot be doubted. In fact the principle is embodied in S. 27, Sale of Goods Act.

Even if it were to be assumed that the c appellant's action in obtaining a transfer of the decree in the name of Murugesa was justifiable and that he can be regarded as an innocent party this would not help the appellant. The principle stated in (1787-94) 2 T R 63[2] at p. 70 would then apply. Wherever one of two innocent persons has to suffer by the act of a third person the person who has enabled the third person to occasion the loss must sustain it. The appellant certainly allowed Murugesa to hold himself out as the holder of this decree and having done so he cannot be preferred to the respondent who bought the decree for valuable consideration d and in full good faith. The appellant has only himself to blame for the position in which he finds himself. He could have avoided having to pay the decretal amount twice over, as he now has got to do, if he had not attempted to get round the provisions of O. 21, R. 16. We consider that the decision of King J. is in accordance with law and consequently this appeal must be dismissed with costs in favour of respondent 1.

Order. — The petitioner was the defendant in O. S. No. 20 of 1936 on the file of the District Munsif of Tirumangalam. The suit was decreed against him and he filed an appeal in the Court of the District Judge of Madura. The respondent (plaintiff), however, filed an application asking that he should be directed to furnish security for costs of the appeal and on this application the District Judge made an order by which he directed the petitioner to furnish security for costs and giving him four weeks, which expired on 3rd December, in which to furnish the security adjourned the appeal for orders to 4th December 1937. On 3rd December 1937 the petitioner did tender security and it appears that the District Munsif of Tirumangalam adjourned the question of testing the security until 15th December. On 11th December, h however, the District Judge rejected the appeal on the ground that the security had not been furnished within the time prescribed.

The contention advanced by the learned counsel for the petitioner is that the order of the lower Court was complied with by tendering security on 3rd December, namely the last day of the time allowed for furnishing security. The learned District Judge did not take this view but said that what is contemplated by an order granting time to furnish security is that the security should be furnished within the period allowed by the Court, and that the party should not have the time automatically extended by offering security on the last day and then saying that it should be tested later on. The only authority to which I have been referred which directly bears on the point is a case decided by Jackson J., reported in 52 M L J (S N) 53. In that case Jackson J. held that an order granting time for furnishing security was complied with if the security was tendered before the period expired. In my opinion this is the correct view. There must be a specific date by which the security has to be furnished, and there will be no specific date if the person ordered to furnish security has to furnish it some unspecified time before the expiration of the period fixed in order that it may be tested. I am of opinion therefore that the order of the learned District Judge rejecting the appeal must be set aside. The security tendered will be tested and if it is found to be sufficient it must be held to have been furnished in time. If however the security is not found sufficient, it would follow that the order of the District Judge had not been complied with, and it will then be open to the District Court to reject the appeal. The costs of this revision petition will abide the result of the appeal.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 1051 of 1937, Decided on 9th August 1940, to revise decree of Dist. Munsif, Coconada, D/- 30th March 1937.

Banker and Customer — Practice of bank when making claims against customer to allow credit for amount due by itself is no bar to suit by bank on its claim — Transferee of bank of pronote by customer is not bound to allow set off of amount due from bank in absence of rule or agreement between parties.

The practice of a bank to give credit for the amounts due by itself when making claims against its customers cannot be a bar to a suit by the bank on its claim, leaving the client to plead a set off, when there is a dispute as to the amounts due from each party. In the absence of any rule binding the parties and of any agreement between the parties the transferee of a pronote in favour of the bank by its customer is not bound to allow a set off of an amount due from his transferor : (1847-56) 156 E R 566, Rel. on. [P 31*b*]

C. Rama Rao — for Petitioner.

N. Vasudeva Rao — for Respondents.

Order.—The petitioner was the plaintiff in a suit for the balance due on a promissory note executed by defendant 1 as principal and by defendant 2 as surety in favour of a bank which transferred the note to the plaintiff. The bank in question carried on chit funds and the liability arose out of the purchase of the pool of a chit by defendant 1. As security for the payment of the balance of his instalments he executed the promissory note with defendant 2 as the surety. The bank stopped business before defendant 1 had completed the payment of the instalments and he admittedly did not pay the instalments which fell due after the closure of the bank, which is now in the hands of a liquidator. Defendant 2, surety for defendant 1, had a claim against the bank for an amount similar to the balance due on the suit promissory note. An attempt was made to adjust the bank's claim under the suit promissory note against defendant 2's claim against the bank. But there was trouble owing to the fact that the defendants were claiming to take into consideration as against the amount due under the promissory notes, bonuses which they expected to get on each instalment but did not get because of the closure of the business. It is found as a fact that there was no adjustment of the conflicting claims and that defendant 2 refused to take a transfer of the promissory note. The promissory note was, therefore, transferred to the plaintiff who according to the evidence was fully aware of all the facts concerning these attempts to set off the two claims. Now, the lower Court has rejected the defence of a discharge by adjustment and has rejected the plea that the transfer was unsupported by consideration. The learned District Munsif has however dismissed the suit on the ground that there was a practice of the bank whereby when there were amounts due from the bank to the customers and from the customers to the bank, the bank usually recovered only the balance after adjusting the sum due from it to them. He goes on to say that the plaintiff knew of this practice and must therefore be deemed to have taken the transfer subject to the practice.

It seems to me that this decision cannot be supported. The case in (1847-56) 156 E R 566[1] is authority for the position that the endorsee of an overdue bill does not take it subject to claims arising out of collateral matters such as a set off and that the endorsement of an overdue bill in order to defeat a prospective claim on a set off would not amount to a fraud. It was pointed out, that the only circumstances in which the transferee of an overdue bill would be fixed with liability to allow a set off in respect of a claim due from the transferor, would be circumstances which would justify an inference of an agreement to set off by both parties, of which the transferee had notice. Now, quite clearly in the present case there was no agreement to set off. The parties were quarrelling as to the figures and in consequence of this quarrel, an attempt to set off failed. Though the learned Judge talks of this practice of which the plaintiff had notice as one arising out of the rules of the bank, no such rule is discoverable in the copy exhibited in the case. All that appears to have been established is that it is usual for the bank to give credit for the amounts due by itself when making claims against its customers. But such a vague practice would surely not be a bar to a suit by the bank on its claim, leaving the client to plead a set off, when there is a dispute as to the amounts due from each party. In the absence of any rule binding the parties and of any agreement between the parties, it is difficult to see how the transferee can be held bound to allow a set off of an amount due from his transferor. If there had been a genuine desire on the part of the defendants to get all the rights of the parties adjusted in this suit, it would to my mind obviously have been desirable to ask that the liquidator of the bank be impleaded. The proper course having regard to the array of parties and the materials available was to give to the plaintiff a decree for the amount claimed in the plaint and subsequent interest at 6 per cent. and to refer the defendants to separate proceedings to enforce their claims, if any, against the company. The revision petition is, therefore, allowed with costs and there will be a decree against both the defendants for the amount claimed in the plaint with interest at the contract rate till today and costs and subsequent interest at 6 per cent. per annum.

It was contended on behalf of the accused that the offence actually committed was one under S. 420, Penal Code, which was punishable only by a First Class Magistrate and therefore the sub-Magistrate clutched at jurisdiction which he did not possess :

Held that the offence did not fall under S. 420, Penal Code, and that there was no ground for believing that the Magistrate clutched at jurisdiction in framing a charge under S. 417, Penal Code. [P 32*h* ; P 33*a*]

V. T. Rangaswami Iyengar — for Petitioners.

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

Order.—The prosecution case was that the Deputy Tahsildar saw a number of goats grazing in the forest and that finding that the owner had no license for so grazing them, he proceeded to drive them to the cattle pound. On the way, the Deputy Tahsildar was met by accused 1 and 2, who are brothers and owners of the goats, and by accused 3, their friend. Without disclosing the fact that accused 1 and 2 were the owners of the goats they told the Deputy Tahsildar that they would assist him in driving the goats to the pound; and they led him not to the pound but to their own pen. The Deputy Tahsildar duly drove the goats into the pen and upon entering the village to inform the village Magistrate, he was told that the enclosure into which he had driven the goats was not a cattle pound but a private pen of the owners of the goats. The Deputy Tahisldar thereupon filed a complaint in the Court of the local Sub-Magistrate, and in due course a charge was framed against all the three accused under Ss. 417 and 379, Penal Code. The case has not yet ended; but this revision petition was admitted because it was contended on behalf of the accused that the offence actually committed was one under Sec. 420, Penal Code, an offence punishable only by a First Class Magistrate. The leading case on the question as to the effect of trying persons for an offence less serious than was actually committed is to be found in 24 Mad 675[1] a decision of a Bench of this Court. The argument of the learned advocate for the petitioners is that the act of the Magistrate, whether the framing of the charge for a lesser offence was deliberate or not, makes his proceedings void; because S. 530 (p), Criminal P. C., says that if any Magistrate, not being empowered by law in this behalf, tries an offender, the proceedings shall be void. What that really means is pointed out in the case above referred to in these words:

> The meaning of this is that if a Magistrate tries an offender for an offence beyond his jurisdiction his proceedings shall be void. In the present case the Deputy Magistrate did not try accused for an offence beyond his jurisdiction. He tried him for an offence punishable under S. 193, Penal Code, i.e., for an offence triable by a First Class Magistrate and therefore within his jurisdiction. His proceedings therefore were not void and the Sessions Judge was wrong in treating them as void. Where the facts disclose an offence within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate it seems to us a complete fallacy to say he is not empowered by law to try the person charged for the offence which is within his jurisdiction because the same facts disclose a more serious offence which is beyond his jurisdiction. He is expressly so empowered. Whether in doing so he adopts a proper course is another question. No doubt it is improper on the part of a Magistrate to intentionally ignore circumstances of aggravation which show that an offence beyond his jurisdiction was in fact committed as well as an offence within his jurisdiction. . . . . It would also, in our opinion, be open to the revising and appellate authorities to set aside the Magistrate's proceedings and order a fresh trial, if such a course was required in the interests of justice but not otherwise; and the reason for setting them aside would be, not that they were void ab initio, but because they were improper and the interests of justice required them to be set aside.

A similar question came up before Jackson J. in 25 M L W 86.[2] The learned Judge draws from 24 Mad 675[1] the following proposition: if a Magistrate entirely overlooks some fact which would carry the case beyond his jurisdiction and tries the accused for a lesser offence, he is not held to have acted without jurisdiction. The question whether he has or has not entirely overlooked the circumstances would be one of fact. If, on the other hand, he does not overlook the circumstance, but after his attention has been drawn to it he deliberately ignores it, his proceedings would be improper, though not void. Venkatasubba Rao J. in 20 M L W 919[3] does not refer to 24 Mad 675,[1] but his attention was drawn to 2 Weir 21[4] which was a case where the Magistrate had charged an accused under S. 417, Penal Code, although the offence committed was one punishable under S. 420, Penal Code. In this case it was laid down that as the accused had committed an offence under S. 417 as well as under S. 420 he could be legally convicted of both and therefore the conviction of the minor offence was not absolutely illegal. But the learned Judges added:

> But the doctrine that no tribunal can properly clutch jurisdiction by intentionally ignoring facts of aggravation which make the offence really cognizable only by a higher tribunal still holds good, and where the accused has himself objected to the jurisdiction, it is possible that the High Court would feel itself bound to interfere.

Venkatasubba Rao J. who was dealing with a very similar question, followed that authority. It will therefore appear from the above decisions that whether or not the High Court should interfere would depend upon whether the Magistrate had deliberately overlooked certain aggravating facts with a view to securing for himself jurisdiction over the offence. If the Sub-Magistrate really believed that the whole body of facts revealed to him constituted an offence triable by him, and he had in fact jurisdiction to try the lesser offence, his proceedings would be proper and the High Court would not interfere. On the facts of the present case, I am inclined to think that the accused would not have been guilty of an offence punishable under S. 420, Penal Code; for, even after the tahsildar had driven the goats into the pen of the accused, he still retained control over them; and he would lose that control only if the accused did some act which would have prevented the tahsildar from removing them again if he had so wished. Whether that view is correct or not, I do not think that there is any ground here for believing that the Sub-Magistrate clutched at jurisdiction.

The learned advocate for the petitioners points out that the fact that the accused were also charged with theft indicates that both the prosecution and the Sub-Magistrate seemed to have realized that there was a constituent in the offence which was rather more than was required for a charge under S. 417—a constituent which showed that the tahsildar had parted with possession in favour of the accused because of the deceit that had been practised on him. On the facts as narrated to me by the learned advocate for the petitioners, it is difficult to see how there was an offence of theft. There might have been, if the accused afterwards took the goats away to some other place without the tahsildar's permission — or perhaps if they had prevented the tahsildar from having access to the goats. The evidence however is not before me; and so I do not wish to express any opinion as to whether the offence of theft was committed or not. If there was, it was probably not a part of the same transaction which led to the offence of cheating. On the facts before me, I am not prepared to say that the Magistrate is wrong or that any interference is called for from this Court. The petition is accordingly dismissed.

In re Dabbala Koricha Nagadu and another — Appellants.

Criminal Appeal No. 353 of 1941, Decided on 28th August 1941, against order of Court of Session, Anantapur Division, in C. C. No. 10 of 1941.

Criminal Tribes Act (1924), S. 23 (1) — Accused out of jail for 7 years after previous conviction — It is reason to contrary within Section 23 (1).

The fact that the accused has been out of jail for at least seven years after his last conviction may very well be considered to be a reason to the contrary under S. 23 (1) and hence the minimum sentence of seven years is not called for : ('29) 16 A I R 1929 Mad 841, Rel. on. [P 33*g*]

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

Judgment. — These two appellants have been convicted of offences under Ss. 457 and 380, Penal Code. They were tried by jury and the verdict of the jury was unanimous. So far as appellant 2 is concerned his appeal was dismissed summarily under S. 421, Criminal P. C. The case of appellant 1 alone comes up for consideration because of the sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment passed upon him.

There is no allegation of misdirection and the charge to the jury shows no signs of misdirection. There is therefore no appeal on the facts. The sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment has been passed by the learned Sessions Judge, because appellant 1 was a member of a criminal tribe who had been previously convicted of one of the offences specified in Sch. 1 appended to the Criminal Tribes Act. It was therefore obligatory upon the learned Sessions Judge under S. 23 (1) (a), Criminal Tribes Act, to pass a sentence of imprisonment for a term of not less than seven years. The learned Judge, however, has apparently overlooked the provision in S. 23 (1) that these minimum sentences are to be imposed "in the absence of special reasons to the contrary which shall be stated in the judgment of the Court." The learned Sessions Judge has not stated that there were no special reasons to the contrary in this case. Now we find that the last conviction of appellant 1 was in C. C. No. 148 of 1933 on the file of the Stationary Sub-Magistrate, Tadpatri, when he was convicted of house breaking and theft and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for six months. From that it is clear that appellant 1 had been out of jail for at least seven years after his last conviction and that may very well be considered to be a reason to the contrary under S. 23 (1) : vide the decision in 53 Mad 80.[1] Taking this view I set aside the sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment passed upon appellant 1 and sentence him instead to rigorous imprisonment for two years. The amount of property stolen was not worth more than Rs. 17 and no serious injury was inflicted by appellant 1 though it is said that he used a stick and therefore he deserves a severer punishment than appellant 2.

Appeal No. 22 of 1939, Decided on 29th August 1941, against decree of Sub-Judge, Devakottai, D/- 19th October 1938.

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), Ss. 4 (d), 8 and 9 — Mortgage debt on security of municipal house alone existing on 1st October 1937 — Preliminary mortgage decree to enforce aforesaid debt also existing when Act came into force — Addition of security of agricultural lands after Act cannot create retrospectively debt contracted on security of property other than municipal house property so as to exclude Section 4 (d).

When on 1st October 1937 there was a mortgage debt contracted on the security of municipal house property alone and also a preliminary mortgage decree for enforcing that debt on 22nd March 1938 when the Act came into force, any addition of security of agricultural lands at a date after the Act came into force cannot have the effect of retrospectively creating a debt contracted on the security of property other than municipal house property so as to bring into force Ss. 7 and 8 of the Act and to exclude S. 4 (d). [P 34*h*]

Wadsworth J. — This appeal arises out of an application by the appellant to scale down a preliminary decree on a mortgage. The mortgage in question was originally contracted on 5th January 1931 on the security of house property situated within a municipality. The suit was filed on the mortgage in 1937, resulting in a preliminary decree dated 26th February 1938 and it is that preliminary decree which the appellant sought to scale down under S. 19 of the Act. In 1938 the decree-holder, not being satisfied with the security given under the mortgage, filed two applications: one for the appointment of a receiver and the other for the attachment of certain agricultural lands belonging to the judgment-debtor. By way of defence to these applications the judgment-debtor came forward with an offer to give the agricultural lands, of which attachment was claimed, as additional security for the amount of the debt. This offer was accepted and on the execution of a bond (EX. D) dated 23rd July 1938, both the receiver application and the attachment application were dismissed. The contention upon which the application under S. 19 is based is that by reason of the terms of EX. D the mortgage debt, in respect of which the preliminary decree has been passed, becomes a debt contracted not only on house property within a municipality but also on the security of agricultural property so as to rule out the exception in S. 4 (d) of the Act. The security bond (EX. D) provides that > the mortgagor has agreed to give the said property as security along with the property originally mortgaged for the amount of the said decree. The mortgagor hereby mortgages to the mortgagee the undermentioned property as additional security for the debt under the said decree.

There is also a clause empowering the mortgagee to realize the entire debt not only out of the original hypotheca but also out of the additional security and prescribing that the additional security is liable to be sold in execution of the decree through Court in the same manner as the property mentioned in the decree. No doubt the effect of this bond is to give to the decree-holder a right to execute his decree against both sets of property in any order he pleases in respect of the whole amount of the decree. But we cannot see in this bond any contract whereby the parties agree that the mortgage debt shall be deemed to have been secured on both sets of properties with effect from the date of the original contract. Nor do we see in the bond any agreement whereby the additional security shall be deemed to be part of the hypotheca covered by the preliminary decree. The truth is that when Act 4 of 1938 came into force on 22nd March 1938, there was in existence a preliminary decree for the enforcement of a mortgage secured on a municipal house property alone. On 1st October 1937 the date on which under S. 8 the outstanding interest is to be cancelled, there was also a debt contracted on the security of house property alone. By the terms of S. 4 (d) of the Act such a debt is excluded from the operation of the Act. It is difficult to see how any addition of security at a date after the Act came into force can have retrospectively created a debt contracted on the security of property other than municipal house property so as to bring into force Ss. 7 and 8 of the Act and to exclude S. 4 (d). In the result, therefore, we agree with the conclusion taken by the lower Court and dismiss the appeal with costs of respondent 1.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 567 of 1939, Decided on 4th February 1941, to revise decree of Sub-Judge, Kumbakonam, in S. C. S. No. 218 of 1937.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 7, R. 10 and S. 35— Court directing plaint to be presented to proper Court can order plaintiff to pay costs of other side—But it cannot make payment of costs condition precedent to filing of suit in proper Court —Court directing payment of costs of other side before suit was presented in proper Court— Without paying costs as directed plaintiff presenting plaint in proper Court — Costs paid subsequently while suit was well within time— Suit must be deemed to be properly filed even if it be regarded as filed on date when costs were tendered.

By reason of S. 35 the Court directing a plaint to be presented to the proper Court, can order the plaintiff to pay the costs of the other side; but it has no power to add a further rider that the payment of costs should be condition precedent to the filing of the suit in the proper Court. [P 35*e*, g]

In violation of the Court's direction that the costs of the other side should be paid before the plaint was presented in the proper Court the plaintiff presented the plaint in proper Court without paying the costs which were tendered subsequently while the suit was well within time :

Order.—This is a civil revision petition filed against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam passed in S. C. S. No. 218 of 1937. The plaintiff whose suit was dismissed in the lower Court is the petitioner before me. The suit is for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 941-11-4 against the defendants. The suit was originally filed in the Presidency Town Small Cause Court, Madras. That Court held that it had no jurisdiction to try the suit and passed an order returning the plaint to be presented to the proper Court. When making that order, it is admitted that there was a condition attached to it, namely, that the costs of the defendants should be paid before the suit was presented in the proper Court. Without paying the costs so directed, the plaintiff presented the plaint in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam. Objection was taken that such institution is improper and the amount was tendered in December 1937. The cause of action is said to have arisen in the beginning of 1935. So even taking it that the suit itself was represented in the Kumbakonam Court on the day when the amount was tendered, the suit would be within time and the Court might well have treated the suit as having been presented on that day. In this view, the dismissal of the suit appears to me to be improper.

But that apart, I do not see what jurisdiction the Court has in passing an order under O. 7, R. 10 to impose a condition that the plaintiff whose plaint is returned for presentation to the proper Court shall, before presenting it to that Court, pay the costs as a condition precedent. Order 7, R. 10 imposes the duty on every Court that it shall at any stage of the suit return a plaint to be presented to the proper Court. If O. 7, R. 10 had stood alone, it would be open to argument that the Court making such an order would have no jurisdiction even to direct that the plaintiff should pay the costs to the defendants. But S. 35 which provides for the jurisdiction of a Court to award costs says that the fact that the Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit shall be no bar to the exercise of the power. This only means that when directing a plaint to be presented to the proper Court, the Court making that order may also direct the plaintiff to pay the costs of the other side. It has no power to add a further rider that the payment of costs should be condition precedent to the filing of the suit in the proper Court. When the Legislature wants to give such power to the Court it has made express provision. In O. 23 where the Court allows the plaintiff to withdraw the whole or any part of his claim with liberty to file a fresh suit, there is the rule that the Court may allow the suit to be withdrawn with liberty to institute a fresh suit on such terms as it thinks fit and it has been held under that rule that the Court may impose a condition that the payment of costs ordered should be a condition precedent for the filing of a fresh suit in respect of the same subject-matter. Order 33, R. 15 provides that where an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis is rejected, it shall be a bar to any subsequent application of the like nature and that the applicant shall be at liberty to institute a suit in the ordinary manner in respect of such right, provided that he first pays the costs, if any, incurred by the Government and by the opposite party in opposing his application for leave to sue as a pauper. In considering this provision (O. 33, R. 15) a Bench of this Court has held in 69 M L J 791,[1] that the suit must be taken to have been instituted the next moment after the payment of the costs. The suit was instituted without paying the costs but the costs were paid afterwards. Then they say :

> We think it will be sufficient to say that the suit must be treated as one instituted on 2nd March 1932 and dealt with on that basis.

In this case on the date when the amount was tendered the suit was well within time. The decree of the lower Court is set aside and the suit is remanded to be disposed of on the merits. The respondents will pay the costs of the petitioner in this Court. The amount of costs that was tendered by the plaintiff and was refused to be accepted by the defendants will be paid to the respondents' learned counsel here within a fortnight. The other costs will abide the result.

Second Appeal No. 162 of 1938, Decided on 8th April 1941, against decree of District Court, North Malabar, in A. S. No. 216 of 1936.

(a) Malabar law — Will — Construction — Bequest of his property by testator to wife and children — Bequest to operate in favour of daughter already born at time of will and all progeny that might be yet born to testator by his wife — No person other than wife and children given right or claim to property bequeathed — Wife to act as guardian of children during their minority — Testator held did not intend to bequeath his property to tavazhi but to his wife and own children as tenants in common — Decree against mother held therefore could not bind children.

The testator bequeathed his property to his wife and children, one of whom had been born at the time when the will was executed and the other was born later. The bequest was to operate in favour of the daughter who was already born and all the progeny that might yet be born to him by his wife. The testator made it clear that his wife and children should remain in joint possession and enjoyment of all moveable and immovable properties holding them directly themselves and causing them to be held as his legal representatives and heirs and further added that his wife shall "effect the collections of outstandings due to him in her own capacity and in her capacity as guardian of the children who had not come of age," and further provided that "no persons other than my wife and children have any right or claims to any of the moveable and immovable properties or any of my future acquisitions, that I have hereby bequeathed to them" :

Held that since a tavazhi must be understood as consisting of a mother and of her children and descendants in the female line the provision of the will restricting the bequest to the wife and children only conflicted with the underlying idea of the tavazhi and indicated that the intention of the testator was not to bequeath the property to the tavazhi but to his own wife and his own offspring as tenants in common. The mother consequently could not represent the children in a litigation and a decree passed against her could not bind the children : ('28) 15 A I R 1928 Mad 870, Ref. [P 38*d*]

Held further that since the manager of the tarwad alone and not each karnavan or karnavathi of the various tavazhis inside the tarwad that would be the guardian of all the minors in the various groups or tavazhis existing in the tarwad the appointment of the wife as guardian could not be regarded as having been made in pursuance of the ordinary law prevailing amongst the Malabar families but was apparently done as the property was bequeathed by the testator to his own wife and his own children as tenants in common : 35 Mad 648, Approved. [P 38*b*, c]

(b) Malabar law — Bequest by father to wife and children — Whether wife and children constitute tenancy in common or become joint tenants forming group of tavazhi and continue to remain so even after wife marries another after her husband's death and has fresh offspring (Quære).

Whether a bequest by a father in favour of his wife and children constitutes a tenancy in common or whether they become joint tenants forming a group of tavazhi with the incidents of a maru makattayam tarwad and continue to remain so even after the wife is married to another person subsequent to her first husband's death as a result of which there are fresh offspring. Judgment. — This appeal arises out of a suit for partition and recovery of possession of 2/3rds share in the property bequeathed by the plaintiff's father Narayanan under a will dated 21st January 1921, EX. A, to his wife and children, one of whom had been born at the time when the will was executed and the other was born later. The suit was brought as the property was alleged to have been owned by the plaintiffs as tenants in common with their mother who had no right to represent them as a karnavathi in the suit (O. S. NO. 203 of 1932) instituted on the basis of a mortgage executed in favour of defendant 2 by their father. To this suit the plaintiffs' mother alone was made a party and the plaintiffs were not impleaded. It was decreed but it was contended in the present suit that the decree was not binding on the plaintiffs and their shares which were

2/3rds in the property bequeathed by their father remained unaffected by the decree and the purchase of the same by the decree-holder was invalid. The decree-holder assigned the property after his purchase to the three persons who were also made parties to the present action. This was decreed by both the Courts below and defendants 2, 5 and 6 have preferred the present appeal.

The interesting question, whether a bequest by a father in favour of his wife and children constitutes a tenancy in common or whether they become joint tenants forming a group of tavazhi with the incidents of a marumakattayam tarwad, and continue to remain so even after the wife is married to another person subsequent to her first husband's death as a result of which there are fresh offspring, has been debated before me in this appeal. Relying on the natural presumption that the bequest or gift must have been intended to be made by the father to his own children and not to the offspring of another marriage, the answer was given in two decisions of this Court that the latter could not partake of any share or interest in the properties given by a person who was not their own father. But in arriving at this result two methods were adopted by the two Division Benches of this Court who decided those cases. Since the decision of the Full Bench in 39 Mad 317[1] was to the effect that if the father gave a property to his wife and children they would take it or would in any case be presumed to do so as members of a tavazhi unless a contrary intention had been expressed by the donor or the testator, and Sadasiva Iyer J., who had considerable experience of Malabar law and customs had observed in the Full Bench decision referred to above that in such cases two small tavazhis or groups might be taken to have come into existence the members of one group not sharing with the members of the other—their mother being the common factor to both of them or perhaps even more, if she had married more than twice and had children by each marriage. A Division Bench of this Court, 42 Mad 869,[2] of whom Phillips J., at least, had large judicial experience in this presidency, took the same view as was expressed by Sadasiva Ayyar J., in the above stated Full Bench case. Inasmuch as a tavazhi consists of a woman and all her children and the effect of holding that the tavazhi had come into existence would be to confer a share of the property given by a father to his wife and his offspring, on the offspring of another marriage, another Division Bench of this Court consisting of Krishnan and Venkatasubba Rao JJ., held on the other hand that a tavazhi should be found not to have come into existence at all in these circumstances and the wife and children who took the property should be presumed to have taken it merely as tenants in common. But, in both these decisions, the property was given by the second husband of the woman and not by the first one. This to my mind makes a considerable difference as, by remarrying, a woman cannot be found to have forfeited her right to the tavazhi—if one is held to have come into existence on the death of her first husband — and is not held to have been disjointed on account of a second marriage of the wife, in the absence of any authority which had not been, in spite of my asking for it shown to me. As the idea of a tavazhi was that the property would devolve on a woman and all her children, Mr. Pocker, learned counsel for the appellants, was prepared to put the extreme contention that the children of the second marriage would enter into the group of the tavazhi that was already in existence and tried to steer clear of the decision in 51 Mad 574[3] by distinguishing it on the ground that the property in that case was left by the second husband to his own children.

The decision of this interesting question would have been essential only if I found that there was nothing in EX. A which would lead me to hold that the property was not given by Narayanan to his wife and his own children as tenants in common or that in other words, there was nothing in the will to rebut the presumption as to the property having been given to a tavazhi raised in 39 Mad 317.[1] A perusal of the deed would, however, show that the property in this case was undoubtedly given by Narayanan to his own wife and his children as tenants in common and he made it clear that it would devolve on nobody else. Had the property been given to the tavazhi as suggested by the learned counsel for the appellants, one should not have found the will to be in favour of the daughter Devu who was already born and "to all the progeny that may yet be born to me of her." This is not all. In the next paragraph of the will the testator makes it clear that his wife and children should remain in joint possession and enjoyment of all moveable and immovable properties holding them directly themselves and causing them to be held as his legal representatives and heirs. What is more, the testator adds that his wife shall > effect the collections of outstandings due to me in her own capacity and in her capacity as guardian of the children who have not come of age.

It was suggested by Mr. Pocker that every mother is the guardian of her children in every tavazhi and the mention of that fact by the testator did not alter the position in any way. This appears to be incorrect. It is the manager of the tarwad alone and not each karnavan or karnavathi of the various tavazhis inside the tarwad that would be the guardian of all the minors in the various groups or tavazhis existing in the tarwad (35 Mad 648[4] at p. 654) and the appointment by Narayanan of his wife as guardian could not therefore be regarded as having been made in pursuance of the ordinary law prevailing amongst the Malabar families but on account of a special direction that he was giving as opposed to the custom. This was apparently done as the property was bequeathed by him to his own wife and his own children as tenants in common and as he wanted his wife to act as a guardian on behalf of the children irrespective of the fact that someone else would have been their legal guardian if one was not appointed by him. The succeeding sentence of the will makes it clearer still. It reads as follows :

> No persons other than my wife and children have any right or claims to any of the moveable and immovable properties or any of my future acquisitions, that I have hereby bequeathed to them.

If a tavazhi has to be understood as consisting of a mother and of her children and descendants in the female line as observed in 51 Mad 574,[3] the abovementioned provision of the will would come into conflict with the underlying idea of the tavazhi and indicate that the intention of the testator was not to bequeath the property to the tavazhi but to his own wife and his own offspring as tenants in common. That being my construction of the document the mother could not have represented the plaintiffs in the previous litigation and the suits were rightly decreed. For the above reasons this appeal must fail and is dismissed with costs of respondents 1 and 2. Leave to appeal refused.

Criminal Revn. Cases Nos. 750 and 751 and Criminal Revn. Petn. Nos. 707 and 708 of 1940, Decided on 13th September 1940, to revise orders of Second Class Magistrate, Polur, D/- 26th August 1940.

Criminal trial — Evidence — Head constable examined as prosecution witness producing general diary containing entry regarding occurrence in question as reported by complainant — In cross-examination omission of material and relevant facts and injuries sustained by complainant elicited — Accused's prayer to have aforesaid portion in diary marked as exhibit refused—At Magistrate's suggestion complainant applying for and getting expunged evidence of head constable from record—Head constable's evidence held could not be expunged from record — Accused held entitled to prove through him documents admissible in evidence.

The head constable examined as a prosecution witness also produced his general diary containing the entry relevant to the occurrence in question as reported by the complainant. In the course of the cross-examination omission in the general diary of material and relevant facts and the injuries sustained by the complainant was elicited and the portion of the general diary in regard to this was sought to be marked by the accused. The Magistrate refused permission to do so. After charge in the course of further cross-examination of the head constable the accused applied for the production of the general diary and for permission to mark the relevant portions as exhibit. This application was opposed by the complainant. At the suggestion of the Magistrate the complainant applied for and had the head constable's evidence expunged from the record and the application filed by the accused was dismissed with the observation that the accused may summon the head constable as a defence witness :

Held that the evidence of the head constable could not be deleted from the record and the accused was entitled to prove through him documents which were admissible in evidence. [P 39c]

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

FACTS. — The respondent-complainant was the consignee of Diesel oil at Polur Railway Station and he dug a pit at the edge of a sleeper about 3 feet in diameter and 4 feet deep for drawing the oil from the van into the barrels. This was objected to by the accused who was the Permanent Way Sub-Inspector of the railway company as the sinking of a pit adjoining to the railway line was dangerous to the track. When the serious consequences of his act were told to the complainant he lost his temper and abused the railway staff and the accused in particular by using indecent language and the accused complained to the Railway Police and his superiors. The complainant with a view to forestall the accused and coerce the accused from taking any action complained against him under Ss. 323 and 504, Penal Code. During the trial of the case, the prosecution examined the head constable who was in charge of the police station on that day as witness 8 and he also produced the general diary containing the entry relevant to the occurrence in question as reported by the complainant. In the course of the cross-examination omission in the general diary of material and relevant facts as to the person or persons who committed the offence and as regards the injuries sustained by the complainant was elicited and the portion of the general diary in regard to this was sought to be marked by the accused. The Magistrate refused permission to do so. After charge was framed in the course of further cross-examination of P. W. 8 the accused applied for the production of the general diary and for permission to mark the relevant portions as exhibit. This application was opposed by the complainant. At the suggestion of the Magistrate the complainant applied for and had the evidence of P. W. 8 expunged from the record and the application filed by the accused was dismissed with the observation that the accused may summon P. W. 8 as a defence witness. Against this order the present revision is filed.

Order. — The evidence of P. W. 8 cannot be deleted from the record and the accused are entitled to prove through him documents which are admissible in evidence. The orders of the Sub-Magistrate are therefore set aside and he is directed to proceed with the case in accordance with law.

Second Appeal No. 1212 of 1938, Decided on 19th August 1941, against decree of Sub-Judge, South Kanara, in A. S. No. 109 of 1937.

(a) Hindu law — Religious endowment — Agreement to perform ceremony of feeding Brahmins in temple executed in favour of temple represented by its trustee—Construction — Consideration — Certain property charged for performance of aforesaid ceremony—Failure of executants of agreement to perform ceremony—Trustee held could perform same out of temple funds and recover cost from executants and properties charged.

The material part of the agreement addressed to and executed by N and K, in favour of the temple represented by its trustee ran as follows: "Our paternal uncle V has this day conveyed to us through Moktyarname, the immovable property valued at about Rs. 600 and moveable properties of the value of about Rs. 400 executed by him. As mentioned therein, we have to maintain him properly in future and in accordance with his direction, we shall, for the welfare of our family, perform Brahmanesantarpane for Brahmins (feeding of Brahmins) at an expense of Rs. 60 on the day following Poornima Makha of every year, in the temple." The properties mentioned in the document were charged with the performance of the feeding of Brahmins in the temple and of payment of a small sum as a present to the Brahmins who gathered at the feeding ceremony. On the failure of the special trustees N and K to perform the feeding ceremony at the temple, the general trustee got the same performed out of the temple funds and sued to recover the cost from N and K. It was contended that there was no consideration for the settlement of his property by the uncle:

Held that the undertaking by N and K to perform the feeding was part consideration for the settlement by the uncle and no further evidence was necessary to show that the uncle conveyed his property on the promise of N and K to perform the feeding. There was no need in the plaint to set out anything further than that the document provided for the performance of the feeding by the two brothers. [P 40*f*,g]

Held further that the creation of the charge amounted to a partial dedication and the general trustee of the temple was sufficiently interested in the performance of the charities and in fact it was his duty to see that all festivals and charities were properly performed. It would be a breach of his duty if he did not do so. Consequently when the special trustees in possession of the properties charged with the performance of the charities failed to perform the ceremony of feeding the Brahmins which they were bound to do, the general trustee could perform it out of the funds of the temple and recover it from the special trustees and from the properties charged: 17 Mad 199, Rel. on; 34 Mad 375, Disting. [P 40*g*,h; P 41*a*]

cumstances. Two brothers Narayana Bhat and Keshava Bhat executed a karar (EX. A) in favour of the plaint institution on 18th July 1899 undertaking to perform certain charities or viniyogams as they are called in the suit temple every year. Some properties of the brothers were charged with the performance of these viniyogams at a cost of Rs. 60 every year. These viniyogams were not performed during the years 1932, 1933, 1934 and 1935 by the defendants and thereupon the temple performed them and seeks to recover the sum of Rs. 288-1-6 and to enforce the charge over the properties mentioned in the plaint schedule. The trial Court granted a decree but the appellate Court reversed it holding that EX. A was not valid either as a trust or a contract and that the plaint institution has no right to sue. The plaintiff appeals and the only question that arises for decision is whether the plaintiff is entitled to perform the viniyogam and recover the amount from the plaint properties. Exhibit A is a registered agreement executed by two persons Narayana Bhat and Keshava Bhat in favour of the plaint institution. It recites that it was executed and delivered to the Bhandara of Upragandy Sri Sahasralingheswara Devaru in Kerikar village. Bhandara, it is agreed, means a trustee. The material portion of it runs as follows :

> Our senior paternal uncle Venkappa Bhatta, son of Hennal Puttanna Bhatta, residing at Ulamogra of Adethela village, Bandadi Magane, has this day conveyed to us through Moktyarname, the immovable property of the beriz of Rs. 2-8-0 and valued at about Rs. 600, out of the warg entered in the name of Hennal Subbayya, bearing Muli No. 12 of the said Hirebandadhi village and moveable properties of the value of about Rs. 400 executed by him and executed Moktyarname. As mentioned therein, we have to maintain him properly in future and in accordance with his direction, we shall for the welfare of our family perform Brahmanesantarpane for Brahmins (feeding of Brahmins) at an expense of Rs. 60 on the day following Poornima Makha of every year, in the said temple, on the liability of the property lying within the undermentioned boundaries of beriz of Rupees 15-8-5, warg of which is entered in the name of Kesa alias Thinnayya, bearing Muli No. 5 of Illantile village, Upragandy Magane, Upragandy subdistrict, South Kanara District. Further, we shall also give gangamrita (water) to the persons gathering on the occasion of three Makha festivals every year in the said temple, we shall also give dakshina (present) according to (our) mite to the Brahmins who gather at the santarpane (feeding) at not less than one pie for each (Brahmin).

The properties mentioned in the schedule attached to this document are clearly charged with the performance of the feeding of Brahmins in the temple and of payment of a small sum as a present to the Brahmins who gather at that feeding ceremony at not less than one pie per Brahmin. The agreement is addressed to and is executed in favour of the plaint institution represented by its trustee. The lower appellate Court is clearly in error in holding that there was no consideration for the undertaking in this agreement to feed the Brahmins in the temple. The Subordinate Judge says :

> There is no legal connexion established between the transaction of conveyance by the uncle to the nephews and the undertaking in Ex. A. There is nothing to show that the uncle conveyed his property on the promise of Narayana Bhat and Keshava Bhat to perform the ceremonies.

This is a clear misreading of EX. A. After referring to the settlement made by the paternal uncle of his properties on the executants, the document says :

> As mentioned therein, we have to maintain him properly in future and in accordance with his direction, we shall, for the welfare of our family, perform Brahmanasantarpane for Brahmins (feeding of Brahmins) at an expense of Rs. 60.

This clearly means that the undertaking to perform the feeding was part consideration for the settlement by the uncle. That is the plain and obvious inference of the sentence just set out and no further evidence is necessary to show that the uncle conveyed his property on the promise of Narayana Bhat and Keshava Bhat to perform the feeding. There was no need in the plaint to set out anything further than that EX. A provides for the performance of this feeding by the two brothers. The property mentioned in the schedule attached to EX. A is not wholly dedicated to the trust but the performance of the feeding in the temple was made a charge on those properties. There may be a partial dedication as pointed out in Ganapati Iyer's Religious Endowments, p. 76. In such a case the general trustee of the institution is sufficiently interested in the performance of these charities and in fact it is his duty to see that all these festivals and charities are properly performed. It would be a breach of his duty if he did not do so. In 21 Mad 406,[1] Subramania Iyer and Benson JJ. say this on p. 408 :

> In our opinion the Subordinate Judge has overlooked the circumstances that the plaintiff in this case was the general trustee of the temple and as such held a special position in regard to the protection of its interests. In that character it was not only his right, but his duty to see that the temple funds in the hands of special trustees were duly appropriated.

It cannot be said that where the special trustee in possession of the properties charged with the performance of the charities does not perform a particular festival which he is bound to do, the general trustee cannot perform it out of the funds of the temple and recover it from the special trustee and from the properties over which there is the charge. In 17 Mad 199,[2] the general trustees carried out certain repairs for which there was a special endowment in charge of a special trustee. The general trustee was held entitled to sue the special trustee for recovery of the sum spent from the general funds. On p. 202 they say :

> There is also no doubt that as dharmakartas respondents are bound to see that the temple is kept in proper repair by those who are bound to do so according to usage.

The decision in 34 Mad 375[3] relied on by the lower appellate Court has no application to this case. There the only question was whether the provision in a will that buttermilk, betel and nuts, fans and sugar should be given to people attending a festival in a temple was a religious trust or merely a charitable trust. There was no feeding to be done in the temple itself. It was held that the trust was not religious in character. This decision has no application to the present case. Feeding of devotees in the temples is a well-known thing as pointed out by Muthuswami Ayyar J. in 17 Mad 199[2] at p. 200. The point is when there is such a trust performable in a temple is the general trustee entitled to perform it if the persons who are primarily to do it do not do so and recover the cost from the properties? On the authority of the decision in 17 Mad 199,[2] I hold that the general trustee can recover the sum in question and I reverse the decree of the lower appellate Court and restore that of the first Court with costs here and in the lower appellate Court.

Appeal No. 112 of 1938, Decided on 3rd October 1941, against decree of Sub-Judge, Tellicherry, in O. S. No. 27 of 1936.

* Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 63 — "Party against whom an order is made"—R. 63 applies to all orders which are against claims preferred under R. 58 irrespective of whether they have been passed on merits or not—Order "Petition not pressed. It is dismissed" is adverse order : 48 M L J 616 = ('25) 12 A I R 1925 Mad 1113 = 87 I C 635 ; ('25) 12 A I R 1925 Mad 265 = 80 I C 233 ; 110 I C 511 (Mad) and (1940) 2 M L J 402 = ('41) 28 A I R 1941 Mad 77, OVERRULED.

Order 21, R. 63 applies to all orders which are against claims preferred under R. 58. The test to see whether an order is under R. 63 is whether the order is against the claimant or the decree-holder, but that does not mean that the order must involve an adjudication on the merits after investigation. If the petitioner has in fact asked to be allowed to withdraw the petition and the Court has acquiesced in the course, it may very well be that the order would not be an adverse order within the meaning of the rule, but it cannot be said that because a claimant says to the Court that he does not press the petition and consents to an order of dismissal it is not an adverse order. [P 42*h*; P 43*d*,e,h]

Therefore where the order "Petition not pressed. It is dismissed" is passed on a petition which falls within R. 58 and the petitioner has not sought permission to withdraw it without prejudice to his rights it is obviously an order which is against him and requires him to file a suit within a year from the date of the order if he wishes to re-open the matter: 48 M L J 616=('25) 12 A I R 1925 Mad 1113 = 87 I C 635; ('25) 12 A I R 1925 Mad 265=80 I C 233 ; 110 I C 511 (Mad) and (1940) 2 M L J 402=('41) 28 A I R 1941 Mad 77, OVERRULED ; ('19) 6 A I R 1919 Mad 738 (F B), Rel. on. [Instances of what constitutes an order 'against' a claim or objection discussed.] [P 44*b*]

ORDER OF REFERENCE BY LEACH C. J. AND VENKATARAMANA RAO J.

Leach C. J.—This appeal arises out of a suit filed by respondents 1 to 5 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tellicherry for the following reliefs : (1) a declaration that certain immovable property was tarwad property and therefore could not be brought to sale as the result of an attachment in execution proceedings instituted by the appellant bank in respect of a decree obtained against defendants 2 to 4, and (2) the setting aside of an order passed on a claim petition. Defendants 2 to 4, who are respondents 6 to 8, borrowed money from the appellant bank and, as the loan was not repaid, the bank sued for its recovery and obtained the decree which led to the attachment of the property in execution proceedings. On 12th July 1932 the plaintiffs-respondents applied for the removal of the attachment, but did not press their application. The result was that on 12th July 1932 the following order was passed by consent in respect of their application for removal of the attachment: "Petition not pressed. It is dismissed." Notwithstanding this order the plaintiffs-respondents on 5th September 1935 filed another application for the removal of the attachment. This was dismissed on the 14th of the following month. On 12th October 1936, that is two days short of 12 months, the plaintiffs-respondents filed the suit out of which this appeal arises. The appellant bank contended that it was barred by the law of limitation and that in any event the suit could not be maintained because the property attached was in fact the private property of the judgment-debtors. The Subordinate Judge held that the suit was in time and that the property was tarwad property. Both these questions are raised in the appeal.

The first question involves the consideration of authorities which are in conflict and we propose to refer the question to a Full Bench, but before making the reference we will deal with the appellant bank's objection to the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the property was tarwad property. It is common ground that the property was bought by the mother and her five sons and daughters, all of whom were majors. The mother and the eldest son having died, the surviving sons, Kunhunni and Kunhiraman, and their sister, Mathu, conveyed the property to their sister Parvathi who has married defendant 4. The deed of conveyance set out the circumstances under which the property was purchased and that it was purchased as their joint property. The mother and her sons and daughters constituted a tavazhi and the father had given the money for the purchase. There can be no doubt that the Subordinate Judge was fully justified in holding that the property belonged to the tarwad. The question which we refer to a Full Bench is this: "When an order is passed on a claim petition in these words 'Petition not pressed It is dismissed,' does the order require the petitioner to file a suit under O. 21, R. 63 within a year from the date of the order if he wishes to re-open the matter?" We do not propose to discuss the authorities which have been referred to us in the course of the argument. It is sufficient to say that they appear to disclose a need for an authoritative decision of the Court on this question.

Opinion of the Full Bench

Leach C. J.—In order to give an answer to the question referred it is necessary to decide what is meant by an adverse order under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C. That rule states that where a claim or an objection is preferred the party against whom an order is made may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but, subject to the result of a suit the order shall be conclusive. The order referred to in the rule is an order passed on an application which falls within the purview of R. 58. That rule provides that where a claim is preferred to, or an objection is made to the attachment of, property attached in execution of a decree on the ground that it is not liable to attachment, the Court shall proceed to investigate the claim or objection, provided that it may refuse to investigate when it considers that the claim or objection was designedly or unnecessarily delayed.

In 41 Mad 985[1] Wallis C. J. and Oldfield and Seshagiri Iyer JJ. held that an order refusing to investigate a claim to attached property on the ground that there was delay in the filing of it was an order passed against the claimant within the meaning of R. 63 and by reason of Art. 11, Limitation Act, the order became final unless a suit was filed within twelve months to set it aside. In that case an application for the removal of an attachment was made, but it was filed at a late stage and the District Munsif refused to enter into an investigation. His order was couched in these words: "As this petition was filed late, this claim is ordered to be notified to the intending bidders." This did not satisfy the petitioner and a fresh application was filed for the removal of the attachment. The order on this occasion was:

> The allegations of the zamindarini will be notified to the bidders with the remark that the zamindarini did not take steps for her claim being enquired into during the last ten months.

The Full Bench held that this order amounted to a rejection of the claim on the ground that it had been filed too late and therefore was an adverse order within R. 63, though there was no investigation and consequently no decision on the merits. It is admitted that the judgments in that case have received the approval of all the High Courts in India, but there are numerous decisions of this Court where a distinction has been drawn, in some cases, wrongly. The test is whether the order is "against" the claimant or the decree-holder, but that does not mean that the order must involve an adjudication on the merits after investigation. Even an order of dismissal for default will fall within the rule; so long as it remains in force it is obviously adverse to the claimant. But if the person objecting to the attachment does not ask for his claim to be investigated and the order on the petition is merely that it be recorded, it cannot be said that this is an order "against" him. In such a case the application will not fall within R. 58: see 1919 M W N 805.[2] Again the petition may contain a prayer not contemplated by R. 58, or it may have been presented after the Court has sold the attached property and therefore the Court has no longer jurisdiction to entertain it. The dismissal of such a petition can scarcely be regarded as an adverse order : see 45 Mad 827.[3] The position is not different if the claim is for an inquiry which is not contemplated by the rule, or the Court while dismissing a petition expressly states that the rights of the petitioner are not prejudiced by the order : see 58 Mad 936.[4] It is not an adverse order if the petition is dismissed because the power to investigate is in another Court: see 41 M L J 198.[5] But the position is very different where the application clearly falls under R. 58, the Court has jurisdiction and it passes an order dismissing the petition.

We will now refer to the cases which in our opinion have been wrongly decided. The first is that in 48 M L J 616,[6] where the order passed on the claim petition was in these words:

> The contest is practically between the two claimants and the suit is inevitable. On the ground that the claims have been preferred too late and the delay is not satisfactorily explained, I disallow the claim.

Ramesam and Venkatasubba Rao JJ. held that this was not an order falling within R. 63, but we consider that they erred in so doing. This case clearly fell within the decision in 41 Mad 985.[1] In A I R 1925 Mad 265,[7] Coutts-Trotter C. J. and Ramesam J. held that where the order on a claim petition was, "not pressed, dismissed," it was not an order against the claimant within the meaning of R. 63. The basis of this decision was apparently the assumption that the claimant wished to abandon his claim and to have it treated as if it never had been made. If the petitioner had in fact asked to be allowed to withdraw the petition and the Court had acquiesced in the course, it might very well be that the order would not be an adverse order within the meaning of the rule, but we do not agree that because a claimant says to the Court that he does not press the petition and consents to an order of dismissal it is not an adverse order. In such circumstances it would, in our opinion, clearly be an order against him within the meaning of R. 63, provided, of course, that the application was one which fell within R. 58. Coutts-Trotter C. J., stated that he had always been of the opinion that in the case of the withdrawal of a petition it was a mistake for the Judge to endorse on it "dismissed," and that it was quite sufficient to record on it "withdrawn." With great respect, the Code of Civil Procedure does not contemplate such an order. It only contemplates the allowing or the refusal of a petition, and strictly speaking the order should be one of dismissal. Where the petitioner informs the Court that he wishes to withdraw his petition the Court may allow him to do so and by the use of appropriate language in the dismissal order make it quite clear that it is not intended to be an adverse order. We can see no reason why the claim petition should not be withdrawn if the claimant wishes to withdraw it, but the order passed in such circumstances should be worded so as not to attract the operation of Art. 11, Limitation Act.

In 110 I C 511,[8] a claim petition had been filed by the appellant who subsequently applied to be allowed to withdraw it, stating that he would file a regular suit. Thereupon the District Munsif passed an order dismissing the petition. Kumaraswami Sastriar and Devadoss JJ. held that this order did not fall within R. 63 and they expressed the opinion that the decision of the Full Bench in 41 Mad 985[1] > should be confined to cases where the disposal has been either on investigation or refusal to investigate on the ground that the claim is filed too late.

We consider that this opinion of the effect of the decision of the Full Bench is erroneous. Moreover the views expressed by the learned Judges are in conflict with the wording of the rule. The rule applies to all orders which are "against" claims preferred under R. 58. The last case to which our attention has been drawn is that in (1940) 2 M L J 402,[9] which was decided by a Division Bench consisting of my learned brother

Krishnaswami Ayyangar and myself. Although the principle underlying R. 63 was correctly stated on further consideration my learned brother and I are of the opinion that the order passed thereon is open to objection and our learned brother Happell shares this opinion. A mortgagee presented a petition asking that properties which had been attached should be sold subject to his mortgage. According to the petition it was filed under R. 58. The order passed on it was this :

The mortgage is said to be collusive. Its existence and decree-holder's allegation about it will be notified at the time of the sale which comes on 27th February 1933.

The decision was that this order did not fall within R. 63, but in the light of the further arguments which we have heard today we consider that the case fell within 41 Mad 985[1] and, therefore, was wrongly decided. The order amounted in effect to a refusal of the claim, as the petitioner's prayer which was in terms of R. 62 was not granted. The order which has given rise to this reference is in these words: "Petition not pressed. It is dismissed." If the petition is a petition which falls within R. 58 and the petitioner has not sought permission to withdraw it without prejudice to his rights it is obviously an order which is against him. The Court is not, however, able to answer the question because the facts are not before it. But assuming that the facts are that the petitioner personally or through his advocate merely stated that he did not press the petition the order dismissing it would be an adverse order, and we answer the question referred in this sense. The costs of the reference will be made costs in the appeal.

PANDRANG ROW AND ABDUR RAHMAN JJ.

R. Arunagiri Mudaliar — Appellant

v.

T. R. Radhakrishna Ayyar and others — Respondents.

Appeal No. 254 of 1937, Decided on 8th October 1940, against decree of Dist. Court, North Arcot, at Vellore, D/- 31st March 1937.

(a) Transfer of Property Act (1882 before amendment of 1929), S. 82 — Contribution — Meaning — Right exists between mortgagors inter se and does not affect mortgagee's power to proceed against any of mortgaged properties.

The contribution referred to in S. 82 refers to the right, in case of mortgage of several properties to secure one debt, of the person who satisfies the mortgage debt in its entirety to be indemnified by the purchasers of the other mortgaged properties according to the value of the properties purchased by them. This, however, is a right which exists between the owners of the mortgaged properties and does not affect the mortgagee's power to enforce his mortgage against all or any of the properties mortgaged to him. [P 46*c*]

(b) Transfer of Property Act (1882 before amendment of 1929), Ss. 60 and 82—Mortgagee of several properties purchasing share of equity of redemption — His right to recover money under mortgage is extinguished pro tanto unless keeping his mortgagee rights alive is found to mortgagee's benefit or mortgagee intended to keep subsequently acquired rights distinct—For determining extent to which right is extinguished value of mortgaged properties at date of mortgage should be considered.

The words "remaining due" in S. 60 are, to some extent, misleading and must not be taken too literally. The right of a mortgagee of several properties to recover his money under the mortgage, is, on his purchasing the equity of redemption in one of the properties mortgaged with him, extinguished pro tanto, i.e., he can recover only a proportionate part of the amount due on the mortgage, that is to say, the portion of the debt which bears the same relation to the whole amount of the debt as the value of the property not purchased bears to the value of the whole of the properties comprised in the mortgage, unless it is found that it was to the benefit of the mortgagee to keep his mortgagee rights alive or that he declared his intention either expressly or by necessary implication that he would keep his subsequently acquired rights distinct from his prior mortgagee rights. Although S. 82 does not in terms apply to a mortgagee who happens to acquire a share of the equity of redemption the general rule laid down therein applies and therefore for the purpose of determining the extent to which the mortgagee's right to recover the money under his mortgage has been extinguished by his purchasing the equity of redemption in some of the properties mortgaged to him, the value of the mortgaged properties as they existed on the date of the mortgage should be considered and not the value as it existed on the date on which some of the mortgaged properties were purchased by the mortgagee, the date of the institution of the suit being entirely immaterial : ('28) 15 A I R 1928 Rang 266, Approved; ('20) 7 A I R 1920 Mad 375 (F B), Expl.; 26 Bom 88, Held obiter and not approved. [P 46*h*; P 47*a*,b,c,d,g]

(c) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 70 — Applicability — S. 70 does not apply to mortgagee purchasing share of equity of redemption and suing to enforce his mortgage.

Under S. 70 the mortgagee is entitled to the benefit of accession to the mortgaged property, "for purpose of the security" only and therefore S. 70 cannot apply to the case of a mortgagee who has purchased a share of the equity of redemption and sues to enforce his mortgage. [P 47*e*]

C. Padmanabha Ayyangar — for Appellant.

P. Viswanatha Aiyar, V. N. Srinivasa Rao and T. E. Ramabhadrachariar — for Respondents.

Abdur Rahman J. — This appeal arises out of a suit for the recovery of Rs. 5100, being the principal and interest due under a mortgage deed Ex. A dated 12th February 1916 executed by defendant 1 (who died during the pendency of the suit) in favour of the plaintiff. Twenty-two items of property were covered by the mortgage out of which items 1 to 3 belonged to defendant 1 originally and items 4 to 22 belonged to another person—one Ramachandra Iyer. Out of these nineteen items of property, seven items (i.e., items 4 to 10) were mortgaged with a Venkateswara Iyer. Ramachandra Iyer sold all the items that he owned (i.e., items 4 to 22) to defendant 1 in 1912 subject to Venkateswara Iyer's mortgage and defendant 1 mortgaged all the properties which he owned (i.e., items 1 to 22) for Rs. 5000 with the plaintiff under Ex. A. A second mortgage for Rs. 2500 in respect of items 4 to 22 was created by defendant 1 in favour of the plaintiff in 1918. This was not discharged and the plaintiff instituted a suit (O. S. No. 11 of 1922) in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Vellore for the recovery of the amount due to him under the latter mortgage. It was decreed and equity of redemption of items 11 to 22 was sold in execution and purchased by defendant 3 for Rs. 104 on 31st August 1925 subject to the first mortgage Ex. A. It has been found by the Court below and the finding has not been challenged before us, that defendant 3 was merely a benamidar and that the property was really purchased in auction by the plaintiff himself. At about this time items 4 to 10 which were mortgaged with Venkateswara Iyer were brought to sale in execution of the decree obtained by him on his mortgage and were purchased before 1925 by him. Since he was a prior mortgagee, these items of property passed out of the story.

Defendant 1 filed an insolvency application later (I. P. No. 32 of 1926) and was adjudicated on 6th September 1927. The Official Receiver of Vellore sold items 1 to 3 of the property in 1932 without disclosing the plaintiff's incumbrance. Out of these three items, two (i.e., items 1 and 3) were purchased by defendant 6 and the remaining item 2 by defendant 7 in the name of defendant 8. The present suit was instituted by the plaintiff for the recovery of the amount due under his mortgage dated 12th February 1916 (Ex. A). This was decreed but to a very small extent. The learned District Judge of North Arcot, who passed this decree, held that inasmuch as the plaintiff had purchased items 11 to 22 of the property benami in the name of defendant 3, he was liable to contribute, under S. 82, T. P. Act, to defendants 6 to 8. Since it was admitted by the parties before the trial Court that the value of items 4 to 10 as compared to items 11 to 22 be taken in the proportion of 2 : 11 and the value of these 19 items of property was at the time of the second mortgage in 1918 found to be Rs. 12,000 and that of items 1 to 3 at the time of the first mortgage in 1916 to be Rs. 500 only, the claim was decreed for Rs. 203-15-2 for principal and for Rs. 44-5-0 in respect of interest against these defendants. The rest of the claim was dismissed. Not being satisfied with the decree the plaintiff has preferred the present appeal.

It appears that defendant 6 made certain improvements on the property purchased by him and one of the grounds urged on behalf of the appellant before us is that the lower Court was wrong in ignoring the subsequent accession to the mortgaged property and depriving the plaintiff of the advantage which he would get under S. 70, T. P. Act, which entitled him to such accession for the purpose of his security. This is, however, a minor complaint, as it deals only with the value of security and not with the amount which is recoverable by the plaintiff. The main point which has been urged by the learned counsel for the appellant before us is that in so far as the suit was not by a mortgagor for contribution but by a mortgagee for the recovery of his money by the sale of the mortgaged property, the lower Court was wrong in applying S. 82, T. P. Act, and in assessing the value of the various mortgaged properties as it prevailed at the time when they were mortgaged with the plaintiff in 1916 and in 1918. The appellant's contention is that he could not have been debited for anything more than the proportionate value of the items of property (11 to 22) purchased by him as found to be prevailing either on the date on which he instituted the present suit or on the date when he purchased these items of property but in no case on the date on which these properties were mortgaged with him. Learned counsel for the respondent contends, on the other hand, that although the plaintiff was originally a mortgagee, he has, by his subsequent purchase of items 11 to 22 come to occupy the mortgagor's position qua the items that he has purchased and would thus be liable to contribute on the principle contained in S. 82, T. P. Act. Since it has been held that the value of the property in a case of contribution under this section has to be taken with reference to the date on which the mortgage was executed, it has been urged on behalf of the respondent that the value of the property as existing on the date of the mortgage was correctly taken by the trial

a Court as a basis for its decision. The narrative of facts makes it clear that the law applicable to the facts of this case will be what was in force before the amendment of the Transfer of Property Act in 1929. Section 82, T. P. Act, before the amendment read as follows :

> Where several properties, whether of one or several owners, are mortgaged to secure one debt, such properties are, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, liable to contribute rateably to the debt secured by the mortgage, after deducting from the value of each property the amount of any other incumbrance to which it is subject at the date of the mortgage.

b This section embodied the well recognized principle that a property which is equally liable with the other property to pay a debt shall not escape because the creditor has been paid out of the other property alone and must rateably bear the burden of a mortgage. As the mortgage debt is indivisible and if several properties are hypothecated to a creditor and have passed to different purchasers subsequently, a creditor is, as a rule, entitled to proceed against all the properties that were mortgaged with him, the only way to satisfy the mortgagee would be to tender the whole amount due under the mortgage.
c In such a case, it is only just that the person who satisfies the mortgage debt in its entirety should be indemnified by the purchasers of the other mortgaged properties and no fairer rule can be suggested than that each of the purchasers should contribute according to the value of the property purchased by him. This, however, is a right which exists between the owners of the mortgaged properties and does not affect the mortgagee's power to enforce his mortgage against all or any of the properties mortgaged to him. The contribution referred to in S. 82, T. P. Act, refers to this right and is applicable between the mortgagors inter se.
d If this is correct, strictly speaking, it would have no application to the present case which is not a suit by a mortgagor or a purchaser from a mortgagor in which any relief to contribution is asked for; but is plainly a suit by the plaintiff for the enforcement of the mortgage in his favour. It may be argued and in fact it was suggested by the learned counsel for the respondents that the plaintiff, although primarily a mortgagee, has, on account of his purchase of a part of the mortgaged property, placed himself in the mortgagor's shoes to the extent of the property purchased by him and the present suit must, consequently, be regarded as one not only by a mortgagee but by a representative
e of the mortgagor as well. This, however, is not quite correct, in our opinion. The present suit is for sale and it is impossible for a mortgagor to bring a suit for that purpose. It may be that in these circumstances some other principle of law is attracted and in construing the equities to which the mortgagor may be entitled, the principle of S. 82 may have to be borne in mind, but that is really a different matter. Reliance was placed on the other hand, by the learned counsel for the appellant on the last para of S. 60, T. P. Act, which reads as follows :

> Nothing in this section shall entitle a person interested in a share only of the mortgaged pro- f perty to redeem his own share only, on payment of a proportionate part of the amount remaining due on the mortgage, except only where a mortgagee, or if there are more mortgagees than one, has or have acquired, in whole or in part, the share of a mortgagor.

This part of the section provides for the only exception in which a portion of the mortgaged property could be redeemed the general rule being, as stated before, that a mortgage was indivisible. This part of the section, as is clear from its language, provides, for redemption of a property by the mortgagor and would have ordinarily no g bearing on a suit by the mortgagee for sale of the property. But since according to the provisions of this section, a mortgagor or a person interested in a share only of the mortgaged property is entitled, after the integrity of the mortgage is broken up by a mortgagee purchasing a portion of the mortgaged property or the equity of redemption therefor, to redeem his own share on payment of a proportionate part of the amount remaining due on the mortgage, it has a greater bearing on the present case than S. 82. If the mortgagor or a person interested in a share only of the mortgaged property is entitled to redeem his share on payment of a certain
h amount, it may be contended and the contention would be sound in our opinion that the mortgagee who has purchased a share of the equity of redemption can only sue for the recovery of the balance of the amount and not for the entire amount which was due to him under the mortgage. The principle, which is applicable to cases of this character, is that if a mortgagee happens to purchase a portion of the mortgaged property there would be a merger and extinction of liability under the mortgage to that extent unless it is found that it was to the benefit of the mortgagee to keep his mortgagee rights alive or that he declared his intention either expressly or by necessary implication that he would keep his subsequently acquired rights distinct from his prior rights which he held as a mortgagee. Applying this principle therefore we are of opinion that in the absence of any other circumstances such as we have mentioned above, it must be held that the plaintiff's right to recover his money under the mortgage, was, on his purchasing the equity of redemption in a portion of the property mortgaged with him extinguished pro tanto; or in other words, he remained entitled to recover only a proportionate part of the amount due on the mortgage, that is to say, the portion of the debt which bears the same relation to the whole amount of the debt as the value of the property not purchased bears to the value of the whole of the properties comprised in the mortgage. The words "remaining due" in the section are, to some extent, misleading and must not be taken too literally.

The question then is as to the date on which this value of the property has to be calculated; or in other words, whether we have to take the value of the mortgaged property as it existed on the date of the mortgage into consideration or the value as it existed on the date on which a portion of the mortgaged property was purchased by the plaintiff, the date of the institution of the suit being, in our opinion, entirely immaterial. There is an observation at p. 98 by Candy J., in 26 Bom 88[1] that the value of the property would apparently be the value at the time of the purchase of the equity of redemption in part of the mortgaged property; but this, as pointed out in 6 Rang 417,[2] was obiter and not required for the decision of that case. It is true that in 43 Mad 372[3] the value actually taken into consideration was the value which was found to be existing three years after the date of the purchase; but there is nothing in that case to show that the value was any different either on the date of the mortgage or on the date when the property was purchased and this point was not in any case considered there.

Learned counsel for the appellant contends that since he is entitled to the benefit of any accession to the mortgaged property, the value should be calculated as at the date of his purchase for if that is not done, we would be, according to him, ignoring the principle enunciated in S. 70, T. P. Act. This argument, however, ignores the words used in the section which are to the effect that the mortgagee is entitled to the benefit of accession to the mortgaged property, "for purpose of the security" only. Section 70 cannot therefore render any assistance in the decision of this question. There is nothing in the last clause of S. 60 which would point to the conclusion that the value of the property has got to be taken into consideration as it existed on the date of the plaintiff's purchase although undoubtedly the person interested in a share only of the mortgaged property can redeem his share only on payment of a proportionate part of the amount remaining due on the mortgage. It is not clearly stated in that section, however, as to how this proportionate amount is to be calculated? Nor are we able to discover any reason why two different principles should be adopted in calculating the proportionate amount as between mortgagors inter se or as between a mortgagee who has purchased the equity of redemption of a portion of the mortgaged property and the mortgagor or any other person who may be interested in the other share of the mortgaged property. It seems to us that although S. 82 may not in terms apply, to a case like the present, it lays down a general rule and the last clause of S. 60 is an instance of the application of this rule to a mortgagee who happens to acquire a share of the equity of redemption. The right to contribution (to use the expression in a general sense) comes into being after all when more properties than one are mortgaged although it may not be capable of being enforced until the mortgagee has recovered his dues from one property or until, as in this case, a portion of liability under the mortgage is extinguished by the mortgagee purchasing a share of the equity of redemption. Once such a right becomes capable of being enforced between mortgagors inter se or what may be regarded as an equivalent of the same right as between a mortgagee who has acquired a share of the equity of redemption and the other persons interested in ths equity of redemption of the rest of the property, we should in either case on the principle recognized in S. 82, T. P. Act, look back to the value of the various properties as they existed on the date of the mortgage and abstain from considering the subsequent increase or decrease in their value. This rule has, in our opinion, the merit of certainty and the persons who are interested in the equity of redemption of one or more of the mortgaged properties, know the extent of their liability at the time of their purchase and have not to depend on the whims or fancies of a subsequent intending purchaser of a share of the equity of redemption in some of the properties mortgaged be it by a mortgagor or by any one else.

We are thus, in the absence of any other specific provision either in S. 60 or anywhere else, constrained for the above stated reasons to hold that the principle underlying S. 82 should be held to apply to cases of this kind and the mortgagee should not by his purchase be permitted to improve his position and should be treated in the same manner as a stranger would have been if he happened to purchase the property. After all by purchasing a share of the equity of redemption, the mortgagee has chosen to stand in his mortgagor's shoes to that extent and it is only to avoid a multiplicity of suits that the exact amount to which he is entitled has to be ascertained in the present suit. The decision in 6 Rang 417[2] is not opposed to the conclusion at which we have arrived. It must be remembered that the provisions of S. 82 were and are to be applied in the absence of a contract to the contrary and from the circumstances existing in the Rangoon case it is apparent that the parties intended that the property which was not actually built but which was going to be built should be covered by the mortgage which was created.

We must, for the foregoing reasons, hold that the method adopted by the lower Court in arriving at the figure to which it did was, in view of the admissions made by the parties before it, correct. The finding in regard to the value of the mortgaged properties in 1916 and 1918 was not contested before us and having regard to the admission by the parties before the lower Court that the value of the properties of items 1 to 10 when compared with the value of items 11 to 22 be calculated in the proportion of 2:11, the conclusion arrived at by the lower Court is inevitable. The lower Court has, however, made a small mistake in calculation. The proportionate liability of items 1 and 3 would be $\frac{400 \times 6120\text{-}1\text{-}0}{10654}$ and similarly the liability for item 2 would be Rs. $\frac{100 \times 6120\text{-}1\text{-}0}{10654}$. Bearing the principle contained in S. 70, T. P. Act, in mind, the plaintiff's security must be held to extend to the whole of the property purchased by defendant 6 along with the improvements effected thereupon but inasmuch as the amount decreed in favour of the plaintiff has been, we understand, deposited in Court, this direction would not confer any advantage on him. The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed. The respondents will have their costs of the appeal.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 633 and Petn. No. 594 of 1940, Decided on 27th November 1940, to revise judgment of Court of Joint Magistrate, Kumbakonam, D/- 11th April 1940.

Madras Prevention of Adulteration Act (3 of 1918 as amended by Act 19 of 1935), S. 16 (5)— Sample in fact analyzed by Government Analyst — Magistrate is not bound to send it again to Government Analyst under S. 16 (5).

Where the sample has in fact been analyzed by the Government Analyst it is not incumbent upon the Magistrate to send it again to the Government Analyst under S. 16 (5). [P49*a*]

S. Swaminathan and S. Nagaraja Ayyar — for Petitioners.

N. Somasundaram for Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

FACTS. — The two appellants were convicted of offences under S. 5 (1) (b) and (4) of the Madras Act, 3 of 1918 and under R. 28 of the rules. The Sanitary Inspector purchased ghee from A-2 who was selling it in the shop of A-1. The ghee was certified by the Government Analyst to contain fat not derived from milk or cream to an extent of at least 15 per cent. It was also contended in the lower appellate Court that that Court did not comply with the request of the accused to send the same to the Government Analyst for analysis. The lower appellate Court held that there is no provision in the Act for the Court to do so and it was for the appellants to take whatever steps were necessary for the conduct of their defence and not for the Court to help it in doing so. There was no right under the proviso to S. 16 (5) available to the appellants for the simple reason that there was no separate public analyst for the municipality inquisition and the proviso only applied when there is a separate public analyst as distinct from the Government Analyst. It was for the appellants to adduce evidence in the lower Court to show that the sample sent by P. W. 1 to the Government Analyst was not the sample ghee sold by him and this he could have done by sending the sealed part of the purchased ghee given to him by the Sanitary Inspector. Against this decision the present criminal revision petition is filed.

Order. — The sample was in fact analyzed by the Government Analyst, and it was not incumbent on the Magistrate to send it again to the Government Analyst under S. 16, cl. (5), Madras Prevention of Adulteration Act, 1918. There is therefore no ground for interference with the conviction of the petitioners and the sentence of petitioner 1 is not excessive. But petitioner 2 is the servant and his fine is excessive. The fine of petitioner 2 is therefore reduced to Rs. 5 and otherwise this petition is dismissed.

WADSWORTH AND SOMAYYA JJ.

Prisoner — Accused.

Referred Trial No. 59 and Criminal Appeal No. 233 of 1941, Decided on 23rd July 1941, referred by Court of Session, Kurnool Division, D/- 14th March 1941.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 24, 21—Confession is relevant without formal proof of voluntary nature by prosecution.

The wording of S. 24 suggests that unless it appears to a Court that an inducement, threat or promise was held out by a person in authority, a confession would be relevant under S. 21, without any formal proof of the voluntary nature of the statement, and it has certainly not been the practice of the Courts of the Madras Presidency to require from the prosecution formal evidence that the statement was voluntary. There is always cross-examination on this point and the accused is always questioned by the Court about his confession. It is customary for the Court to consider the suggestions made in cross-examination and the statement of the accused and for the Court then to decide whether there is anything in those suggestions or in the evidence which would lead it to suspect that the confession was not voluntary. [P 55b,c]

(On evidence Horwill J. agreeing with Wadsworth J.; Somayya J. dissenting, held that the confession was voluntary and hence it was not incumbent on the prosecution to let in further evidence of the absence of threats, promises or inducements leading to the confession. [P 50g; 55e]

(b) Evidence Act (1872), S. 24 — Person making confession of his guilt—There is no presumption that he had done so under pressure exerted on him (Per Horwill J.).

It is frequently assumed that a person would not make a confession of his guilt which would be prejudicial to his interest unless some pressure were exerted on him. But it is not correct. For a man who has committed a grave crime—unless he is a hardened offender—has an overwhelming desire to unburden himself and share with somebody his terrible secret. If he thinks of the consequences of his conviction, fear of them will act in restraint of his natural impulse to confess. At the moment of his arrest, the ordinary accused feels that the game is up and that it is futile to attempt to try to conceal his guilt any longer. [P 55e,f]

(c) Evidence Act (1872), S. 27—S. 27 whether affected by S. 162, Criminal P. C.

(Per Horwill J.; Somayya J., doubting)—Voluntary confessions made to a police officer are admissible if they satisfy the conditions laid down in S. 27, Evidence Act, despite the provisions of S. 162, Criminal P. C. [P 55g]

(Per Somayya J.)—The question whether S. 27, Evidence Act, has been altogether abrogated by S. 162, Criminal P. C., ought to be set at rest by the Central Legislature without leaving the matter in a state of confusion. [P 54c]

(d) Criminal trial—Evidence—Disinterested witnesses not coming forward at earliest opportunity and informing police — Merely on this their evidence should not be rejected.

Unfortunately, witnesses are almost always unwilling to speak and thereby risk the enmity of the accused and his friends and put themselves to great inconvenience unless they are personally interested. Hence the mere fact that witnesses who are absolutely disinterested did not inform the police at the earliest opportunity that they had seen something connected with the murder but waited for a day before they told the police is no ground for rejecting their evidence. [P 56b]

N. T. Raghunathan and K. S. Jayaram — for Prisoner.

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

Wadsworth J. — The appellant has been sentenced to death for the murder of Papanna on the night of 6th November 1940. As the learned Sessions Judge observes, the case against the appellant depends substantially on his own confessional statement, corroborated by the recovery of incriminating articles as a result of that statement. The main question is whether this statement was rightly admitted and made the basis of his conviction, having regard to the provisions of Ss. 24 and 27, Evidence Act.

Papanna was murdered when he was asleep at night and no one saw it being done. The complaint mentioned seven suspects, including the appellant and his co-accused, but this was evidently mere guesswork. The Sub-Inspector arrived on the 7th, and on the 8th he secured the evidence of P. W. 7 that on the night of the murder as he was coming home from the fields he had seen the two accused sitting on the sluice of the tank (some distance from the place of the murder) and had spoken to them and that the appellant had an axe, while accused 2 had a a spear. The witness saw nothing suspicious in their appearance or conduct. Apparently as a result of this information, the Sub-Inspector (who appears to have taken no action on the vague suspicions in the complaint) deputed constables to arrest the two accused. Those constables are not witnesses. On the morning of the 9th, when the Sub-Inspector was at the chawadi with the village munsif and others, the appellant was produced by the constables and was formally arrested and questioned by the Sub-Inspector. In response to these questions he is alleged to have at once confessed that he and accused 2 had murdered Papanna and b that he had thrown his axe into the tank and had hidden his bloodstained clothes in a pot in his house. He then produced the bloodstained clothes from their hiding place and the axe from the water of the tank. As was to be expected, the weapon bore no certifiable trace of blood, but the clothes were stained with human blood. After these recoveries, the constables produced accused 2 (who had been given the benefit of the doubt by the lower Court). He was also arrested and questioned and stated that he had hidden his spear in the fodder in his manger. This was produced and was found to be c bloodstained, but the Imperial Serologist could not say whether or not it was stained with human blood.

On the 9th, the Sub-Inspector also secured the evidence of P. W. 8, who has deposed that on the night of the crime he met the two accused at about midnight, coming away from the fields, armed with an axe and a spear. He said nothing about what he had seen till the police examined him. The Sub-Inspector in cross-examination denied that he had told either of the accused that he would be taken as an approver, denied that he told accused 2 that the appellant had confessed and repudiated a suggestion that d the accused were arrested on the 7th along with others and compelled to confess. Before the committing Magistrate, the appellant stated that his nose bled and that his clothes thus became stained, but he denied having produced those clothes from his house. He also asserted that he had been detained since the 7th afternoon and had been beaten by the police in order to make him confess, but that he had made no statement. Accused 2 also denied having produced the spear and asserted that he had been beaten. In the Sessions Court the appellant added that P. Ws. 7 and 8 were false witnesses and that he never had the axe.

On this evidence it is contended that e there is a serious doubt as to the voluntary nature of the appellant's confessional statement, which the prosecution ought to have removed by positive evidence ; and that in any case this confession is retracted and is substantially uncorroborated. The argument is that something must have preceded the confession and that the prosecution have not discharged the duty laid upon them of proving that the confession was not induced in an objectionable manner. It seems to me that this argument overlooks the nature of the appellant's own statements. He has not alleged that he was induced to confess by violence or promises. His case was that f though he was beaten he did not confess at all and did not produce the incriminating articles. It is true that the Sub-Inspector was asked questions which seem to suggest that the confessions were improperly induced, but these suggestions are difficult to reconcile with the appellant's own denial that he made the statements and produced the articles. Two witnesses have corroborated the police evidence that the confessions were voluntary. There is no evidence to support the assertions that the accused were arrested on the 7th, nor does this seem likely. There is no evidence that the accused g were beaten. There can be no doubt that the appellant did produce the bloodstained clothes. There is only his own assertion as to the way in which they came to be stained with blood and this explanation is inconsistent with the fact that they were hidden. There is no explanation of the circumstance that he produced the battle axe from the water of the tank. The appellant having contented himself with a complete denial of the incriminating statements and conduct, I do not think that it was incumbent on the prosecution to let in further evidence of the absence of threats, promises or inducements h leading to the confession. In my opinion the appellant has been rightly convicted and sentenced. But as my learned brother has taken a different view of the evidence, the case will have to go before a third Judge.

Somayya J. — I regret that I have felt compelled to differ. The appellant has been convicted of the offence of murder and sentenced to death by the Sessions Judge of Kurnool. Two persons were charged and tried for the offence; the appellant who was accused 1 was convicted and accused 2 was acquitted. The appellant is said to have murdered one Papanna of Ulindakonda, Kurnool District, on the night of 6th November 1940, when he was sleeping alone in his field which is about 1½ miles from the village. The deceased went to the field to watch over the harvested korra crop and while asleep, he was undoubtedly killed by someone. The question is "Was it the appellant that did so?"

Enmity between the appellant and the deceased was alleged; the Judge finds that no enmity has been proved and the learned Public Prosecutor has not challenged this finding before us. The conviction rests solely on the retracted confession of the appellant which it is said is corroborated by the evidence of two witnesses, P. Ws. 7 and 8 and by the discovery of some property as the result of the confession. P. W. 3, the son of the deceased, discovered his father dead after midnight and informed his mother P. W. 4. Then a complaint EX. B was made to the village munsif at about 2 A. M.; the report of the village munsif was despatched at about 5 A. M. and reached the Kurnool Taluk Police Station at 10-30 A. M. The Sub-Inspector reached the village at 2-30 P. M. the same day. He got some information from P. W. 7 on the 8th and deputed his constables to fetch the two accused. On the 9th he examined P. W. 8 and on the same day, the appellant was brought before the Sub-Inspector and when questioned in the presence of P. W. 9 and P. W. 10, the appellant is said to have straightway confessed his crime. The confessional statement EX. D was written by P. W. 9. Accused 2 was also brought before the Sub-Inspector on the same day; in fact, the constables had been asked on the 8th to secure accused 2 also. When accused 2 appeared he was questioned by the Sub-Inspector and he is also said to have at once confessed and given a statement, EX. E. Exhibit D was recorded at 9 A. M. and EX. E at 12 noon. Exhibit D runs as follows:

> At the instigation of Obigadu, son of Boya Thimmappa, Hanumanthagadu, son of Boya Chinna Mari Yankata and I cut and killed the deceased, Boya Ullam Papanna four days ago now, on the night of Wednesday, while he was sleeping near the korra sheaves in the field. I cut and killed him with the battle axe while Hanumanthagadu cut and killed him with the spear. I threw away my battle axe in the waters of the tank (or lake) at the terminal (last) sluice, on my return trip. It is bloodstained. The white angi and the white dhoti which I had then worn were stained with blood. I have concealed that dhoti and angi in an empty mud pot, in my house, in which water is boiled. I shall get them and deliver to you.

After recording EX. D a search was made of the appellant's house and the appellant is said to have produced from a pot inside the house a white angi (a coat) and a white dhoti (cloth); these were said to contain blood marks. Then they proceeded to the tank mentioned in EX. D; the appellant is said to have produced the battle axe from underneath the water. This was at 11 A. M. (D-2). After the searches and recovery of the articles evidenced by EX. D-1, and EX. D-2, the party returned to the chavadi and all of them remained there till 12 noon when accused 2 was produced. When questioned he gave the statement EX. E which runs as follows:

> At the instigation of Boya Obigadu, Boya Chinna Papigadu and I, together, cut and killed four days ago now, on the night of Wednesday. I cut and killed with my screw spear and Chinna Papigadu cut and killed with a battle axe. (I have concealed my spear amidst (fodder) rubbish in the manger, inside my house. It is bloodstained. I shall produce it.) Chinna Papigadu threw away his battle axe that night, on our return trip, in the water of the pond (tank or lake).

After recording EX. D, a search was made for the spear; accused 2 produced a spear from his house and EX. E-1 was recorded at 1 P. M. evidencing this search. Then both accused 1 and 2 were charged with the offence of murdering Papanna. Before the committing Court, both the accused retracted their confessions. The appellant said that he had no motive to kill the deceased, that the police beat him severely and asked him to confess. He denied that the axe was his. As regards the bloodstained clothes, he said that owing to excessive heat, his nose had bled and the clothes had become bloodstained in consequence. At the trial in the Sessions Court, the accused adhered to the statements which they gave in the committing Court. The Judge acquitted accused 2 on the ground that the admissible portion of EX. E did not amount to a confession. As regards the appellant he held that the confession contained in EX. D was voluntary and that though it is a retracted confession, it is corroborated by the recovery of M. Os. 9, 10 and 11 and by the evidence of P. Ws. 7 and 8. The appellant's explanation for bloodstains on M. Os. 9 and 10 was rejected on the ground that it was inconsistent with EX. D. The Judge then referred to the evidence of P. W. 7 and P. W. 8 that the appellant was seen in the vicinity of the field where the deceased met his death on the night of the sixth and that accused 1 had been armed with a battle axe. On this evidence he convicted the appellant of the offence of murder of Papanna and sentenced him to death.

It is urged in appeal that it is unsafe to convict a person on the basis of a retracted confession, that in this case there was no motive proved for the appellant to kill the deceased, that P. W. 7 himself stated that there was nothing unusual in villagers going about with a battle axe when going in nights to watch their fields, that even if his evidence is accepted as true, there is nothing suspicious about the appellant's conduct on the previous night, that the evidence of P. W. 7 and P. W. 8 should not be accepted on the ground that their statements were available only on the eighth and ninth, i. e., two and three days after the occurrence. It is also urged that there are enough indications in the evidence to show that the confession was not voluntary.

Taking the evidence of P. W. 7 and P. W. 8 first, the evidence of P. W. 8 was available only on the 9th, i. e., on the day of the confession. Three days had elapsed and it is unsafe to rely upon the evidence which is given so late. The same remarks apply to P. W. 7 whose statement was available only on the 8th. Two days had elapsed. Neither of them had stated to anyone what they had seen on the night of the sixth even though they knew that the deceased was murdered on the night of the 6th. Their conduct is inconsistent with their having seen the appellant armed with a battle axe on the night of the 6th anywhere near the scene of the occurrence. I think it is unsafe to accept the evidence of P. W. 7 or P. W. 8. Before I go to Ex. D, we must see what happened on the 7th and 8th. P. W. 11, the Sub-Inspector of Police, Kurnool Taluk Station, came to the village on the 7th at about 2-30 P. M. In Ex. B, the wife of the deceased gave the names of seven persons as suspects. Among these are accused 1 and 2. After P. W. 11 arrived in the village, he did not take any steps to verify if these men were in the village nor even to visit the house of any of the seven persons mentioned in Ex. B. The village munsif who was examined as P. W. 9 was asked about it and he said :

> Till the arrival of the Sub-Inspector I did not take any steps to verify if these seven men were in the village. The Sub-Inspector was in the village on the 7th and 8th. Neither he nor I visited the houses of any of the seven men named in Ex. B on the 7th or 8th.

The Public Prosecutor conceded that as the Sub-Inspector was not asked in chief examination to deny what the village munsif stated, we must take it that the statement of the village munsif is true. It is said by the learned Public Prosecutor that merely on the ground that the names of these persons were given as suspects in Ex. B, their houses could not be searched. True. But that is no explanation why, as the village munsif says, steps were not taken to see whether these people were even in the village or why their houses were not even visited. According to the prosecution, what put the Sub-Inspector of Police ultimately on to accused 1 and 2 is the statement given by P. W. 7 on the 8th. P. W. 7 stated that he saw accused 1 and 2 on the night of the 6th, accused 1 with a battle axe and the 2nd with a spear. It is this information that evidently led the Sub-Inspector of Police to take action against these accused and to depute two constables to fetch them. It is strange that with the information given by P. W. 7 the Sub-Inspector did not think it worthwhile to search the houses of accused 1 or 2 but contented himself with merely deputing two constables to fetch them. He says :

> Till I deputed the constables on the 8th to arrest accused 1 and 2, I did not take any steps to apprehend any of the seven persons mentioned in Ex. B or to search their houses. I did not attempt to search the houses of accused 1 and 2 even after deputing constables on the 8th to get them. I had no reason to believe that accused 1 and 2 would confess. I thought I had no sufficient grounds to search their houses though I had decided to arrest them.

This is a curious answer. If he had sufficient grounds to arrest them, it is difficult to understand his statement that he had not sufficient grounds to search their houses. The way in which the accused are said to have confessed the moment they appeared before the Sub-Inspector and what went before lead me to suspect that everything was known to the police and that the whole thing was merely a farce of having a confession first and a search immediately thereafter to bring the case within S. 27, Evidence Act. The appellant is first produced at 9 A. M. Immediately he makes a confession, Ex. D. Then the first search is made and that is recorded at 10 o'clock. At 11 o'clock the second search was made which led to the recovery of the battle axe. At 12 noon, accused 2 is produced and he confesses immediately. Then the search of his house is made and the search report was prepared at 1 P. M. to show the recovery of the spear in consequence of information contained in Ex. E. If the prosecution evidence is true, I cannot understand why even after Ex. D in which accused 2 was very clearly implicated, his house was not searched. The searches in connexion with Ex. D were finished at 11 A. M. Then as P. W. 10 states in cross-examination, the party returned and were simply sitting until 12 noon when accused 2 was brought. P. W. 10 says :

> When we returned from the tank to the chavadi, we did not expect accused 2 to be produced . . Still we stayed on there although we had nothing specific to wait for.

There is another point taken by the appellant. It is said that the confession itself is not admissible under S. 24, Evidence Act. That section runs thus :

> A confession made by an accused person is irrelevant in a criminal proceeding, if the making of the confession appears to the Court to have been caused by any inducement, threat or promise having reference to the charge against the person, proceeding from a person in authority and sufficient in the opinion of the Court to give the accused person grounds which would appear to him reasonable, for supposing that by making it he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil of a temporal nature in reference to the proceedings against him.

The rule in England as stated in Taylor on Evidence is this, p. 872 (Edn. 12) :

> Before any confession can be received in evidence in a criminal case, it must be shown to have been voluntarily made . . . . . The rule which excludes confessions not shown to have been made voluntarily is a rule of policy. It is not that the law presumes such statements to be untrue, but that owing to the danger of receiving such evidence, Judges have thought it better to reject it.

In (1914) A C 599[1] at p. 609, the Judicial Committee observed :

> It has long been established as a positive rule of English Criminal Law, that no statement by an accused is admissible in evidence against him unless it is shown by the prosecution to have been a voluntary statement in the sense that it has not been obtained from him either by fear of prejudice or hope of advantage exercised or held out by a person in authority.

In India, however, the matter is put more elaborately in S. 24. One question that arises under S. 24 is whether it is really on the prosecution to prove that the circumstances mentioned in S. 24 do not exist or whether it is upon the accused to prove that the making of the confession was caused by inducement, threat or promise. It is no doubt true that the burden of proving facts which are specially within the knowledge of a person may be thrown upon him but having regard to the well-known principle of criminal jurisprudence recognized in (1914) A C 599,[1] I have no reason to doubt that what the Indian Legislature attempted to enact more elaborately in S. 24, Evidence Act, is that a Court must be satisfied before admitting a confession that it is free from all taint. The wording of S. 24 is "if it appears to the Court to have been caused by inducement, threat," etc., a confession is irrelevant. It is not "if it is proved to have been caused by inducement, threat or promise." As pointed out in 52 Cal 67[2] at p. 82, the Indian Legislature has deliberately used the expression "if the making of the confession appears to the Court" and not "if it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court." Therefore, if the Court has any reason to doubt the free and voluntary nature of the confession, then it is for the prosecution to prove that it was made without any of the inducements, threats or promises mentioned in this section. It is not as if there is less need for protection to an accused person in India than in England. Yet in England, the burden lies undoubtedly on the prosecution to prove that the confession was voluntary before it is admitted. I have no reason to think that the standard is less strict in India. As I said before, the Legislature seems to have endeavoured to enact the same rule in a more elaborate manner.

It is said that in this case the appellant set up the story that he was beaten by the police and that if it was true, there would have been some marks of violence on the person of the accused. As regards the argument that the accused has not proved that he was beaten, it is as in most of such cases impossible to expect him to be able to prove to the satisfaction of the Court that he was belaboured or that there are any of the infirmative circumstances mentioned in S. 24. Then it is said that what was suggested to the Sub-Inspector during the cross-examination was that some inducements were held out to the appellant in order to induce him to confess and not that he was beaten. P. W. 11 was asked whether he did not tell either of the accused that he would be taken as an approver if he confessed and he was also asked whether it was not true that accused 1 and 2 were arrested even before the ninth and compelled to make a confessional statement. There is enough suggestion in this second sentence that they were compelled and what is mentioned in the accused's statement is only an elaboration of what is taken down as compelled in the cross-examination of P. W. 11. There is nothing in the evidence of P. W. 10 to advance the case of the prosecution. There are enough materials in this case to raise a very serious doubt in my mind about the free and voluntary nature of Ex. D. I apply therefore the rule enunciated in 52 Cal 67[2] and hold that it was the duty of the prosecution to have satisfied the Court that none of the circumstances mentioned in S. 24 exist in this case and the evidence falls far short of it. On the other hand, all the circumstances point to the conclusion that very much more should have happened than what is admitted by the prosecution.

Lastly there is the fact that the accused retracted the confession and the question is whether it is safe to convict him on the strength of the retracted confession. Necessity of corroboration in a case of this kind, is recognized by all the authorities and was not seriously questioned by the public prosecutor. It is said that in this case the corroboration is to be found in the evidence of P. W. 7 and P. W. 8 and in the discovery of M. Os. 9, 10 and 11. It is unnecessary to go into this question fully in the view that I have taken on the other points. But there seems to be some force in the appellant's contention that what was discovered by reason of the information given in Ex. D ought not to be treated as corroboration of the statement made in Ex. D and that even if as P. W. 7 and P. W. 8 say, accused 1 was carrying a battle-axe which it was very common for every villager to do, then there is nothing suspicious in that act and that again would not be a corroboration of Ex. D. I would reverse the conviction and sentence and direct the appellant to be set at liberty.

Before leaving this case, I should say that the question whether S. 27, Evidence Act, has been altogether abrogated by S. 162, Criminal P. C., ought to be set at rest by the Central Legislature without leaving the matter in a state of confusion. It is enough to point out that the Lahore High Court by a majority held that it was repealed and the Local Legislature interfered in the matter. The Allahabad High Court has also held that S. 162 abrogates S. 27, Evidence Act. I am very strongly in favour of this view. Two decisions of the Madras High Court have been brought to my notice in which it has been held that S. 27 still stands in spite of S. 162, Criminal P. C., and this view has been taken by the Nagpur and Patna High Courts. It is obviously very unsatisfactory to leave the matter in this state. Advantage might be taken of this opportunity to examine the whole law of confessions and amend S. 24 so as to make it clear that before a confession is allowed to go in, the prosecution must prove that it is voluntary.

(On account of the difference in opinion of the two Judges the case was placed before Horwill J. who delivered the following judgment.)

Horwill J.—The appellant was convicted of an offence punishable under S. 302, Penal Code, by the Sessions Judge of Kurnool and sentenced to death. On a difference of opinion between Wadsworth and Somayya JJ. the appeal has been posted before me. The facts of the case have been stated in the judgments of my learned brothers and the main question that I have been asked by the learned advocate for the appellant to consider is whether the confession made by the appellant was made voluntarily. On this point Wadsworth J. held that it was and Somayya J. that it was not.

The wife of the deceased person had no information as to who had committed the murder, but because of past enmity she suspected seven persons, and amongst them were the two persons who were accused in the lower Court. No definite material was forthcoming for a day and a half or so that was sufficient to warrant the arrest of either of them; but on 8th November, the offence having taken place on the night of the 6th, P. W. 7 told the Sub-Inspector that he had seen the two accused together on the night of offence, the appellant armed with a battle axe and the other accused with a spear. As the deceased man seemed to have had his head battered in with blows from an axe and to have been stabbed with a spear, the Sub-Inspector sent two constables on the night of the 7th to arrest the accused; and they were brought to the Sub-Inspector the following morning. He then had with him the Village Magistrate and the President of the Panchayat Board to assist him in his investigation. The Sub-Inspector immediately questioned the appellant, who told him that he and the other accused had committed this offence, and that he had thrown the axe with which the offence was committed into a certain tank, and that the bloodstained clothes which he was wearing on the night of the offence had been placed in a pot inside his house. The learned advocate for the appellant contends that it was not sufficient for the prosecution to let in evidence of the questions put and the answers of the appellant; but that they were bound to show by all evidence possible that the confession was made in circumstances from which it could be conclusively deduced that the statement was voluntary. Particular reliance has been placed on a decision of the Privy Council reported in (1914) A C 599[1] in which it has been said:

a It has been established as a positive rule of English Criminal Law that no statement by an accused is admissible in evidence against him unless it is shown by the prosecution to have been a voluntary statement in the sense that it has not been obtained from him by fear of prejudice or hope of advantage exercised or held out by a person in authority.

Our own Evidence Act does not put the matter in the same way. Section 21 makes admissions relevant and says that they may be proved as against the person who makes them. Section 24 deals with an admission which amounts to a confession and adds a proviso to the ordinary rule that an admission can be proved against the person who b makes it by laying down that :

A confession made by an accused person is irrelevant if the making of the confession appears to the Court to have been caused by any inducement, threat, or promise having reference to the charge against the accused person, proceeding from a person in authority and sufficient .... to give the accused person grounds .... for supposing that by making it he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil of a temporal nature ....

This wording suggests that unless it appears to a Court that an inducement, threat, or promise was held out by a person in authority, a confession would be relevant under S. 21, Evidence Act, without any formal proof of the voluntary nature of the c statement. It has certainly not been the practice of the Courts of this Presidency to require from the prosecution formal evidence that the statement was voluntary. There is always cross-examination on this point and the accused is always questioned by the Court about his confession. It is customary for the Court to consider the suggestions made in cross-examination and the statement of the accused and for the Court then to decide whether there is anything in those suggestions or in the evidence which would lead it to suspect that the confession was not voluntary. However, this discussion d whether formal proof by the prosecution of the voluntary nature of the confession is necessary is an academic one; because P. W. 9 has set out the circumstances under which the accused was questioned; he says that a policeman brought accused 1 to the Sub-Inspector about 9 A. M. We had gathered there casually .... After arresting accused 1, the Sub-Inspector asked him 'What do you know of the death of Vullam Papanna.'

The accused's confession seems to have been an answer to that question. This is very much what happened in the Privy Council case above referred to (1914) A C 599,[1] where the officer who was the superior of the soldier charged, said to him, "Why have you done such a senseless act"? to which the accused e replied, "Some three or four days he has been abusing me. Without a doubt I killed him." That statement was held to be a voluntary one; and I see no reason for holding that the statement in the present case was not made voluntarily. It is probably true that the Sub-Inspector preferred obtaining information from the accused rather than by searching his house; but that does not in any way cast any doubt on the voluntary nature of the confession made. It is frequently assumed that a person would not make a confession of his guilt which would be prejudicial to his interest unless some pressure were exerted on him. I do not be- f lieve this to be the case. A man who has committed a grave crime—unless he is a hardened offender—has an overwhelming desire to unburden himself and share with somebody his terrible secret. If he thinks of the consequences of his conviction, fear of them will act in restraint of his natural impulse to confess. At the moment of his arrest, the ordinary accused feels that the game is up and that it is futile to attempt to try to conceal his guilt any longer. Even in cases in which no confession of the accused is tendered in evidence, because it does not lead to any discovery, a perusal of the records frequently shows that some sort of g a confessional statement is made. There is nothing in the evidence in this case which suggests that the appellant was detained and questioned for a considerable time before he made his statement. The evidence is in fact to the contrary.

That voluntary confessions made to a police officer are admissible if they satisfy the conditions laid down in S. 27, Evidence Act, despite the provisions of S. 162, Criminal P. C., has been held consistently by this Court over a long course of years. If the statement made by the appellant was voluntary, as I hold it was, there can be little doubt h of the truth of his confession. As a result of it the axe was found in a tank, and it is unlikely that it would have been found had it not been for the confession. Further, certain clothes stained with human blood were found in the house of the appellant, which he said in his confession were worn by him at the time of the murder. The evidence of P. Ws. 7 and 8 is also corroborative of the confessional statement; for they saw the two accused persons on the night of the offence not far from the scene of offence, armed with instruments similar to those with which the appellant says they committed the murder. The medical evidence shows that such weapons could have caused all the injuries found on the body of the deceased. P. Ws. 7 and 8 are unconnected either with the appellant or with the deceased; and it is difficult to believe that they would be willing to say that they saw the accused armed with an axe and a spear respectively near the scene of offence on the night when the offence was committed unless they had actually seen them. If it were customary for witnesses to come forward at the very first opportunity and tell the police that they had seen something connected with the murder then the value of the evidence of P. Ws. 7 and 8 would be seriously diminished by their failure to inform the police at the earliest opportunity. P. W. 7 waited a day or so before he told the Sub-Inspector what he knew and then probably spoke only because he was questioned, whilst P. W. 8 probably did not come forward with information until after the appellant had made his confession. Unfortunately, witnesses are almost always unwilling to speak and thereby risk the enmity of the accused and his friends and put themselves to great inconvenience unless they are personally interested. There is nothing improbable in this evidence of these witnesses. They are absolutely disinterested and so there is no reason why their evidence should not be accepted.

I therefore agree with Wadsworth J. that the appellant was properly convicted of the offence with which he was charged. A strong plea has been made for the modification of the sentence; but I do not find any circumstances that extenuate the crime of the appellant. The murder was apparently a deliberate one, committed in cold blood while the deceased was lying in his field. The side of his head was crushed by repeated blows with a weapon such as the axe used by the appellant, which shows that these blows must have been delivered while the deceased was lying on the ground. The conviction and sentence are therefore confirmed and the appeal dismissed.

WADSWORTH AND PATANJALI SASTRI JJ.

Sree Rajah Velugoti Navaneetha Krishna Yachendra Bahadur Varu—Petitioner

v.

Sirigiri Ramanujulu Chetty—Respdt.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 1329 of 1939, Decided on 12th March 1941, to revise order of Special Deputy Collector, Chandragiri Division, D/- 12-1-1939.

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), Ss. 15 and 3 (4)—Scope of S. 15—Agraharam in Kalahasti zamindari—Zamindar must be regarded as "landholder" of agraharam — Fact of proprietor of agraharam also being regarded as landholder by virtue of amending Act 18 of 1936 does not affect zamindar's position as landholder of agraharam—Jodi payable by proprietor of agraharam to zamindar comes within purview of S. 15.

The scope of the relief intended to be afforded by S. 15 must be determined with reference to the wider definition of rent contained in S. 3 (4) and not to the definition in the Madras Estates Land Act. The operation of S. 15 is not confined to cases arising between landlord and tenant under the Madras Estates Land Act. [P 58*d*,e]

In the case of an agraharam in Kalahasti zamindari continuing as before the permanent settlement to be held on an under tenure under the zamindar, the zamindar must be regarded as the owner, and therefore the "landholder" of the village. The fact that by virtue of the amending Act, 18 of 1936 the proprietor of the agraharam has also to be regarded as a "landholder" does not affect the position of the zamindar as a landholder in respect of that village. The definition of a landholder clearly contemplates a plurality of landholders. The relation between the zamindar and the proprietor of the agraharam is one of owner and an under tenure holder and there is nothing incongruous in holding that both of them are "landholders" as defined in the Madras Estates Land Act. The jodi payable by the proprietor of the agraharam to the zamindar being payable to a landholder of an estate comes within the purview of S. 15, Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act : C. R. Ps. P. V. Rajamannar and K. Subba Rao — for Petitioner.

N. C. Subbiah — for Respondent.

Patanjali Sastri J.—This civil revision petition arises out of an application filed by the respondent in the Court of the Special Deputy Collector, Chandragiri, under S. 15 (4), Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act. In order to obtain the benefits of the Act, the respondent who is the proprietor of Muddumudi village, an agraharam situated in the Kalahasti zamindari, paid into Court rupees 21-12-2 being the jodi alleged to be due to the petitioner herein, who is the representative in interest of the zamindar, and prayed for a declaration that the "rent" due for fasli 1347 had been fully paid up. The petitioner pleaded that the jodi payable by the respondent was not "rent" as defined by S. 3 (4) of the Act and that therefore the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the application. This objection was overruled by the Court below and the only question for determination in this civil revision petition is whether the petitioner's contention is correct. The term "rent" is defined for the purposes of the Act as meaning not only rent as defined by the Madras Estates Land Act, but also quit rent, jodi, kattubadi, poruppu or the like payable to the landholder of an estate as defined by the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908, whether a decree, or order of a civil or revenue Court has been obtained therefor or not.

The Madras Estates Land Act as amended by the Madras Act, 18 of 1936, contains the following definitions (so far as they are material here) :

Section 3 (2) (d)—Estate means any inam village of which the grant has been made, confirmed or recognized by the British Government, notwithstanding that subsequent to the grant, the village has been partitioned among the grantees or the successors-in-title of the grantee or grantees.

(5) "Landholder" means a person owning an estate or part thereof and includes every person entitled to collect the rents of the whole or any portion of the estate by virtue of any transfer from the owner or his predecessors-in-title or of any order of a competent Court or of any provision of law.

The petitioner's contention is that the agraharam in question is an estate and the respondent and not the petitioner is the "landholder" thereof, and that therefore the jodi due from the respondent is not "payable to the landholder of an estate" as there could not be two "landholders" in respect of the same "estate." Now, an agraharam is a village granted to a community of Brahmins by former rulers or zamindars either absolutely rent-free in which case it is called sarva agraharam or on condition of paying annually a fixed sum which is variously called jodi, poruppu or kattubadi. At the time of permanent settlement of zamindaris in this Presidency, such villages were excluded from the assets of the zamindari for the purpose of fixing the peishcush or assessment payable by the zamindar to the Government, the jodi payable to him being alone included. The result of this was that such villages were thereafter regarded as held by the agraharamdars under the Government and subject to its right of resumption on valid grounds, and they were dealt with on that footing at the time of the subsequent inam settlement when they were "enfranchised" by the Government relinquishing its right of reversion in lieu of a fixed annual payment called "quit rent." The jodi, however, continued to be payable to the zamindar as before but it was no longer indicative of the zamindar's ownership and the agraharamdar's undertenure of the village. This was why such a village was held not to fall under cl. (e) of S. 3 (2), Madras Estates Land Act, which included in the definition of estate villages held on a permanent undertenure in permanently settled zamindaris : see 21 M L J 659.[1] This is not, however, the position in respect of agraharam villages in the Kalahasti zamindari. As pointed out by the Privy Council in 48 I A 415=44 Mad 864,[2] the permanent settlement of what were known as the four western zamindaris, namely Venkatagiri, Kalahasti, Bomvauzepalam and Karvetnagar, was not made in accordance with the practice described above which was prescribed by the Permanent Settlement Regulation (25 of 1802), but was made on quite different lines independently of the provisions of the regulation; that is to say, the peishcush was not based upon a computation of the assets of these zamindaris after excluding lakhiraj or revenue free lands and other lands paying only small quit rents or jodis but was fixed on the basis of a commutation of the military service subject to which the zamindaris were originally held.

The agraharams and other inam villages were thus not excluded from the zamindaris by the settlement and it was for this reason that their Lordships held in the case referred to above that the Government had no right of reversion in such inams comprised in the Venkatagiri zamindari. The position therefore is that the agraharam here in question which is in Kalahasti zamindari continued as before the permanent settlement to be held on an undertenure under the zamindar whose right has now become vested in the petitioner. In such circumstances, we can see no reason why the petitioner should not still be regarded as the owner, and therefore the "landholder" of the village. The fact that by virtue of the amending Act 18 of 1936 the respondent has also to be regarded as a "landholder" does not affect the position of the petitioner as a landholder in respect of that village. The definition of a landholder clearly contemplates a plurality of landholders by making express provision for settlement of disputes that may arise in such cases. The relation between the petitioner and the respondent is thus one of owner and an under-tenure holder, just as it would be if the zamindar had made a post-settlement grant of the village as an agraharam, and there is nothing incongruous in holding that both of them are "landholders" as defined in the Madras Estates Land Act.

The jodi payable by the respondent to the petitioner being thus payable to a landholder of an estate comes within the purview of S. 15, Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act. Our attention was drawn to the decision of Pandrang Row J. in C. R. Ps. Nos. 205 to 209, 246 to 249, 459 and 460 of 1939 where the learned Judge held that jodi payable by certain inamdars of whole inam villages lying within the Shulagiri zamindari was not "rent" as defined in Madras Act, 4 of 1938 and did not therefore attract the application of S. 15 (1) thereof. The learned Judge observed :

> It being clear that the petitioners themselves are the landholders in respect of these villages, they cannot rely on any payments made by themselves to the zamindar as payments made to the landholder. It follows, therefore, that S. 15 (1) does not apply to the petitioners.

It does not appear how the villages were dealt with at the time of the settlement and if, as in the general case, they were excluded from the assets of the zamindari, the decision would be correct. But, as already pointed out, the position in the present case is entirely different and the decision referred to does not assist the petitioner. A recent decision of Abdur Rahman J. reported in (1940) 1 M L J 369[3] was also brought to our notice. It related to amounts payable to an inamdar of a whole village by holders of minor inams comprised therein for water charges and land cess. The learned Judge referred to the definition of rent in the Madras Estates Land Act and held, in the light of that definition, that > if the jural relationship between the parties is not that of the landlord and tenant S. 15, Madras Agriculturists Relief Act, or R. 6 (1) would have no application.

This view overlooks the definition of rent in the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act which plainly includes "quit rent, jodi, kattubadi, poruppu or the like payable to the landholder of an estate," which are not included in the definition in the Madras Estates Land Act and it is obvious that the scope of the relief intended to be afforded by S. 15, Agriculturists Relief Act, must be determined with reference to the wider definition contained therein. It was said that the reference to a "holding" in the proviso to S. 15 (1) militated against this view. That term is no doubt defined in the Estates Land Act so as to denote lands held by a ryot under a single patta but there is no warrant for importing that definition into the Agriculturists Relief Act which does not define that expression. If the jodi payable to the landholder of an "estate" is rent, the person liable to pay it is a "tenant," as defined by the proviso, for the purposes of the section, and the property in respect of which such "rent" has accrued must be regarded as his "holding." We are therefore unable to agree with the observations of the learned Judge in the case cited above confining the operation of S. 15 to cases arising between landlord and tenant under the Estates Land Act. In the result, the civil revision petition fails and is dismissed with costs.

BURN AND HORWILL JJ.

In re Nadimpalli Bangaruraju and others — Prisoners — Appellants.

Referred Trial No. 39 of 1941 and Criminal Appeals Nos. 135, 136, 171 of 1941, Decided on 22nd April 1941, referred by Court of Session, East Godavari Division, D/- 12th February 1941.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), S. 155 (3)—Defence seeking to show that witness's statement in Court is contrary to what he told police officer —Proper way of contradicting witness stated— Only way to prove that statement in Court was not made to police officer is to ask police officer himself in witness box — Reference to police diary for that purpose is useless — Witness's statement in case diary—Use of diary to contradict witness how far permissible stated.

Where the defence seek to show that a witness had made a statement in the Court which is contrary to what he had told a police officer, the proper way of contradicting him is to ask the police officer whether that was so and to permit if necessary the filing of such portions of the record in the case diary as will support the police officer's statement. Where it is alleged that the statement made by the witness in Court was not made before the police officer, it is useless to refer to the record in the police diary at all, for what is recorded therein is not intended to be a complete record of what a witness tells the police officer. It is only a resume of the statement, made by the police to facilitate their investigation. The only way to prove that the statement made in Court was not made to the police officer is to ask the police officer himself when he is in the witness box. It is improper to file the whole of the entry in the case diary of the police officer relating to the statement of a witness made in the course of investigation and to make a free use of the whole statement whether it was strictly relevant to the alleged contradiction or not. (b) Penal Code (1860), Ss. 141 and 97 — Assembly of more than five persons with common object of maintaining possession does not come within S. 141 — Accused having no right of private defence of property in their possession — They are responsible for their individual acts — But if they have that right it not only entitles them to defend land but also such other persons as they can gather to help them.

a An assembly of more than five persons with the common object of maintaining possession does not come within the definition of unlawful assembly in S. 141. If the accused had no right of private defence of the property in their possession they would be responsible for the various acts done by them individually. But if they had a right of private defence but some exceeded it that right not only entitles the accused to defend land, but also such other persons as they might have gathered there to help them to protect their rights. [P 61*b*, c]

(c) Penal Code (1860), Ss. 304 and 100 — Accused in exercise of right of private defence of property using dagger and causing death to members of other party not because of necessity but with desire of punishing other party entering upon their land — Accused exceed right of private defence and are guilty under S. 304.

b Where the accused in the exercise of their right of private defence of property use daggers and cause injuries to the members of the other party resulting in death of some of them not because they felt it necessary to use the daggers for the protection of their person or property but were actuated by the desire to punish those who tried to enter upon their land, they must be deemed to have exceeded the right of private defence and must be held to be guilty under S. 304. [P 61*e*, f]

(d) Penal Code (1860), Ss. 147 and 148 — Rioter armed with deadly weapon is punishable under S. 148 — He cannot be guilty both under S. 147 and S. 148 (Per Burn J.).

A rioter armed with a deadly weapon is punishc able under S. 148. It is not possible to find him guilty both under Ss. 147 and 148 because, however many the weapons he may be armed with, he commits only one offence of rioting in the course of the same riot. [P 62*c*, d]

K. S. Jayarama Ayyar — for Appellants.

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

Horwill J.—The eleven appellants have been sentenced to death by the Sessions Judge of Rajahmundry for having committed the murder of six persons by stabbing them to death on 21st May 1940. They have also all been convicted of rioting and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment under S. 148, Penal Code. Appellants 3, 6, 10 and 11 were further found guilty under S. 324, Penal Code, of causing hurt to P. W. 5 with dangerous weapons and sentenced each to six months rigorous imprisonment. The fight between the appellants on the one hand and the deceased persons on the other, arose out of a dispute with regard to the cultivation of a plot of land named Malayya Pampu, which belongs to P. W. 14 and his brother. It seems fairly clear from the evidence of P. Ws. 14, 13 and 5 that accused 2 and 7 had been the tenants of P. W. 14 for many years and that for most of this time they had paid no rent. P. W. 14, unable to collect any rent, adopted the plan, not at all uncommon, of trying to get rid of his tenants by leasing the land to another tenant and leaving him to do the best he could to evict the recalcitrant tenants. The person upon whom the burden fell was the first deceased; and P. W. 14 states that about 8 or 9 days before the offence, he leased the land orally to the first deceased. In his dying declaration the first deceased says that the lease was two days before the offence. However that may be, 21st May was selected as an auspicious day for ploughing this land; and P. Ws. 5 and 13 say that on the previous day the first deceased irrigated the land. The intentions of the first deceased could not be kept secret; and, on the morning of the 21st, when the first deceased took his young son P. W. 13 to Malayya Pampu to plough the land, he found accused 2 and 7 already there ploughing. These two accused were prepared for all eventualities and the other accused were sitting on the bund of that land. Accused 1, 3 to 6 and 8 are brothers of accused 2 and 7. Accused 10 and 11 are the first cousins of accused 1 to 8 and accused 9 is the brother-in-law of accused 3.

The first deceased told accused 2 and 7 that he had obtained a lease of the land from P. W. 14 and asked them to desist from ploughing and to leave the land to him. Accused 2 and 7 refused to do so and said that they had been in possession of this land for a very long time and that they had no intention of giving it up. The first deceased then said, "Don't let us quarrel about this matter. Let us consult P. W. 14." He however realized the futility of appealing to P. W. 14 and went to fetch some of his relatives, who are the other five deceased persons. All the six persons returned to the land together. After some further altercation, four of these deceased persons began to unyoke the ploughs of accused 2 and 7. Accused 1 thereupon jumped down from the bund, rushed at the deceased's party, and immediately stabbed the first and second deceased. A general fight then ensued during the course of which accused 3 stabbed the third and fifth deceased, accused 8 stabbed the fourth deceased, and accused 2 stabbed the sixth deceased. The other accused were armed with stout sticks and they caused a number of stick injuries to the deceased persons. Even after some of the injured men had fallen to the ground, the various accused beat them with sticks. At this juncture, P. W. 5 intervened and received a number of stick injuries. Accused 3 threw his knife at him and it just grazed his finger. Fearing that he too would share the fate of the other six men who had already been fatally stabbed, he ran away.

What strikes one most forcibly about this story is its reasonableness. P. Ws. 5 and 13 do not say that they were peaceably ploughing the land when they were suddenly attacked by a number of armed men. They admit that the accused persons were already ploughing the land. They admit that the first deceased went away and returned with men armed with sticks, clearly with the intention of enforcing their supposed right. They further admit that it was only after some of the deceased persons had tried to unyoke the bulls of accused 2 and 7 that they were attacked and the fight began. Although P. W. 5 apparently made no attempt to report the matter either to the village munsif, who was a brother of the first deceased, or to any of the police officers, he was examined early the following morning at the inquest, again by the Circle Inspector on the 23rd; and a day after that again he gave a statement to the Magistrate under S. 164, Criminal P. C. P. W.5's evidence is consistent, except that he did not say in his statement under S. 164, that after the deceased persons had fallen to the ground, they were further beaten with sticks. There also seems to be some suggestion here and there that there was some fighting with sticks before the fatal stabbing took place. P. W. 13, a boy of 12 years of age, speaks only to the beginning of the quarrel; for the bulls which the deceased had brought for the purpose of ploughing the land had wandered far from the field and this little boy went after them. P. W. 5 is therefore the only eye-witness of the main incidents of the fight. (After discussing the evidence, his Lordship proceeded). There were therefore undoubtedly a very large number of injuries on the persons of the deceased caused by sharp-edged weapons, and it is clear that several persons in the accused party must have been armed with knives or daggers. The evidence of P. W. 5 which has stood the test of cross-examination well and seems consistent, and which is corroborated to a considerable extent by the dying declarations, can therefore be safely accepted, especially with regard to the stabbing.

During the course of examination of P. W. 5, he was questioned with regard to the statements made by him to the Circle Inspector; and it may be pointed out in passing that the learned Sessions Judge has made improper use of these statements. Where the defence seek to show that a witness has made a statement in Court which is contrary to what he had told a police officer, the proper way of contradicting him is to ask the police officer whether that was so and to permit if necessary the filing of such portions of the record in the case diary as will support the police officer's statement. Where it is alleged that the statement made by the witness in Court was not made before the police officer, it is useless to refer to the record in the case diary at all, for what is recorded in the case diary is not intended to be a complete record of what a witness tells the police officer. It is only a resume of the statement, made by the police to facilitate their investigation. The only way to prove that the statement made in Court was not made to the police officer is to ask the police officer himself when he is in the witness-box. What the learned Sessions Judge seems to have done was to have allowed the Circle Inspector to be asked whether certain copies of the case diary were true copies of statements recorded from P. W. 5. The whole of entry in the case diary relating to the statement of P. W. 5 was thereupon filed and free use has been made of the whole of the statement, whether it was strictly relevant to the alleged contradictions or not. This was clearly an improper use of the case diary.

It remains to consider what offence, if any, was committed by the accused persons. It seems clear from the evidence of P. Ws. 14, 13 and 5 that accused 2 and 7 never lost possession of the field. Although P. W. 14 states that they were present when he orally leased the land to the first deceased he does not say that they acquiesced in it; still less does he say that they voluntarily quitted the land or that he in any way was able to evict them. The conduct of the accused within two days or so of this leasing of the land shows that they did not acquiesce in it and that they did not give up possession. If it was true that the first deceased irrigated the land on the day before the offence, there is no reason to suppose that he did it with the knowledge and consent of the accused. It was a fugitive act that did not disturb their possession. Moreover, even though accused 2 and 7 had not paid their rent for a considerable time, they were entitled to remain in possession; because it does not appear from the evidence of P. W. 14 that he gave them any notice to quit. On the other hand, he says that he did not. It would appear from the evidence of P. W. 14, although the evidence with regard to the nature of the lease has been left in a great deal of uncertainty, that it was an agricultural lease. Whether there was a cowle in the first instance or not, it continued as a lease from year to year after the period of such cowle was determined. If it was an agricultural lease, the lease could only be determined by giving six months notice in writing to the tenants; and, as this was admittedly not done, accused 2 and 7 were entitled to remain in possession. Even if these two accused had no such right, the accused's party would not have constituted an unlawful assembly. An unlawful assembly is an assembly of five or more persons when, inter alia, the common object is > by means of criminal force or show of criminal force to any person to take or obtain possession of any property of which he is in possession or enjoyment . . . . . .

It would follow therefore that the six deceased persons were members of an unlawful assembly, because they sought to obtain possession forcibly from accused 2 and 7. On the other hand, the accused's party sought only to maintain possession; and an assembly of more than five persons with this common object would not come within the definition of unlawful assembly given in S. 141, Penal Code. The accused therefore cannot be convicted of any offence by virtue of S. 149, Penal Code. If they had no right of private defence of the property in the possession of accused 2 and 7, the accused would be responsible for the various acts done by them individually. If they had a right of private defence but some exceeded it, that right not only entitled accused 2 and 7 to defend the land, but also such other persons, as they might have gathered there to help them to protect their rights.

It has therefore to be considered what persons, if any, exceeded their right of private defence. As all the deceased persons were armed with sticks, those accused who used only sticks can hardly be said to have exceeded the right of private defence, especially as it has not been shown that any of the stick injuries were fatal—or even caused grievous hurt. Mr. Jayarama Ayyar has pointed out that the accused persons did have a reasonable apprehension that death or grievous hurt might be caused to them and that therefore they were justified in doing such acts as might involve the risk of causing death to those who were seeking to enter on that land; but the progress of the fight does not suggest that those accused who used their daggers did so because they felt it necessary to use them for the protection of their persons and property. It is fairly clear that in wielding their daggers or knives and inflicting so many injuries on the deceased persons, they were actuated not by any desire to defend their persons and property but to punish those who tried to unyoke the bulls and to enter upon the land. The accused were in greater strength, even at the outset, and as one by one the deceased were stabbed, the strength of the accused's party became overwhelming ; and there was certainly no need to cause the injuries to the deceased that they did. We are therefore satisfied that in stabbing the six persons, those accused who were responsible for this had exceeded their right of private defence. As the seriousness of the injuries shows that the persons who caused them intended to kill the deceased, they would be guilty under S. 304 (1), Penal Code.

Although P. W. 5's evidence is not corroborated by the dying declarations with regard to the attacks on all the deceased persons, yet we think his evidence is trustworthy. It is true that P. W. 5 does not say that he joined with the six deceased persons in attempting to enter upon the land in the possession of accused 2 and 7, yet there is reason to think that his evidence that he went there later is true ; for whereas all the other six persons had fatal stab injuries and many of them had a number of incised wounds too, P. W. 5 had only a few stick injuries, with the exception of a slight scratch on the finger which, he said, was caused when accused 3 threw a dagger at him. We are confident therefore that the evidence of P. W. 5 is true and that the accused 1 to 3 and 8 are guilty under S. 304 (1), Penal Code. The accused have all been convicted under S. 302 as well as under other sections including rioting with dangerous weapons. All these convictions are set aside. Accused 4 to 7 and 9 to 11 are acquitted, while accused 1 to 3 and 8 are convicted under S. 304 (1). They are sentenced to ten years rigorous imprisonment. We think that a severe sentence is necessary in view of the brutality and extremity of the measures adopted by these accused in deliberately stabbing to death no less than six persons.

Burn J.—I agree and I have little to add except with regard to the learned Sessions Judge's discussion of the decisions of this High Court. In para. 6 of his judgment, the learned Sessions Judge has said :

> The evidence of the tahsildar and the medical officer about the precautions under which the dying statements were recorded impressed me favourably and these alone, in the opinion of the Madras High Court, are sufficient to bring the acts home to accused 6 Satyanarayanaraju ,accused 3Venkataraju, accused 2 Ramaraju and accused 1 Bangaruraju.

It is needless to say that the Madras High Court had not expressed any opinion regarding the sufficiency of the dying declaration to bring any acts home to any of the accused in this case. The learned Sessions Judge is misquoting the view of this High Court recently expressed with regard to the sufficiency of dying declarations in cases where the Court upon due consideration find the dying declarations to be true. A little later, the learned Sessions Judge has purported to quote some observations of my own in 1941 M W N Cr 9.[1] It is hardly necessary to say that, in my decision in that case, I said nothing whatever about the possibility of distinguishing the separate intentions of the 11 members of an unlawful assembly when their common intention can be easily inferred by their having caused the death of six separate persons, and so every one of them must be presumed to have anticipated the death of every one of the injured as the result of acts which might be done in furtherance of the common intention.

I made no remarks in that case which could have any possible bearing upon inference to be drawn from the very different facts of the case tried by the learned Sessions Judge. The learned Sessions Judge, I regret to say, has quite failed to understand the decision in 1941 M W N Cr 9,[1] for I find that in this case again he has charged certain persons under S. 148, Penal Code, read with S. 149, Penal Code, although the principal point dealt with in 1941 M W N Cr 9,[1] was that it is not possible for a person to be constructively guilty of an offence under S. 148, Penal Code. The learned Sessions Judge moreover has convicted all the accused under both Ss. 147 and 148, Penal Code. This is clearly impossible. If a rioter is armed with a deadly weapon, he is punishable under S. 148. It is not possible to find him guilty both under S. 147 and S. 148, because however many the weapons he may be armed with, he commits only one offence of rioting in the course of the same riot.

ABDUR RAHMAN J.

Venkadari Somappa — Appellant

v.

Chippagiri Nagi Reddy — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 149 of 1938, Decided on 20th February 1941, against decree of District Court, Bellary, in A. S. No. 116 of 1936.

Hindu law — Debts—Manager — Decree obtained in suit on promissory note executed by karta — Decree can be executed against entire family estate even though other members were not parties to suit provided decree-holder proves that debt was for family necessity and that it was incurred as karta — Decree-holder is not debarred from adducing evidence to prove these merely because he did not implead other members to suit.

Even when all the members of a joint Hindu family have not been made parties to a suit, the entire family estate is, when the debt is incurred by a managing member or members, bound by the act of the latter and can pass at the sale in execution of a decree, although he or they may not have been described to be such or stated to have been sued in their representative capacity. It would not be so when the debt is incurred for a purpose not binding on the family. The only thing that the other members or the sons, as the case may be, can insist is that an opportunity may be afforded to them to contest their liability. Therefore in a case where it can be made out that a person against whom the decree was passed occupied a representative capacity at the time and that the debt for which the decree was passed was one for family necessity, the property belonging to the other members should be held liable, although they were not eo nomine parties to the suit. The frame of the suit or questions relating to adjectival law or even considerations based on commercial convenience to be found in the Negotiable Instruments Act should not be allowed to prevail against the substantive law or to decide the point finally whether the other members of the family would or would not be liable for debts incurred by the manager. A decree may be passed against a manager or a karta alone who happens to be the maker of the promissory note even in cases where a suit is brought on the basis of a promissory note ; but once a decree has been obtained, the question whether the judgment-debtor was liable individually or was also representing the other members of the family of which he was the karta should be left to be determined in appropriate proceedings and the power of the creditor to get the liability of persons other than the judgment-debtor declared subsequently should not be taken away or held to have been impliedly adjudicated against him simply because he brought the suit against the maker in the first instance : Case law referred.

There is no distinction between a debt raised on the security of a promissory note or of a mortgage after the decree is passed. The liability of the other members of the joint Hindu family must be, in both cases, determined by Hindu law and not by the reason that the karta had executed a promissory note in one case and a mortgage deed in the other. [P 66*e*]

C. S. Venkatachariar and D. Ramaswami Ayyangar — for Appellant.

K. Kuppuswami — for Respondent.

Judgment. — This appeal raises a question of some importance. The facts are these: A promissory note was executed on 24th July 1930 by one Linga Reddi for Rs. 400 in favour of D. W. 1, Bhimakka. A suit was brought on the basis of the promissory note by the promisee (O. S. No. 166 of 1932) which resulted in a decree. In execution of that decree, a house and certain lands belonging to the joint family consisting of Linga Reddi and his nephew, the present plaintiff-respondent, were attached and purchased on 22nd September 1933 by the defendant-appellant who is a stranger. A sale certificate was accordingly granted to him on 27th November 1933 (Ex. II). The sale certificate describes that the whole of the property mentioned therein and not merely the share belonging to Linga Reddi was sold in execution of the decree. When the auction purchaser proceeded to recover possession of the property purchased by him, he was obstructed by the other member of the joint family of which Linga Reddi was the kartha. The auction purchaser applied for removal of the obstruction (E. A. No. 1276 of 1935) and it was ordered to be removed on 6th February 1936. The obstructor, that is Linga Reddi's nephew, brought a suit to set aside the order passed in execution on the ground that he was no party to the suit in O. S. No. 166 of 1932 and could not therefore be dispossessed of the share which he owned in the family property. The auction purchaser contended that as Linga Reddi was the manager of the family at the time when the suit was brought against him, as the debt was incurred by him for joint family necessity and as he was entitled to alienate the whole of the property for that debt, the entire family property sold in execution of the decree, and not merely Linga Reddi's share, must be held to have been purchased by the auction purchaser. Relying on the decision in 68 M L J 104[1] the lower Courts held that the question of necessity could not be gone into in this suit and inasmuch as the decree was passsed against Linga Reddi alone on the basis of the promissory note, his nephew, i. e., the present plaintiff, could not be held bound by that decree with the result that his share of the property could not be held to have passed to the defendant-appellant in execution of the decree. The auction purchaser was thus prevented from establishing that the debt incurred by Linga Reddi was for family necessity and that the entire family property had passed to him in the auction sale. The question to decide in this appeal is whether the decision of the Subordinate Judge is correct. It is well settled that a sale in execution conveys the entire family property

> if a decree is passed against the kartha or manager of a joint Hindu family in respect of a liability properly contracted for the necessities of the family

> the binding character of the decree upon the interests of the other members depends not upon their having or not having been parties to the suit, but on the authority of the manager to contract the liability.

See 6 C L J 362[2] at page 368, 14 Bom 597,[3] 23 Bom 372,[4] 29 Cal 583[5] and Mayne's Hindu Law, p. 450 para. 348, cl. 2. Can Linga Reddi be held then to have been sued as a kartha and represented the other member of the family although he was not described in the plaint as such? The answer to this question is furnished by several decisions of the Privy Council which have been subsequently followed in a well discussed judgment of a Division Bench of the Lahore High Court and in a Full Bench decision of this Court. The first decision of the Privy Council to which reference may be made was in 13 Cal 21,[6] where their Lordships observed as follows:

> Their Lordships do not think that the authority of Deenadayal's case,[7] bound the Court to hold that nothing but Giridhari's coparcenary interest passed by the sale. If his debt was of a nature to support a sale of the entirety, he might have legally sold it without suit, or the creditor might legally procure a sale of it by suit. All the sons can claim is that, not being parties to the sale or execution proceedings, they ought not to be barred from trying the fact or the nature of the debt in a suit of their own. Assuming they have such a right, it will avail them nothing unless they can prove that the debt was not such as to justify the sale.

This was undoubtedly a case where the debt was incurred by a father, but the principle of that decision was subsequently applied by their Lordships to the case in 15 Cal 70[8] where the debt was incurred by a managing member of the family who did not happen to be the father. As this case was attempted to be distinguished on the ground that it was a case of a mortgage and not that of a promissory note, I would advert to and examine that distinction later; but it is clearly an authority for the proposition that even when all the members of a joint Hindu family have not been made parties to a suit, the entire family estate is, when the debt is incurred by a managing member or members, bound by the act of the latter and can pass at the sale in execution of a decree although he or they may not have been described to be such or stated to have been sued in their representative capacity. It would not be so when the mortgage is effected or a debt is incurred for a purpose not binding on the family; but, in order to test the correctness of the decision of the lower Courts, it must be assumed in the present case that the debt was of a nature that would bind the family of which Linga Reddi and the respondent were members. If a debt is therefore assumed or found to have been incurred for the family necessity by a manager who was not the father (or for a purpose that was not immoral or illegal when the father happens to be the managing member) in a subsequent litigation to which the other members were parties, it would have to be held that the managing member was sued in a representative capacity in the first litigation and that the whole of the family was bound by the decree passed therein. The only thing that the other members or the sons, as the case may be, can insist, as observed by their Lordships in the above decision, is that an opportunity may be afforded to them to contest their liability. If this is all, it is being given to them in the present litigation. This and other Privy Council decisions were referred to in a judgment of the Lahore High Court and discussed by Tek Chand J. in AIR 1935 Lah 1.[9] The headnote of that judgment is sufficiently clear and reads as follows :

> A decree passed against the managing member of an undivided Hindu family in respect of a liability incurred within the scope of his authority is enforceable against the interest of the junior members in the family property, even though they had not been made parties to the suit, but such members are not precluded from contesting the authority of the manager, of the nature of the debt and this they may do either in the course of execution proceedings or in a suit of their own. There is no presumption that a debt contracted by the manager of a Hindu family was contracted for family purposes and this fact must be proved by evidence. The mere circumstance that it had not been disclosed in the course of proceedings in the original suit against the managing member, that the debt had been raised for family necessity, or that the decree does not show on the face of it that the judgment-debtor had been sued in his capacity as manager, is not fatal to the right of the decree-holder to proceed against the entire family property. It is not the frame of the suit or the form of the decree which is conclusive of the matter; the essential point is whether in fact the debt, which is the basis of the decree, had been raised by the judgment-debtor within the scope of his authority as the manager and for the purposes of the family. This question of fact can be determined finally only after the junior members have had proper opportunity of being heard, either in the execution proceedings or in a separate suit, specially brought for the purpose. But if after hearing the junior members, the finding is that the debt satisfied the 'touch-stone of necessity' and is therefore binding on them, their interest in the property will be held to have passed at the sale, as effectively as if they had been made parties to the original suit.

This question came up for decision before a Full Bench of this Court in ILR (1937) Mad 880.[10] The facts of that case briefly were that, A, who constituted a member of a joint family with his sons B and C purchased on behalf of the joint family a certain property which was then subject to a mortgage. Subsequent to the purchase the mortgagee brought a suit to enforce the mortgage and impleaded A as the purchaser of the equity of redemption. A represented the joint family in the suit. There was a decree for sale and in execution of the decree the mortgagee purchased the property. He subsequently brought a suit for the recovery of possession of the property purchased by him and to this suit he impleaded not only A who had, as already stated, represented the family in the previous suit but his sons B and C, as well. He also claimed mesne profits in that suit. On the plea raised by B and C that they had ceased to have any interest in the property by virtue of a partition under which the property had fallen to A's share they were exonerated. It however transpired that in that partition A had taken the property not only for himself but for himself as well as for a minor son D with whom he was joint at the time when the partition was effected. The suit was decreed and the mesne profits were ordered to be ascertained. The decree for mesne profits was ultimately passed on 3rd April 1935. Two months later, A died and in February 1936 an application was filed on behalf of the decree-holder to recover the amount by sale of the other properties, in D's hands. D resisted the same on the ground inter alia that the properties in his hand could not be rendered liable in execution, firstly, as there had been a partition between him and his father A, and secondly, as the execution was being sought on the basis of the decree which was obtained against his father only. The partition alleged by D was found against him.

On the second point, the Full Bench held that the properties of the joint family in D's hands should be, in spite of the fact that he was not a party to the suit or to the decree, proceeded against in execution. It may be remembered, however, that this was so held not only on the ground that A happened to be the father of D but also on the ground that A was the kartha of the family of which D was a member. It was held by the Full Bench that when the suit related to joint family property and the person sued upon was either the father or the eldest member, i. e., the accredited head of the family, it must be presumed that he was sued in his representative capacity and he need not have been described as such in the pleadings and that it was not necessary that the decree should have been passed against him specifically as such. It was also held that since the liability was declared to be a family liability, every item of the joint family property was bound to satisfy the same. It may also be added here that although the three cases of the Privy Council on which reliance was placed by Venkatasubba Rao J., who wrote the leading judgment in that case related to immovable property, the principle of representation affirmed in that decision was held to apply "to other transactions as well." The decree for mesne profits which was being enforced against D was after all a decree for money. On the basis of these authorities it would seem to follow that in a case where it can be made out that a person against whom the decree was passed occupied a representative capacity at the time, as Linga Reddi did, and that the debt for which the decree was passed was one for family necessity, as the debt incurred by him must be, for the present, assumed, the property belonging to the other members should be, on that assumption, held liable, although they were not co nomine parties to the suit. If this is the correct position, the decision of the lower Courts in disallowing the questions in regard to the binding nature of the debt and the respondent's liability to discharge the same from being gone into, would be apparently wrong. It has been, however, contended by learned counsel for the respondent that although Linga Reddi was the kartha of the family at the time when the decree in O. S. No. 166 of 1932 was passed yet as the suit had not been brought on the basis of the original consideration but, on the basis of the promissory note itself and the other members of the family were not impleaded in that suit as parties, the decree should be found to have been passed against him (i. e., Linga Reddi) in his individual capacity and the entire family property of which he and his nephew were owners, could not be made liable in satisfaction of the decree.

During the course of his arguments, learned counsel for the respondent tried to base this contention partly on the ground of waiver by the plaintiff is not basing his claim in O. S. No. 166 of 1932 on the original consideration against the other members of the family and partly on the ground that a decree on the basis of the promissory note could only be passed against the maker or those who were parties to the note and that unless the promissory note was on the face of it found to have been executed on behalf of the joint family (which it was not) a decree against Linga Reddi cannot be held to have been passed in a representative capacity and the property belonging to the junior member of the family, (i. e., the respondent) could not be made liable. I do not think there is any force in either of these contentions. As for the question of waiver, it was never alleged by anyone in this litigation that the decree-holder had waived his right, if any, to recover the decree amount from the family property. That would be a question of fact, but it cannot be inferred merely from Bhimakka's omission to implead the other members of the family in O. S. No. 166 of 1932. As for the other contention, reliance was placed by learned counsel for the respondent on the decision in 68 M L J 104[1] and on the Full Bench decision in I L R (1938) Mad 568.[11] The question to decide in the Full Bench case was whether in a suit by an indorsee of a promissory note, persons other than those who were parties to the promissory note could be made liable. The promissory note in that case was found to have been executed by the managing member of a joint Hindu family but the promisee was held, in view of the words of the indorsement, not to have transferred the debt for which the promissory note was executed but the promissory note only. On these findings, the answer given by the Full Bench to the above mentioned question was in the negative. But this was because the indorsee was held not entitled to sue on the debt which was transferred to him but merely on the promissory note which was. An indorsee could not, in the circumstances, sue on the basis of the original debt, but the case of a payee is different. The suit in O. S. No. 166 of 1932 was by the promisee himself and the question whether he was the owner of the debt apart from the promissory note does not arise. Moreover, the question whether the property belonging to the other members of the family could be made liable in execution of the decree passed against the maker of the promissory note or those who were parties to the same did not arise for consideration in that case, and was not considered. This would be clear from the following observation that was made in that judgment:

> The maker alone can be sued on the note and the fact that under Hindu law sons are liable in respect of the debts incurred on behalf of the family or by the father for his own purposes, provided that they are not incurred for illegal or immoral purposes, does not affect the principle involved.

The decision in 68 M L J 104[1] does undoubtedly proceed on the basis that the question of the binding character of the debt against the other members of the family cannot be, at least in cases when they are not the sons or descendants of the judgment-debtor, gone into in execution proceedings, but this was on the basis of the decision in 8 Mad 208,[12] which was, in view of the Privy Council decisions, considered by the Full Bench in I L R (1937) Mad 880[10] to be obsolete. It is true that the facts of the case in 68 M L J 104[1] as well as in 8 Mad 208,[11] were similar to the facts of the present case, but the objection was being raised, as pointed out by Mr. Ramaswami Iyengar in the last of the two cases, to the attachment and not as here, after the property had been sold, by the Court. This may make some difference although I very much doubt if it should. At all events, I see no justification for the reservation made by the learned Judges to cases where the other members of the family happen to be the sons or descendants of the judgment-debtor. If it was on the theory of representation the members other than sons or grandsons must be held to stand in the same position and to be similarly represented by the kartha. It may be that the Hindu father may have greater powers than an ordinary managing member, but so far as the question of liability on the promissory note was concerned, they stood in the same position. And sons or other descendants are not always bound by the debt incurred by their father or ancestor, e. g., where the debt is illegal or immoral. In any case, in view of the Full Bench decision in I L R (1937) Mad 880,[10] the authority of the decisions in 8 Mad 208[11] and 68 M L J 104,[1] must be found to have been considerably shaken. I find no reason for drawing a distinction between a debt raised on the security of a promissory note or of a mortgage after the decree is passed. The liability of the other members of the joint Hindu family must be, in both cases, determined by Hindu law and not by the reason that the kartha had executed a promissory note in one case and a mortgage deed in the other. Why should a distinction be drawn between various decrees and why should the liability of the other members of a joint Hindu family be determined in cases of some and not in cases of others, it is not quite easy to follow.

I must therefore hold that there is no merit in the contention that in a suit on a promissory note when the liability of persons other than the maker had not been alleged or determined, a creditor would be debarred for ever from enforcing the liability imposed by Hindu law as against the other members of the family of which the maker of the promissory note was the kartha or the head. The frame of the suit or questions relating to adjectival law or even considerations based on commercial convenience to be found in the Negotiable Instruments Act should not be allowed to prevail against the substantive law or to decide the point finally whether the other members of the family would or would not be liable for debts incurred by the manager. A decree may be passed against a manager or a kartha alone who happens to be the maker of the promissory note even in cases where a suit is brought on the basis of a promissory note; but once a decree has been obtained, the question whether the judgment-debtor was liable individually or was also representing the other members of the family of which he was the kartha should be left to be determined in appropriate proceedings and the power of the creditor to get the liability of persons other than the judgment-debtor declared subsequently should not be taken away or held to have been impliedly adjudicated against him simply because he brought the suit against the maker in the first instance. This would contravene the principle enunciated by their Lordships of the Privy Council and by the various High Courts in cases, some of which only have been noticed by me.

It was wrong to suggest that an auction purchaser in a case like this was trying to go behind the decree. He is not, first of all, as contended by learned counsel for the respondent, standing in the shoes of the decree-holder. If at all, he stands in the shoes of the judgment-debtor whose right, title and interest he has purchased and the questions whether the judgment-debtor could alienate the entire family property in discharge of the particular debt or whether the whole of it could have been sold in execution would depend upon the nature of the debt and the position which the judgment-debtor occupied at all relevant times. If the decree-holder succeeds in establishing that the debt was incurred for a family necessity and that the judgment-debtor did represent the family at the time when the debt was incurred and at the time when the suit was brought against him, the share of the other members in the family property must be held equally bound to discharge the debt incurred by the kartha of the family. In my view, a decree obtained on the basis of a promissory note against a person who is the manager or kartha of the family would be executable against the family property of the other members provided the necessary conditions are established; and it is on those points that the auction purchaser was not allowed to adduce any evidence. The decisions of the lower Courts in preventing him from establishing the fact which would have justified the sale of the property claimed by the plaintiff are consequently incorrect and must be set aside. The appeal is therefore accepted and the case sent back to the trial Court for a full enquiry in the light of the observations contained in this order. This is an old case and must be expedited. The plaintiff will pay the costs of this appeal. The costs of the subordinate Courts will be costs in the cause. Leave to appeal is granted.

V. Subramania Ayyar — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 231 of 1939, Decided on 14th February 1941, against decree of District Court, Trichinopoly, in A. S. No. 165 of 1938.

 Transfer of Property Act (1882), Ss. 54, 40 —Contract to sell property—Subsequent attachment of same in execution of decree does not prevail over the contract to sell even if attaching creditor has no notice of such contract — Sale completed is not contrary to attachment.

Though a contract to sell does not, having regard to the terms of S. 54 of the Act, create any interest in or charge on the property, it does give rise to an obligation which limits the right of the judgment-debtor and the attachment of the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor is subject to any such limitation by which the judgment-debtor was bound. Therefore, where subsequent to a contract to sell certain property, it is attached in execution of a decree, the attachment does not prevail over the pre-existing contract to sell even though the attaching creditor has no notice of the contract to sell. The right of the judgment-debtor in the property is on the date of the attachment qualified by the obligation incurred by him under the earlier contract to sell and the attaching creditor cannot claim to ignore that obligation and proceed to bring the property to sale as if it remained the absolute property of the judgment-debtor : ('39) 26 A I R 1939 Mad 702, Rel. on. [P 68*c*, g; P 69*b*]

And if the attachment is subject to the obligation under the previous contract, the sale in pursuance of the contract will not be a transfer contrary to the attachment within the meaning of S. 64, Civil P. C. [P 69*b*]

Judgment. — This appeal arises out of a suit by a Court auction purchaser for possession of the land which he had purchased, from the appellants who are alleged to have trespassed upon that land after delivery through Court, claiming title to it under a private sale made at the time when the attachment was pending. The essential facts are that the appellants, who were defendants 1 and 2 in the trial Court, held certain mortgages over the land in question and they allege that on 10th March 1932 the mortgagor who was not a party in these proceedings entered into an agreement with them to sell to them the mortgaged land. The written statement does not describe this agreement, but it is said in the course of arguments that it was an unregistered written agreement. Nearly a month later, on 3rd April 1932, the present respondent in execution of a money decree against the mortgagor attached that land. It is not in evidence whether this attachment was with or without notice of the contract to sell. On 8th June 1932, that is to say, two months after the attachment the mortgagor executed a registered sale deed in favour of the appellants conveying to them the land which was under attachment. Some eight months later, on 15th February 1933, the respondent in execution of his decree brought the same land to sale in court-auction and purchased it himself and 2 years later he got delivery through Court. Thereafter the appellants are alleged to have entered upon the land and hence this suit.

The trial Court disposed of the suit in a very short judgment without giving any finding on the issue relating to the alleged agreement to sell dated 10th March 1932. The learned District Munsif expressed the opinion that after the attachment the agreement could not have been carried out by the debtors to the detriment of the plaintiff. In appeal the attention of the learned District Judge was drawn to the decision in 68 M L J 67[1] and other cases and he found himself unable to agree with the District Munsif that the truth of the agreement of March 1932 was not a matter to be considered in the suit, but he supported the trial Court's decision on the ground that there was nothing in the written statement to show that the plainitff had notice of this agreement, apparently holding the view that, though a person who has rights under a contract to sell at the time of an attachment can enforce these rights as against the attaching decree-holder, the enforcement depends on the question whether the attaching decree-holder had at the time of the attachment notice of the existence of the contract and he also seems to think that it is the duty of the persons claiming under the contract to prove that the attaching decree-holder had notice.

Now, there is a line of decisions of this Court which make it quite clear that though a contract to sell does not, having regard to the terms of S. 54, T. P. Act, create any interest in or charge on the property, it does give rise to an obligation which limits the right of the judgment-debtor and that the attachment of the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor is subject to any such limitation by which the judgment-debtor was bound. The cases which have been quoted before me on this point are 21 M L J 82,[2] 5 M L W 234,[3] 68 M L J 67,[1] 59 Mad 1,[4] (1939) 2 M L J 822[5] and there is a decision of the Privy Council which throws light on the same subject reported in 45 M L J 770.[6] An attempt has been made to distinguish these decisions on the ground that they are cases in which the prospective purchaser has under his contract either paid money or got possession, but it does not seem to me that this is the basis of any of these decisions. The matter has been well put by Varadachariar J. at p. 831 of the decision in (1939) 2 M L J 822.[5] The learned Judge says that :

> The question is not whether any interest has passed under the contract to sell. The attaching decree-holder attaches not the physical property but only the rights of the judgment-debtor in the property.

As explained in the decisions and recognized in S. 40, T. P. Act, the right of the judgment-debtor in the property is on the date of the attachment qualified by the obligation incurred by him under the earlier contract to sell and the attaching creditor cannot claim to ignore that obligation and proceed to bring the property to sale as if it remained the absolute property of the judgment-debtor. It seems to follow therefore that a finding as to the truth and validity of this agreement dated 10th March 1932 is an essential preliminary to the disposal of the present suit.

It is, however, contended that even assuming the truth of this agreement, the attachment will prevail against the agreement unless the attaching creditor had notice thereof. If this is the law, it seems to me obvious that the plaintiff who seeks to escape from the effects of the pre-existing contract by reason of his ignorance of the contract must himself allege and prove that he had no knowledge of it: vide 66 M L J 255[7] and (1879) 11 Ch D 327[8] at p. 337. But I cannot myself see any legal basis for the theory that an attachment will prevail against a pre-existing contract binding the owner of the land, if the attaching decree-holder has no notice of the contract. No doubt if the attachment is followed by a court sale and the purchaser at the court sale has no notice of this obligation, he will get a good title and the promisee under the private contract would be left to seek his remedy against his promisor. So much can be deduced from the decision of the Privy Council in 45 M L J 770.[6] But, we are not concerned here with a purchaser for good consideration without notice of a contract to sell binding the vendor or judgment-debtor whose land is being sold. At the time of the court sale, there was already a registered sale deed in favour of the appellants which had been in existence for some eight months. How the court sale could have been held without knowledge of that registered sale deed is a matter for conjecture. But, if the registered sale deed is good, no amount of ignorance on the part of the court-auction purchaser will give him a good title. The sale in favour of the appellants can only be attacked on the basis of S. 64, Civil P. C., and, in order to make this section applicable, it must be shown that this sale was a private transfer contrary to the attachment. If the attachment was subject to the obligation under the previous contract, the sale in pursuance of the contract will not be a transfer contrary to the attachment. It is, therefore, incumbent upon the respondent to show that an attachment will prevail against a pre-existing contract to sell binding a judgment-debtor, if the attaching creditor had, at the time of the attachment, no notice of the existence of this contract. I have not been referred to any authority for this position and it seems to me to be a position which it would be difficult to support in logic. That which the creditor attaches is the right, title and interest of his judgment-debtor. When once it is conceded, as I think it must be in the light of the decisions quoted above, that the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor is limited by any obligations with reference to the land binding upon the judgment-debtor, it is difficult to see how the attachment of that right, title and interest without knowledge of those limitations can enlarge the right, title and interest which the decree-holder attaches. The protection given to a bona fide purchaser for value without notice is based upon the fact that the purchaser has paid cash in all innocence for an apparently good title, but there is no logical reason why a similar protection should be given to an attaching creditor who has not paid cash at all. Surely, it is the duty of the attaching creditor to ascertain the extent of the rights of the judgment-debtor and it is only over such rights as they actually exist that the attachment will operate. Moreover, I am of opinion in the present case, there being no assertion by the plaintiff that he was ignorant of the defendants' rights and no proof that he had no notice thereof, the lower appellate Court was wrong in assuming that he had no notice merely because the written statement had failed to aver notice and the defendants had failed to prove notice. The appeal, therefore, succeeds and the suit will be remanded to the trial Court for fresh disposal after taking evidence and recording a finding on issue 4. Costs throughout will abide the result. The court-fee on the memorandum of appeal will be refunded. Leave to appeal is granted.

FACTS. — The petitioner was accused 1 in C. C. NO. 790 of 1940 on the file of the Sub-divisional Magistrate's Court, Tiruturaipundi and accused in C. C. NO. 811 of 1940 on the file of the same Court. The cases arose out of an occurrence on 1st November 1940. The petitioner filed in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate a complaint (C. C. NO. 884 of 1940) against the complainants in the other two cases arising out of the same occurrence and the same was transferred to the Sub-Magistrate, Tiruturaipundi. The Sub-Magistrate dismissed it on 24th December 1940 under S. 203, Criminal P. C., without examining the petitioner. The present application for the transfer of C. C. NO. 790 of 1940 to the file of some other Magistrate was made on the ground that the Sub-Magistrate of Tiruturaipundi had formed opinions adverse to the petitioner and the other accused and he had prejudged the case in a way.

a Order. — The complaint of the petitioner was dismissed by the Sub-Magistrate under S. 203, Criminal P. C., and his apprehension cannot be said to be unreasonable. The case is therefore transferred to the file of the District Magistrate, Tanjore for disposal by him or such other Magistrate as he may direct.

d P. Govinda Menon — for Respondent.

Leach C. J. — These civil miscellaneous petitions can be dealt with conveniently in one judgment. In C. M. P. No. 3026 of 1939 the petitioner asks that he be granted leave to appeal to the Federal Court against the order passed by this Court in C. R. P. No. 1603 of 1938. In C. M. P. No. 3028 of 1939 he asks for leave to appeal to the Federal Court against the order of this Court in C. R. P. No. 1604 of 1938. In C. M. Ps. Nos. 3027 and 3029 of 1939 the petitioner asks for orders dispensing with deposits for printing charges and directing the office to issue bills setting out the amounts of the printing charges. His learned advocate has indicated that he is e prepared to pay the bills at once. In C. M. P. No. 3030 of 1939 the petitioner asks for an order consolidating the proposed appeals to the Federal Court.

The petitioner filed two suits against the respondent in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ottapalam to recover amounts claimed to be due on promissory notes. The suits were subsequently transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Calicut and there numbered as O. S. Nos. 52 of 1939 and 53 of 1939, respectively. In the first suit the petitioner asked for a decree for Rupees 13,932-13-4 and in the second suit for a decree for Rs. 19,762-1-3. The respondent pleaded f that he was an agriculturist and therefore entitled to the benefit of the scaling down provisions of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act. The petitioner denied that the respondent was an agriculturist within the meaning of the Act. He also contended that the Act was ultra vires the Provincial Legislature. A preliminary issue was framed in each suit on the question of the validity of the Act and the Subordinate Judge held that it was ultra vires. The respondent then filed applications in this Court asking it to reverse the decision in the exercise of its revisional powers. Before the applications came into g the List for hearing, a Full Bench of this Court had held in ILR (1939) Mad 151,[1] that the Act was intra vires. Consequently when the applications were called before Lakshmana Rao J. they were allowed. The learned Judge was then asked to grant a certificate under S. 205, Government of India Act, which he did, whereupon the petitioner filed the petitions now before us.

The petitions came before the Court in the first instance on 25th September 1939, when the right of appeal to the Federal Court claimed by the petitioner was challenged by the respondent. The questions of fact arising h in the suits had not then been decided, and if decided in favour of the petitioner, the question of the validity of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act would not arise. In these circumstances, the Court suggested to the learned advocates engaged in the case that the applications might stand over until after the suits or the appeals therefrom had been decided. They agreed to this course and the petitions were ordered to stand out of the List until decrees in the suits or appeals arising out of them had been passed.

The trial Court delivered judgment in the suits on 8th December 1939. In O. S. No. 52 of 1939 a decree was passed in favour of the petitioner for Rs. 2987-10-0, the claim having been reduced by nearly Rs. 11,000 under the provisions of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act relating to scaling down. In O. S. No. 53 of 1939, only a decree for costs was passed, as it was found that when the provisions of the Act were applied nothing remained due. In neither case has an appeal been filed, and in the circumstances the petitioner asks that his petitions for leave to appeal to the Federal Court should now be decided. The respondent says that they do not lie as the decrees passed by the subordinate Court have not been challenged in appeal. By reason of S. 205 (1), Government of India Act, 1935, an appeal lies to the Federal Court from a judgment, decree or final order of a High Court, if the High Court certifies that the case involves a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Act or any order in Council made under it. Sub-section (2) states that where a certificate has been granted, any party in the case may appeal to the Federal Court on the ground that the question has been wrongly decided, and on any ground on which he could have appealed without special leave to His Majesty in Council, if no such certificate had been given, and, with the leave of the Federal Court, on any other ground. It has not been suggested that it was improper of Lakshmana Rao J., to give a certificate under S. 205 (1) and the certificate having been given, the petitioner is entitled to proceed to the Federal Court, unless there is some other provision of law with regard to procedure which prevents him.

Section 111A Civil P. C., says that where a certificate has been given under S. 205 (1), Government of India Act, 1935, Ss. 109, 110 and 111, Civil P. C., shall apply in relation to appeals to the Federal Court as they apply in relation to appeals to His Majesty in Council, and accordingly reference to His Majesty shall be construed as references to the Federal Court, but there are two provisos the effect of which is to leave the right of appeal to the Federal Court unaffected by any of the restrictions imposed by Ss. 109, 110 and 111, Civil P. C., with regard to appeals to the Privy Council, when the appeal to the Federal Court is merely concerned with interpretation of the Government of India Act, 1935, or any Order in Council made thereunder. When the question is simply confined to interpretation, the right to appeal to the Federal Court depends upon the grant of a certificate under S. 205 of the Act. By the addition of R. 17 there has been a corresponding amendment of O. 45, Civil P. C. Rule 17 states that where a certificate has been given under S. 205 (1), Government of India Act, 1935, the provisions of the order shall apply in relation to appeals to the Federal Court as they apply in relation to appeals to His Majesty in Council, subject, however, to these provisos:

(a) Rule 3 of this order shall have effect as if at the end of sub-r. (1) thereof there were inserted the words 'apart from any question of law as to the interpretation of the Government of India Act, 1935, or any order in Council made thereunder':

(b) where the only ground of appeal stated in the petition is that any question of law as to the interpretation of the Government of India Act, 1935, or any order in Council made thereunder has been wrongly decided, the petition need not pray for such a certificate as is mentioned in R. 3, and the like proceedings shall be had thereon as if such a certificate had been given except that no security shall be required for the costs of the respondent.

Rule 2 of O. 45 requires a person who desires to appeal to His Majesty in Council to apply by petition to the Court whose decree is complained of. Therefore, a person who wishes to appeal to the Federal Court must, after he has obtained a certificate under S. 205 (1), Government of India Act, 1935, file a petition in the Court which has passed the adverse decree or order and R. 8 of O. 45 indicates that the petition should ask for the appeal to be "admitted." Rule 3 says that every petition shall state the grounds of appeal and pray for a certificate either that, as regards amount or value and nature, the case fulfils the requirements of S. 110 or that it is otherwise a fit one for appeal, but by virtue of proviso (a) to R. 17 such a certificate is not required when it is a matter of appealing to the Federal Court on a question merely of interpretation of the Government of India Act, 1935. Rule 7 (1) states that where the certificate is granted, the applicant shall within the time allowed (a) furnish security for the costs of the respondent and (b) deposit the amount required to defray the expenses of translating, transcribing, indexing and transmitting the record. The certificate referred to here is the certificate referred to in R. 3, but such a certificate is not required when the appeal is only concerned with interpretation, nor is the petitioner required to furnish security for the costs of the respondent. Therefore all that the petitioner may be called upon to do in such a case is to furnish the amount required to defray the expenses which will be incurred in connexion with the printing of the record and its transmission to the Federal Court. Rule 8 says that where the security has been furnished and the deposit made to the satisfaction of the Court, the Court shall (a) declare the appeal admitted, (b) give notice thereof to the respondent, (c) transmit a copy of the record to the Federal Court and (d) provide either party who applies with one or more copies of the record on payment. As security has not to be furnished when the appeal is to the Federal Court on a mere question of interpretation R. 8 (a) must be read here as being subject only to the requirement of R. 7 with regard to the necessity for a deposit to cover the expenses of translating, transcribing, indexing and transmitting the record.

In ILR (1941) Mad 43,[2] this Court held that an appeal lies to the Federal Court from a final order of a single Judge of a High Court when a certificate has been granted by him under S. 205 (1), Government of India Act, 1935, and that the provisions of S. 111A and O. 45, R. 17, Civil P. C., do not preclude the admission of the appeal. In 53 M L W 373[3] the Federal Court itself held that though the scheme of O. 45 implies that till the High Court makes the order under R. 8 it still retains a measure of control over the proceedings, such an order is not a condition precedent to the exercise of jurisdiction by the Federal Court. This was the opinion expressed by Varadachariar J. in 53 M L W 373[3] and it was concurred in by Gwyer C. J. Sulaiman J., however, considered that so long as R. 8 of O. 45 remains applicable to appeals to the Federal Court, an appellant cannot go to the Federal Court without his appeal having been admitted by the High Court. In view of the majority decision, it may be taken that when matters have proceeded as far as R. 8, a formal order of admission by the High Court is not necessary, but if all the requirements of the law up to that stage have been complied with it would be improper for the High Court not to declare the appeal admitted.

Learned counsel for the respondent has stressed the fact that no appeals have been filed from the decrees passed by the subordinate Court, and it is said that the Federal Court would not entertain an appeal against an order passed in revision in connexion with a preliminary issue when there has been no appeal preferred by the aggrieved party from the decree itself. As the law now stands this Court has no jurisdiction to decide the question. Proviso (a) to S. 111 (a), Civil P. C., governs the situation. It will be for the Federal Court to decide whether the question of the validity of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act is debatable when there has been no appeal from the decree in a case such as we have here. Nor is it for this Court in the present proceedings to consider the effect of the judgment of the Federal Court in 3 F L J 157.[4]

If all the steps which it is necessary for the appellant to take have been taken or will be taken, this Court must admit the appeal. Section 111A and R. 17 of O. 45, Civil P. C., could very easily have been more clearly worded, particularly proviso (a) to S. 111A but we have no doubt as to the effect of the words used. Where a judgment, decree or final order involves a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Act and the Court delivering the judgment or passing the decree or final order considers that a substantial question of law is involved as to the interpretation of the Government of India Act, 1935 or any order in Council made thereunder, it is its clear duty as the law now stands, to give a certificate under S. 205. When that certificate has been given no further certificate is required and the person aggrieved is entitled to go to the Federal Court, provided that he complies with so much of R. 7 of O. 45 as is incumbent upon him. It may be mentioned that it has not been suggested that the order of Lakshmana Rao J. is not a judgment or a final order. It has been accepted that so far as the proceedings here are concerned the order of the learned Judge comes within the section and therefore this Court is not called upon to decide what will be the position if a certificate is given in respect of a decision which could not be classified either as a judgment, decree or final order.

It follows from what has been said that in our opinion all that the appellant is required to do here is to provide funds for printing the record and transmitting it to the Federal Court. He is willing to do this.

2. ('40) 27 A I R 1940 Mad 890 : 193 I C 865 : I L R (1941) Mad 43 : (1940) 2 M L J 170, Subramaniam v. Muthuswami.

3. ('41) 28 A I R 1941 F C 5 : 191 I C 659 : 53 M L W 373 : 20 Pat 429 : I L R (1941) Kar F C 1: 1940 F C R 84, Lachmeswar Prasad v. Keshwar Lal.

Therefore the office will be directed to inform the petitioner of the amount required for these purposes and when the amounts have been paid the appeals will be declared to be admitted, and the other requirements of R. 8 ordered. The appellant is given three weeks within which to pay the required amount, that is three weeks from the date the amount is communicated to him. The only other matter which requires to be dealt with is the petition for consolidation. The appellant is here under a misconception. The only provisions in the Code of Civil Procedure with regard to consolidation are those contained in R. 4 of O. 45. In this case there is no question of pecuniary valuation and that rule obviously does not apply. Therefore, the Court is not in a position to make any order of consolidation. There will have to be separate appeals and it will be for the Federal Court to say whether they should be heard together. The costs of these applications will be made costs in the appeals.

Panthanam alias Alagianayakathammal and others — Appellants

v.

P. R. M. K. Mohammad Abdul Rahiman Marakayar, trustee and landlord of Puthur Village — Respondent.

Second Appeals Nos. 906 to 934 and 999 of 1939, Decided on 14th August 1941, against orders of District Court, Ramnad at Madura, in A.S. Nos. 20 etc. of 1937.

Madras Estates Land Act (1 of 1908), Ss. 75, 74— Appeal to District Court from order of Collector under S. 74 — Collector's order affirmed — No further appeal lies either under Estates Land Act or under S. 100, Civil P. C., as order of District Court is not decree.

A right of appeal is a statutory right and cannot be inferred by implication : ('34) 21 A I R 1934 Mad 103 (F B) and 40 Cal 21 (P C), Foll. [P 75c]

The Collector's order for payment of rent in kind would be final if no objection is taken under sub-cl. (b) of S. 75 (8) and would continue to be so even if an objection is taken under that sub-clause if the District Court on being appealed to does not come to a different decision from that of the Collector. In both these cases, it is the decision of the Collector that remains final. If the District Court takes a different view on the other hand, the order of the Collector is to be substituted or replaced by the order of the former. But in the absence of a different conclusion by the District Court, the decision of the Collector would continue to hold the field and retain its character of finality and as there is no provision in the Act which permits a further appeal to the High Court no appeal lies under the Estates Land Act. Nor does an appeal lie under S. 100, Civil P. C., as the order of the Collector is only an order and not a decree and therefore the order on appeal cannot also be a decree even though it is final. An order does not become a decree merely because it happens to be an order which is final so far as the Court passing it is concerned. And the mere practice of the Court to embody such orders in the form of decrees would not confer a right of appeal where none exists or convert what was really an order into a decree : ('14) 1 AIR 1914 P C 87 ; ('14) 1 AIR 1914 Mad 135 ; 10 M L J 398 ; 11 Mad 309 (F B) and ('32) 19 A I R 1932 Mad 612 (F B), Disting. [P 74 b,c,f,g,h]

U. Somasundaram — for Appellants.

T. K. Subramania Pillai and M. G. Shanmugam — for Respondent.

Judgment. — This is a batch of 30 second appeals. A preliminary objection has been raised by Mr. Sitarama Rao. He contends that in the absence of a provision in the Estates Land Act conferring a right on the appellants to prefer second appeals, these are not competent and are liable to be dismissed. The question to decide is whether they are ? They arise out of objections made by the respondent-landholder for appraisement of the crop or division of the produce under S. 74, Estates Land Act. On receiving these applications, the Collector deputed an officer, as required by S. 75 of the Act, to make the division or appraisement. The officer appointed by the Collector carried out the orders and made a report. Objections were raised on behalf of the appellants to this. They were to the effect that the rent was payable in money and not in kind. These objections were disallowed. The appellants went upto the District Court in appeal but the Collector's decision was affirmed. They have preferred the present appeals against the orders of the District Court. Sub-clauses (d) and (e) to S. 75(8) which contain the provisions relevant to the point to be determined read as follows :

(d) The Collector's order for the payment of rent and costs, if any, shall be final unless an objection of the nature described in cl. (b) has been raised and shall be enforceable as a decree for arrears of rent.

(e) Where an objection of the nature described in cl. (b) has been raised, the Collector's decision thereon shall be subject to an appeal to the District Court. Such appeal shall be presented within thirty days from the date of the Collector's decision.

Clause (b) referred to in these sub-clauses provides that if an objection is raised that the rent is not payable by division or appraisement or that no rent is payable and the Collector upholds the objection, he shall set aside the award made by the person who was deputed to make the division or appraisement. According to the first of these sub-clauses, the Collector's order for the payment of rent and costs has been declared to be final. Since, during the course of argument, learned counsel for the appellant contended that the order passed by the District Court and the orders passed by the Collector were decrees in fact, it would be useful to remember that sub-clause (d) does not declare the Collector's orders to be decrees but merely orders that are enforceable as decrees for arrears of rent. As to the character of the decision made by the District Court, sub-clause (e) provides that when the objection that the rent is not payable either at all or at least in kind, i. e., by division or appraisement but is payable in cash, is taken on behalf of a tenant, the Collector's decision (the use of the word 'decision' to which reference was made during the course of the arguments is not important as it obviously refers to the order passed by the Collector and to nothing else) shall be subject to an appeal to the District Court. If these two sub-clauses are read together, there would be no doubt as to their meaning. They lay down that the Collector's order for payment of rent in kind would be final if no objection is taken under sub-cl. (b) and would continue to be so even if an objection is taken under that sub-clause if the District Court on being appealed to does not come to a different decision from that of the Collector. In both these cases, it is the decision of the Collector that remains final. If the District Court takes a different view on the other hand, the order of the Collector is to be substituted or replaced by the order of the former. Whether such an order could be appealed against does not arise here for decision. But the point to be borne in mind is that in the absence of a different conclusion by the District Court, the decision of the Collector would continue to hold the field and retain its character of finality.

There is no provision in the Act which permits a further appeal to the High Court; but learned counsel for the appellant contends that in spite of the absence of a specific provision to that effect, such appeals are competent as under S. 192, Estates Land Act, the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure have been made applicable to all appeals under the Act and in so far as the appeals to the District Court were laid under S. 75 (d), a further appeal to the High Court would lie under S. 100, Civil P. C. But before the provisions of S. 100 can be held to be attracted, it is incumbent upon the appellants to satisfy me that the orders passed by the District Court on appeals amounted to decrees. The proceedings, it must be remembered, arose out of applications made to the Collector for division or appraisement and not out of suits. The decision by the Collector has been described by cl. (d) to be in the nature of an order. The appeals against that order must be regarded to be a continuation of the proceedings before the Collector. If the decision by the Collector culminated in an order only, how can a decision by the District Court on appeal be characterized as a decree? There are a large number of orders against which appeals have been provided under O. 43, R. 1, Civil P. C. Can it be legitimately contended that the decision of the Court of appeal would amount to a decree although the decision of the first Court was in the nature of an order? I do not think so. The Code makes a clear distiction between decrees and appealable orders and it is impossible to forget that distinction in deciding this question. My attention was drawn to the fact that the decisions of the District Court were final so far as that Court was concerned and that they were embodied in the form of decrees. But I do not feel impressed by these facts. An order does not become a decree merely because it happens to be an order which is final so far as the Court passing it is concerned. As to the form in which these orders were embodied, a practice seems to have grown up in this presidency to embody every order or judgment passed by a Court in the form of a decree. In cases of orders, these formal expressions have come to be known by the style of decretal orders. This practice owed its growth probably to the difficulty experienced by the lower Courts in discriminating between judgments and orders and since no appeal is competent in case of judgments unless they are formally drawn up and embodied in decrees, it was probably considered safer to embody both judgments and order in that manner. This would not, however, confer a right of appeal where none exists or convert what was really an order into a decree.

Reliance was placed on behalf of the appellant on several decisions of this Court and of the Privy Council; but it is unnecessary to examine them in detail as the decisions in 37 Mad 443,[1] 1 M L W 89[2] and 10 M L J

1. ('14) 1 A I R 1914 P C 87 : 25 I C 305 : 37 Mad 443 : 41 I A 258 (PC), Veeraraghavalu v. Venkatanarasimha Naidu.

398,[3] were decisions in suits instituted under the Rent Recovery Act or the Estates Land Act and must therefore have ended in decrees. The decision in 11 Mad 309,[4] on which very great emphasis was laid by learned counsel for the appellant has no application also, in my opinion, as the Forest Officer in that case was found by the Full Bench to have been constituted a Court with special jurisdiction which a Collector in deciding the question of appraisement under S. 75 is not. The last decision to which reference was made during the course of the arguments was that in 63 M L J 450,[5] but the real point to be determined in that case was whether the civil Court was a competent revising authority in regard to the directions given by the Board of Revenue to revise the proceedings of a revenue officer who had made a settlement of rents under Chap. 11, Estates Land Act. That is not the question which has to be determined now. In the course of the judgment, however, one of the learned Judges, Ananthakrishna Ayyar J., referred to the position whether second appeals would be competent in certain cases but there is nothing in those observations which may lead me to infer that the learned Judge was referring to the maintainability of such appeals from anything else other than decrees.

In my opinion, this case is governed by the principle enunciated in the Full Bench decision in 57 Mad 271[6] and in 40 Cal 21.[7] A right of appeal is a statutory right and cannot be inferred by implication. For the above reasons I must hold that the appeals are not competent. A request is made to me on behalf of the appellants that they may be permitted to convert these appeals into revisions. As I am assured that there are points of law which may have to be considered by the Court and in the ends of justice, I have no objection to grant that permission provided that the appellants make up the deficiency in the court-fee and pay a consolidated sum of Rs. 50 to the learned counsel on the other side both because these appeals have not been held to be competent and because of the adjournment which has been asked to make up the deficiency. These costs would be irrespective of any final orders as to costs that may be ordered to one party or to the other on the decision of appeals which are now being converted into revisions or what would be converted into revisions if the necessary deficiency in court-fee is made up. The necessary deficiency may be made up and the costs paid to the other side within a month.

Public Prosecutor — Appellant

v.

B. V. A. Lury Co. represented by A. V. Raghavaraju, Director and another — Respondents.

Criminal Appeal No. 149 of 1941, Decided on 14th August 1941, against acquittal of Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Coconada, in C. C. No. 71 of 1940.

Companies Act (1913), S. 32 (5) — Words "knowingly" and "wilfully" refer to company's officers and not to company itself—Company is always liable when return is not sent in — Its officers liable only when they knowingly or wilfully authorise or permit default.

The words "knowingly" and "wilfully" in S. 32 (5) are used with reference only to the officers of the company and not to the company itself because the company as a corporate body cannot either "know" or "will". The company is always liable where the return is not sent in; but the officers of the company are liable only if they knowingly or wilfully authorize or permit the default : (1904) 20 T L R 425, Disting.; ('38) 25 A I R 1938 Mad 640, Approved. [P 76*a*, b, c]

Appellant in person.

D. Narasaraju — for Respondents.

Judgment.—Under S. 32, Companies Act, a company has to draw up a list of the members of the company and of the persons who have ceased to be members since the date of the last return. That list has to be completed within 21 days after the ordinary general meeting and a copy has to be sent, signed by a Director or the Manager or the Secretary, to the Registrar. In this case, whereas the list should have been sent to the Registrar on or before 20th November 1939, it was not in fact filed until 3rd January 1940. A case was therefore filed against the company and its Directors for not complying with the requirements under S. 32 of the Act.

The Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Coconada held that there was no reason to think that the failure to submit this return was due to anything but negligence and that as the delay was not due to any wilful default, they were not guilty of any offence. He therefore acquitted them. The Crown has preferred an appeal with regard to the acquittal of the company. The words "knowingly" and "wilfully," which are found to be the necessary ingredients of the offence by the learned Magistrate, cannot be applied to a company at all. A company, as a corporate body, cannot either "know" or "will." That the Legislature did not personify companies and impute to them minds is made clear by the wording of the relevant sections. The punitive clause of S. 32, for example, reads :

> If a company makes default in complying with the requirements of this section, it shall be liable to a fine not exceeding Rs. 50 for every day during which the default continues, and every officer of the company, who knowingly and wilfully authorises or permits the default, shall be liable to the like penalty.

It is to be noted that the words "knowingly" and "wilfully" are used with reference only to the officers of the company and not to the company itself, obviously for the reason I have given above. The company is always liable where the return is not sent in; but the officers of the company are liable only if they knowingly or wilfully authorize or permit the default. Mr. Narasaraju for the respondent has quoted (1904) 20 T L R 425,[1] in which referring to the English Act, the Aldermen held that "the word 'default' in S. 27 implied a continued neglect to do an act required." The English Act has not been shown to me; and so I do not know to what extent, if at all, that case can safely be applied in India; but even if it could, it can be distinguished from the case before me by the fact that a prosecution had been launched apparently against the officers of the company as well as against the company, and also by the fact that in that case the omission was one which it was impossible to remedy. It may be noted that the company had already been fined for not having submitted the required return on the due date, and a daily penalty was also imposed on the company for its subsequent default. It was only when a prosecution was launched after the omission was impossible to remedy that the lower Court refused to impose a further penalty. The only Indian case that has been cited to me is a judgment of Burn J. in Cr. R. C. No. 601 of 1937,[2] which is a case in which the company and the Directors had been fined under S. 76, Companies Act. Burn J. acquitted the officers of the company because in the circumstances of that case he held that it could not be said that they had been "knowingly parties to the default"; but he upheld the penalty imposed on the company. Precisely the same conditions exist in this case. The learned Magistrate has found that there was no wilful default on the part of the officers of the company and the learned Public Prosecutor is not prepared to dispute that finding. So while the officers of the company were rightly acquitted, the company should have been punished. As far as the company is concerned, the order of the Magistrate is set aside and the company is ordered to pay a penalty of Rs. 50.

C. Krishnamachariar — Appellant

v.

B. Lakshmi Ammal — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 903 of 1938, Decided on 23rd July 1941, against decree of District Court, Chingleput, in A. S. No. 256 of 1935.

Madras Land Encroachment Act (3 of 1905), S. 6—S. 6 does not deprive Government or their assignee of their right to proceed in civil Court and obtain assignment from previous lessee — Defendant in such suit not raising question of compensation for improvement in trial Court—High Court in appeal will not take notice of that question.

Section 6 gives a summary remedy to the Collector but does not take away the right of the Government to proceed in a civil Court or the right of the Assignee of the Government to obtain an assignment of the land after the lease had been cancelled and proceed against the previous lessee in a civil Court : ('14) 1 AIR 1914 Mad 659, Disting. [P 77*a*,b]

Where the defendant to such suit does not raise the question of compensation for improvements effected by him the High Court in appeal will not take notice of that question. [P 77*c*]

M. Krishna Bharathi and S. Annamalai — for Appellant.

S. Ramanujachariar — for Respondent.

Judgment. — This appeal arises out of a suit for possession of a certain site which was granted to the defendant by the Government on patta on certain conditions. The defendant failed to comply with those conditions and the Revenue Divisional Officer cancelled the assignment in accordance with the terms of the patta and the Tahsildar assigned the site on 30th August 1931 to the present plaintiff. The only contention raised before me is that the suit for possession by the present plaintiff was not competent and that it was incumbent upon the Government to proceed under S. 6, Land Encroachment Act, and thus give him a right of appeal to the revenue authorities and failing that, to bring a civil suit within six months. Section 6, Land Encroachment Act, gives a summary remedy to the Collector but does not take away the right of the Government to proceed in a civil Court or the right of the Assignee of the Government to obtain an assignment of the land after the lease had been cancelled and proceed against the previous lessee in a civil Court. Learned counsel for the appellant wished to rely on 38 Mad 674,[1] but that has no application to the facts of the present case. The defendant-appellant can have no legitimate grievance if he, instead of being compelled to sue in a civil Court, is forced to come to the civil Court as a defendant in a suit instituted either by the Government or by the Government's assignee. The contention that the terms or conditions of the patta were complied with was not seriously pressed even before the lower appellate Court and nothing has been said here which would incline me to take a view different from what was taken by the learned District Judge. The appellant alleged that he had erected foundations on the patta land after the expiry of the lease at a cost of something like Rs. 250 and by this procedure he has been deprived of the compensation that he might have been able to persuade the revenue authorities to pay or to deal with him a little more leniently. I cannot however take notice of this fact. He should have asked for compensation in his written statement if he thought he was entitled to any. For the above reasons the appeal is dismissed. But in the circumstances I leave the parties to bear their own costs. Leave to appeal is refused.

Ramiah Thevar alias Ramalinga Thevar and others — Respondents.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 529 and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 498 of 1941, Decided on 8th August 1941, to revise order of Joint Magistrate, Devakottah, D/- 19th May 1941.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 147, 145 and 146 — Right of easement in respect of certain lands — Magistrate unable to decide whether right exists — He cannot order attachment of lands under section 146.

Where a Magistrate is unable under S. 147 to decide whether a right of easement in respect of certain lands exists or not he cannot order the attachment of those lands under S. 146 for such an order can only be passed in dispute with regard to immovable property which can be dealt with under Ss. 145 and 146. [P 77*h*; P 78*a*]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 147 — Evidence conflicting — Magistrate need not give definite finding.

Under S. 147 a Magistrate is not bound to give a definite finding one way or the other when the evidence is conflicting. [P 78*a*]

V. T. Rangaswami Iyengar — for Petitioner.

Order. — The question in dispute before the Magistrate was whether a right existed in the counter-petitioners to take rain water from the field of the petitioner through the bund separating the petitioner's field from the counter-petitioners' field. The learned Magistrate purported to make an inquiry under S. 145, Criminal P. C., and passed an order under S. 146 (1) ordering attachment by the Court because he was unable to decide whether such right existed or not. He clearly should have acted under S. 147, which deals with disputes with regard to easements: that section does not make any provision for action to be taken in case the Magistrate is unable to decide between the parties. If it appears to the Magistrate that such a right exists, he may issue an order prohibiting interference with the exercise of the rights; on the other hand, if it appears to the Magistrate that such right does not exist, he may make an order prohibiting any exercise of the alleged right. As he was not satisfied that either S. 147 (2) or S. 147 (3) applied, he was unable to pass an order either prohibiting interference or prohibiting the exercise of the alleged right : nor could he pass an order attaching the land; for such an order can only be passed where there is a dispute with regard to immovable property that can be dealt with under Ss. 145 and 146, Criminal P. C. The order of the Magistrate is therefore clearly wrong and must be set aside. It has been suggested by the learned counsel for the 5th counter-petitioner that the Magistrate should be directed to give a definite finding one way or the other; but a definite finding where the evidence is conflicting may not be possible. The petition is therefore allowed and the order of the lower Court set aside.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 1705 of 1939, Decided on 20th March 1941, to revise order of Special Deputy Collector, Chandragiri, D/- 12th January 1939.

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), S. 15 (4) — Amount of rent already determined by decree of civil Court — Subsequent application under S. 15 (4) in revenue Court does not lie.

When there is a decree of a civil Court determining the amount of rent payable for the relevant period, there is no room for any application to the revenue Court under S. 15 (4). The object of S. 15 (4) is clearly to enable a tenant whose liability for rent has not yet come into Court to ascertain what is the extent of that liability as scaled down and pay it into the revenue Court in order to prevent an unnecessary suit. [P 78 f, g]

P. V. Rajamannar and K. Subba Rao — for Petitioner.

Kasturi Seshagiri Rao — for Respondent.

Order. — This revision petition is preferred by the landholder against an order of the Special Deputy Collector of Chandragiri purporting to have been passed under S. 15 (4), Madras Act, 4 of 1938. The applicant before the learned Deputy Collector was the owner of a 3/16th share in an agraharam and he claimed the right to get jodi scaled down on the basis of a deposit of the arrears for faslis 1346 and 1347, not of the whole jodi of the agraharam but of the proportionate arrears due on his 3/16th share. The learned Deputy Collector, accepting evidence that in practice the applicant had been paying his proportionate share of the rent separately from the other agraharamdars and that these payments had been received, held that the liability of the applicant was only a liability for 3/16th of the total jodi and allowed the application. It does not appear to have been realized in the Court below that the question whether the liability of the applicant was a joint and several liability or a separate liability for a proportion of the whole jodi was concluded so far as these particular faslis are concerned by the decisions which led up to decrees which decrees in fact the applicant was trying to get modified.

It has been recognized that one of the lacunæ in Act 4 of 1938 is that no procedure is laid down for scaling down decrees for rent. Section 19 provides only for the scaling down of a decree for the repayment of a "debt" which term does not, strictly speaking, include a liability for rent. But it has been held in (1940) 2 M L J 825[1] that a procedure analogous to that laid down in S. 19 of the Act should be followed with reference to decrees for rent and that view has been adopted in subsequent decisions. It seems to me apparent that, when there is a decree of a civil Court determining the amount of rent payable for the relevant period, there is no room for any application to the revenue Court under S. 15 (4). The object of S. 15 (4) is clearly to enable a tenant whose liability for rent has not yet come into Court to ascertain what is the extent of that liability as scaled down and pay it into the revenue Court in order to prevent an unnecessary suit. To permit this procedure to be used when another Court has already passed a decision as to the liability for rent, would be to sanction the existence of two conflicting judicial orders, neither of which would necessarily govern the other. It is moreover apparent that any procedure for reducing the amount due under a decree passed before Act 4 of 1938 came into force with a view to giving the relief laid down under S. 15 cannot be treated as an opportunity to alter the decree apart from the process of reduction provided in the Act. I held in C. R. P. No. 2169 of 1939[2] which was a similar case though on slightly different facts to the present that the petitioner cannot under the guise of scaling down a decree for rent, get that decree amended so as to give effect to a defence which should have been put forward in the suit and was not put forward or if put forward, was not accepted. Still less can the same result be obtained by ignoring the decree and going to the Collector with an application for scaling down the rent on a basis which has been found to be untenable in the decree for the rent of the relevant period.

Turning to the facts of the present case, the application dealt with the arrears of jodi for Faslis 1340 to 1345. These Faslis are admittedly covered by two decrees, one O. S. No. 229 of 1934 and the other S. C. No. 473 of 1937 of the District Munsif's Court of Tirupati. The judgment in the latter case has been exhibited and that judgment expressly negatives the contention of the present applicant that by reason of separate possession of the 3/16th share and separate collection of the rent for that share he was liable only to 3/16th of the jodi of the whole agraharam. The learned District Munsif repels this contention on the ground that the decision in O. S. No. 229 of 1934 has decided that defendant 3 is liable jointly and severally with the other agraharamdars for the whole of the jodi. That is the suit covering the earlier Faslis in reference to which this present application is presented. It follows therefore that both of the decrees which covered the relevant Faslis proceeded upon a judicial decision binding upon the present respondent to the effect that he is liable jointly and severally for the whole of the rent of the agraharam. So long as these two decrees are in full force and effect, it is not open to the respondent to contend in proceedings for scaling down the rent of those Faslis that his liability is only for 3/16th of the rent. I doubt very much whether the learned Deputy Collector was right in entertaining the application at all when the matter was covered by civil Court's decrees. In my opinion the proper course would have been to refer the applicant to the Court which passed the decrees. But even assuming that the procedure taken by the respondent is one open to him, he clearly cannot be allowed to use the right to scale down the rent as a right to reopen the question of joint or several liability which has been finally decided for those particular Faslis by decrees of a competent Court. In the result therefore the revision petition is allowed with costs and the application is dismissed with costs throughout.

WADSWORTH AND PATANJALI SASTRI JJ.

Nagore Durga represented by Managing Trustees S. Sultan Kaliba Sahib and another — Plaintiffs — Appellants

v.

Chatram Manager Kannu Pillai — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 1039 of 1939, Decided on 14th August 1941, against decree of District Court, East Tanjore at Negapatam, D/- 17th August 1939.

(a) Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), S. 17—Object — Scope — S. 17 applies to all suits against defaulting tenants whether agriculturist or not.

The object of S. 17 is clearly to save the landholders from the necessity of filing large numbers of suits which would be met by payments under S. 15 of the Act, and a claim for the cancellation of the earlier arrears. The plain language of S. 17 includes all suits against defaulting tenants, agriculturists or non-agriculturists and covers any suit in respect of arrears of rent accrued for Fasli 1345 or any prior fasli and is not restricted to such a suit filed against an agriculturist. Consequently S. 17 saves limitation in respect of the suit for arrears of rent for Fasli 1344 due from a non-agriculturist. [P 80*e*,f,g]

(b) Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), S. 19 — Applicability.

Section 19 certainly applies to a decree which is passed against both agriculturists and non-agriculturists, though the relief may be confined only to the former. [P 80*b*]

K. V. Ramachandra Iyer — for Appellants.

S. Ramachandra Iyer and R. Sundaralingam — for Respondent.

Wadsworth J. — The only question in this second appeal is whether S. 17, Madras Act 4 of 1938 saves limitation in respect of a suit for arrears of rent for fasli 1344 due from a non-agriculturist. The arrears in question accrued due on 1st July 1935, the suit was filed on 1st December 1938 and would clearly be barred by limitation unless the plaintiffs-appellants here are entitled to the benefit of S. 17 of the Act. Section 17 says :

> Notwithstanding anything contained in the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908, or the Malabar Tenancy Act, 1929, or in any law of limitation or procedure in force for the time being, no suit or execution proceedings in respect of arrears of rent accrued for Fasli 1345 or any prior Fasli which, under the existing law, would become barred between 1st October 1937 and 30th September 1938, shall be so barred and the landholder . . . . . shall be entitled to file a suit or institute execution proceedings for recovery thereof, on or before 31st December 1938 . . . . .

Then follows a provision extending the period for filing suits in cases where the rent for fasli 1347 has been paid within the time stipulated and the section concludes with a proviso covering cases in which applications under sub-s. (4) of S. 15 are pending on 31st December 1938 or 31st December 1939 as the case may be, extending the period of limitation to two months from the date of the order on such applications. Now the plain language of this section covers any suit in respect of arrears of rent accrued for fasli 1345 or any prior fasli and it is not restricted to such a suit filed against an agriculturist. In Act 4 of 1938 there are various sections dealing with decrees which are affected by the procedure under the Act. Section 18 deals expressly with a decree passed against an agriculturist. Section 19 deals with a decree for the repayment of a debt which has to be scaled down on the application of an agriculturist judgment-debtor. But this section certainly applies to a decree which is passed against both agriculturists and non-agriculturists, though the relief may be confined only to the former. Section 20 expressly applies only to a decree passed against an agriculturist. Sections 22 and 23 dealing with sales are not confined to decrees against agriculturists, but their operation is confined to cases in which the properties of agriculturists have been sold. It will thus appear that under the scheme of the Act the Legislature has distinguished between those judicial proceedings which are only against agriculturists and those judicial proceedings not necessarily taken against agriculturists solely but which affect the economic position of agriculturists.

Having regard to the distinction so made it is at least arguable that the use of general language in S. 17 was not accidental and that the fact that this section comes within an Act intended to benefit agriculturists and is closely connected with another section intended to benefit agriculturist tenants, is not of itself a sufficient warranty for restricting the scope of the section to suits against agriculturists. Moreover, the proviso to the section which imports the consideration of sub-s. (4) of S. 15 may itself come into effect where a non-agriculturist has instituted proceedings. Suppose a non-agriculturist made a deposit under sub-s. (4) of S. 15 claiming to be an agriculturist and claiming the benefits of that clause and his claim is resisted (as we understand happened in the present case) it would be difficult to deny to the landholder the benefits of the proviso to S. 17 merely because the contest on the application under S. 15 (4) ultimately ended in a decision that the applicant is not an agriculturist. The object of S. 17 is clearly to save the landholders from the necessity of filing large numbers of suits which would be met by payments under S. 15 and a claim for the cancellation of the earlier arrears. The landholders are permitted to stay their hand in order to give the tenants an opportunity of taking advantage of the provisions of S. 15 so that unnecessary litigation may be avoided. In large estates there will be a very obvious difficulty in ascertaining which of the many thousands of defaulters are entitled to the benefits of the Act and it is not unreasonable to suppose that the Legislature intended to discourage unnecessary litigation by allowing the landholders an extended period of limitation for all suits in respect of arrears of rent which are likely to be affected by the new statutory provisions, without imposing upon the landholder the necessity of ascertaining positively in every case whether the defaulter would or would not be entitled to the benefits of the Act.

We have, therefore, a section the plain words of which would include suits against all defaulting tenants, agriculturists or non-agriculturists, and the section read in its plain terms does not appear to run contrary to the general object of the Act. Nor is this interpretation of it unreasonable or improbable. In such circumstances there seems to be no justification for adding to this section words which would restrict its scope beyond the actual terms of the section. We are, therefore, of opinion that the appellant in this case was entitled to the benefit of S. 17 to save limitation in respect of arrears of rent for fasli 1344. We allow the second appeal with costs and remand the suit to the trial Court for ascertainment of the amount due for fasli 1344 and for passing a decree in accordance with the finding. Court-fee paid on the memorandum of second appeal will be refunded.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 733 and Criminal Revn. Petn. No 692 of 1940, Decided on 10th January 1941, to revise order of Chief Presidency Magistrate, Egmore, Madras, D/- 19th August 1940.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 197 — Assistant Police Commissioner arresting accused for offence under Madras City Police Act — On his order given while purporting to act in discharge of his official duty, Police Sub-Inspectors beating accused — Assistant Police Commissioner not removable from his office except with Secretary of State's sanction — Court held could not take cognizance of his alleged offence without Governor's previous sanction.

The Assistant Commissioner of Police arrested the accused for an offence under the Madras City Police Act. Acting under his order, given while purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty, the Police Sub-Inspectors beat the accused who thereupon filed a complaint against the acts of the Assistant Commissioner of Police :

Held that since the Assistant Commissioner of Police was not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of the Secretary of State, no Court could take cognizance of offence alleged against him except with the previous sanction of the Governor of the Province. [P 81*g*]

Crown Prosecutor — for the Crown.

FACTS.—The petitioner herein complained to the Presidency Magistrate against the respondent, accused 1, Mr. Yusuf Ali Syed, the Assistant Commissioner of Police, Madras, and two Sub-Inspectors of offences under Ss. 323 and 352, Penal Code, read with Ss. 109 and 111, Penal Code, alleging that on account of long-standing enmity between himself and accused 1, he, accused 1, along with some policeman, saw the complainant near the Thousand Lights, took him in his car and after going some distance asked the complainant to get down from the car and walk the rest of the distance to the police station in company with the policeman. On reaching the police station, on the orders of accused 1, the two Sub-Inspectors who are accused 2 and 3 beat him on several parts of the body with a stick and fisted him resulting in injuries one of which was a bleeding injury. Accused 1 contended that material facts have been suppressed, that the act complained of was not an isolated act but in consequence of what transpired the previous day when the police raided the petitioner's premises which was used as a common gaming house for the purpose of accepting bets on horse races and seized incriminating documents, that as the petitioner who was wanted escaped, he was arrested on the next day. He further contended that the acts complained of were done in the course of the discharge of his duties appertaining to the office and that sanction of the Governor under S. 197, Criminal P. C., was a condition precedent and as no sanction was obtained the proceedings of the Presidency Magistrate were ab initio void and ultra vires. The Presidency Magistrate upheld the contention of accused 1 and quashed the proceedings against him alone. Against this order the complainant preferred this revision petition.

Order. — The house of the complainant was raided by the respondent, the Assistant Commissioner of Police, under the provisions of S. 42, Madras City Police Act, on 9th July last and instruments of gaming on horse races were found. The complainant escaped and he was arrested by the respondent on 10th July and taken to the police station. Two Sub-Inspectors are stated to have beaten him in the station under the orders of the respondent and as urged by the Crown Prosecutor the respondent gave the order while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty. He is not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of the Secretary of State and S. 197, Criminal P. C., enacts that no Court can take cognizance of such offence except with the previous sanction of the Governor of the Province in the exercise of his individual judgment. The revision petition therefore fails and is dismissed.

Criminal Appeal No. 317 of 1940, Decided on 22nd August 1940, against order of Court of Session, Cuddapah Division, D/- 26th February 1940.

Criminal Tribes Act (1924), S. 23 (1) (b) — Long interval (5 years) between accused coming out of prison after serving last sentence and commission of offence is "special reason to contrary" within S. 23 (1) (b).

A long interval of about five years between the accused coming out of prison after serving his last sentence and the commission of the offence is a "special reason to the contrary" within the meaning of S. 23 (1) (b) for imposing a lesser sentence than transportation for life : ('29) 16 A I R 1929 Mad 841, Rel. on. [P 82*a*, b]

K. V. Achari for Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

Judgment.— The appellant has been convicted under Ss. 397 and 324, Penal Code, and S. 23, cl. (1) (b), Criminal Tribes Act, and sentenced to transportation for life. The appellant pleaded guilty to the charges and there is no ground for interference with the conviction. But his last conviction was on 12th March 1928 when he was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for seven years, and the present offence was committed on 15th November 1939. There was thus an interval of about five years between his coming out of prison after serving his last sentence and the commission of the offence and as held in 53 Mad 80,[1] this is a special reason to the contrary within the meaning of S. 23 (1) (b), Criminal Tribes Act, for awarding a lesser sentence than transportation for life. This was overlooked by the Sessions Judge and having regard to all the circumstances a sentence of rigorous imprisonment for seven years would suffice. The sentence is therefore reduced to rigorous imprisonment for seven years and otherwise the appeal is dismissed.

Second Appeal No. 1081 of 1938, Decided on 1st August 1941, against decree of Dist. Court, Kurnool, in A. S. No. 123 of 1937.

(a) Minor — Guardian — Negligence — Suit for possession by vendee from guardian on basis of sale deed — Guardian successful in his defence that sale should not be upheld and possession should not be decreed—Court finding minor liable for particular sum and granting decree for same — Decree held not erroneous.

The vendee from the minors' guardian sued for recovery of possession on foot of a sale deed executed by the guardian. The guardian successfully prevailed upon the Court and succeeded in his defence that the sale ought not to be upheld and that possession of the properties should not be decreed to the plaintiff. The Court went into the question as to what items of consideration for which the sale deed was executed by the guardian were really binding on the minor and finding that a particular sum was payable to the vendee plaintiff, granted a decree for the sum which was found to be binding on the minors :

Held that the decree could not be said to be erroneous since when a decree for possession was refused, the Court could pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff for recovery of the sum found to be binding on the minors. [P 84*a*]

(b) Minor — Decree against — No fraud or gross negligence on guardians's part in conduct of suit — Decree cannot be set aside merely because of guardian's failure to appeal—Guardian without funds cannot be said to be negligent in not preferring appeal.

If there is no fraud or gross negligence on the part of the guardian of the minor in the conduct of the suit, then the decree that is passed in that suit cannot be challenged on the mere ground that the guardian failed to carry the matter in appeal. Unless the guardian had sufficient funds to prefer and prosecute an appeal against the decree, it cannot be said that the guardian acted with any negligence in not having preferred any appeal. Judgment. — This is an appeal filed by the defendant against the decree of the District Judge of Kurnool passed by him in A. S. NO. 123 of 1937. The plaintiffs in the action Venipenta Venkatayya and Chinna Venkatayya are brothers. During their minority, a sale was effected by their mother and guardian in favour of the appellant for a sum of Rs. 300. The vendee was not able to get possession and therefore filed O. S. No. 40 of 1931 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Markapur for recovery of possession of the property sold to him. The mother was also made a party as defendant 3; the two minors being made defendant 1 and 2. The mother declined to act as the guardian of her minor sons and thereupon their maternal uncle one Obiah was appointed their guardian. It is found that Obiah raised all possible defences to the suit including the question whether any portion of the sum of Rs. 300 which was the consideration for the sale was binding on the minors. The Court found that the properties were really worth very much more than the sum of Rs. 300 for which it was sold and therefore declined to uphold the sale and to give possession to the plaintiffs. The Court, however, held that two debts for the discharge of which the sale was effected were binding on the minors. One of them, a debt due to Baliah, is now admitted to have been contracted by the father of the minors and that it is therefore a proper debt. As regards the second debt which was due to one Nemiliah, he had obtained a sale from the mother and in execution of the money decree which Baliah got for the recovery of his debt, he filed a claim petition, I. A. NO. 180 of 1921. It was ordered on the claim petition that Nemiliah was not entitled to enforce his right as the vendee and that he was entitled to a charge for Rs. 116. Therefore execution of Baliah's decree was directed to proceed subject to a charge for Rs. 116 in favour of Nemiliah.

In order to avoid that sale which was about to take place in execution of Baliah's decree, the sale in favour of the present defendant was effected by the mother of the minors and the sale was for the purpose of discharging Baliah's debt and also Nemiliah's debt to the extent to which a charge had been declared in favour of Nemiliah. It is upon this sale deed that O. S. No. 40 of 1931 was filed by the present defendant. In that suit the District Munsif found that both Baliah's debt and Nemiliah's debt were binding on the minors. But he found that the property was worth much more than the consideration mentioned in the sale deed. He refused to give a decree for possession but at the same time he gave a charge decree to the extent of the moneys which were advanced by the plaintiff in that action and which went to the discharge of debts binding on the minors. A preliminary decree was passed and money not having been paid, an application for a final decree was filed and the final decree followed. In execution of the final decree, the property was brought to sale and purchased by the plaintiff therein and he got possession. The present suit is filed by the two brothers one of whom has attained majority for a declaration that the decree in O. S. No. 40 of 1931 is not binding on them on the ground that their guardian ad litem was guilty of fraud and gross negligence in the conduct of the previous suit.

The trial Court found that all the defences that were open to the minors were advanced by Obiah their guardian in the previous suit, that he appeared at the trial, that he adduced all the evidence available and that the Court passed a decree for money and gave a mortgage decree for the sum found binding on the minors. On appeal the District Judge has not found that Obiah failed to advance any defence which it was open to him to advance. The judgment proceeded upon the footing that all the defences were put forward in the previous suit. One allegation which the plaintiffs put forward in the present suit, namely, that the guardian ad litem, did not appear at the trial in the previous suit has been found by the District Munsif not to be correct. He finds that the guardian ad litem was present at the trial in the previous suit. He apparently did not go into the witness-box for the reason that he did not know personally any of the facts which had to be placed before the Court. The mother of the minors was examined and three other witnesses were also examined. Mr. Kasturi Seshagiri Rao, the learned advocate for the respondents, is not able to suggest any defence which Obiah might have put forward and which he did not in fact put forward in the previous suit. Nor is it alleged that any evidence oral or documentary was not placed before the Court which tried O. S. No. 40 of 1931. The chief complaint is that the Court passed a decree which it ought not to have passed, that on the findings arrived by it, the Court should have dismissed the suit leaving it to the plaintiff to enforce his right to recover the sums which were found binding on the minor defendants and that the Court fell into a grievous error in passing a mortgage decree. It is also said that an appeal ought to have been preferred on behalf of the minors and that no appeal was in fact preferred on their behalf. The District Judge also finds that the District Munsif who was executing the decree in Baliah's suit and in the course of which a charge was given in favour of Nemiliah also fell into a grievous error in creating what the District Judge terms a charge on that claim petition.

To start with, what the Court did in the claim petition is not the subject of attack in the present suit. What we are concerned with is whether there was any fraud or gross negligence in the conduct of the previous suit (O. S. No. 40 of 1931). I do not agree with the District Judge in his statement that the District Munsif fell into a grievous error in passing the decree which he did in that suit. The suit was by the vendee from the minor's guardian for recovery of possession on foot of a sale deed executed by the guardian. The sale itself was for the purpose of discharging at least one debt which was the father's debt and another debt for which a charge had been created in a claim proceeding. The guardian (the maternal uncle) successfully prevailed upon the Court and succeeded in his defence that the sale ought not to be upheld and that possession of the properties should not be decreed to the plaintiff. The District Munsif had necessarily to go into the question as to what items of consideration for which the sale deed was executed by the mother were really binding on the minor defendants. The Court found that a particular sum was payable to the vendee plaintiff. Why he should have been directed to a separate suit and why he should not have been given a decree for the sum which was found to be binding on the minors, it is difficult to see. No doubt the suit was one for ejectment. But one of the important questions which had to be decided was how far the consideration was binding on the minors. That being decided by the Court, there is no reason why when a decree for possession is refused, the Court should not pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff for recovery of that sum; why again a charge decree which was executable in pursuance of that very decree is not again clear. At any rate, I cannot see any grievous error in the decree that was passed by the District Munsif in O. S. No. 40 of 1931.

Assuming that the District Munsif was not justified in giving a decree that he did, how can it be said that the guardian was bound to prefer an appeal and that his omission to do so gives a good ground for the minors to file the present suit. This assumes that a guardian in every case must spend the funds of the estate in carrying a judgment of the trial Court in appeal. For this purpose he must have necessary funds. Unless the plaintiffs allege that the guardian had sufficient funds to prefer and prosecute an appeal against the decree of the District Munsif in O. S. No. 40 of 1931, it cannot be said that the guardian acted with any negligence in not having preferred any appeal. If he had no funds he could not possibly file an appeal. Besides the court-fee payable, there are other expenses to be incurred for an appeal. What appears to one Judge as a grievous error may not appear to another to be such and unless we can postulate that in every case the guardian of a minor defendant must carry the decree in appeal and that in default of his so doing, the plaintiff is not entitled to take advantage of that decree and that the decree is liable to be set aside is a proposition for which there is absolutely no authority and it is not supported by any reason, justice or equity. The plaintiff files a suit on his sale deed and if no one defends the action on behalf of the minor defendant, he has to get a Court guardian appointed and put the said guardian in possession of sufficient funds to carry on the defence. There is no duty on his part to invite the guardian ad litem to prefer an appeal against the decree on pain of having the decree reopened later on at the instance of the defendant. If there is no fraud or gross negligence in the conduct of the suit, then the decree, that is passed in that suit cannot be challenged on the mere ground that the guardian failed to carry the matter in appeal. In this case the plaintiff who was not given a decree for possession filed an appeal and the minors' guardian defended the appeal and was successful in the appellate Court. The appeal was dismissed. On these facts, it is impossible to sustain the conclusion of the lower appellate Court that any fraud or gross negligence is made out which entitles the plaintiffs to set aside the decree in O. S. No. 40 of 1931. The appeal is allowed with costs here and in the lower appellate Court and the decree of the District Munsif is restored. Leave to appeal is refused.

Second Appeal No. 118 of 1938, Decided on 23rd January 1941, against decree of Sub-Judge, Bezwada, D/- 27th August 1937.

(a) Madras Estates Land Act (1 of 1908), S. 117 — Sale in execution of rent decree—Personal notice to defaulter is not necessary.

There is no necessity under S. 117 to give personal notice of a sale in execution of a rent decree to the defaulter, the kind of notice contemplated being by beat of drum in the village and by an affixture in a conspicuous place in the village. [P 85*d*]

(b) Madras Estates Land Act (1 of 1908 as amended by Act 8 of 1934), S. 125—Amendment is not retrospective.

The amendment of S. 125 by Act 8 of 1934 has no retrospective effect. [P 86*c*]

(c) Madras Estates Land Act (1 of 1908 as amended by Act 8 of 1934), Ss. 125 and 127 — Rent decree—Execution—Sale of holding puts an end to landlord's charge in respect of arrears accrued due since decree at time of sale.

Under S. 125 as it stood before the amendment of 1934, read in the light of S. 127, the sale of a holding in execution of a decree for rent must be deemed to put an end to the landlord's charge over that holding in respect of the arrears and interest thereon which have accrued due since the decree at the time of the sale. The amendment of S. 125 by Act 8 of 1934 merely clarifies the existing law : 21 Cal 169, Approved. [P 86*d*, e]

Judgment. — The plaintiff who is the appellant here brought a suit for a declaration that a sale in execution of a decree, obtained in S. S. No. 287 of 1924 was not binding upon him. The suit in question was brought against one Gangulu, who was the original pattadar of land situated in an estate under the Madras Estates Land Act. We are concerned throughout this appeal with the Act prior to the amendment of 1934. Gangulu fell into arrears and two decrees were obtained against him. The first was in S. S. No. 373 of 1922 and the second was in S. S. No. 287 of 1924. The earlier decree was executed in 1926 after the second decree had been obtained, and in the execution proceedings, the land put up for sale was purchased by the present appellant on 5th May 1926. I am informed that this land was only a portion of the holding of Gangulu. After the purchase the appellant does not appear to have produced the sale certificate before the land-holder, as he should have done under S. 146 (1) of the Act; but he paid the rent and got a receipt showing that he had paid the rent on his own account. In subsequent years, rent was paid by his agent and the receipts wrongly indicate that it was paid on account of the registered pattadar Gangulu. In 1933 the land-holder proceeded to execute the second decree obtained in 1924 and in the course of execution without notice to the appellant he brought the holding to sale and purchased it himself. Subsequently the land-holder ejected the appellant and it was his dispossession which gave rise to the suit.

Two contentions have been urged in appeal. One is that the second sale is bad for want of notice to the appellant who must be deemed to be the defaulter in the light of the Full Bench ruling in 1941 M W N 35[1] as interpreted by a later Full Bench ruling in S. A. No. 820 of 1936.[2] The second is that, whether the sale is bad for want of notice or not, it is bad because the charge in respect of the arrears which had accrued due after the first decree at the time of the first sale must be deemed to have been wiped out by that sale so far as the liability of the portion of the holding sold is concerned. It seems to me that the appellant must fail on the first contention, for there appears to be no necessity under S. 117, Estates Land Act, to give personal notice of a sale in execution of a rent decree to the defaulter. The kind of notice contemplated is by beat of drum in the village and by an affixture in a conspicuous place in the village. It is, therefore, not necessary to go into the question whether there has been such recognition of the appellant by the land-holder as would enable him to claim rights as a defaulter even though he has not complied with the formalities required by S. 146.

The second contention seems to me to be more substantial. It is true that under S. 5 of the Act a first charge is created on the holding in respect of the arrears due thereon, so that the arrears due under the second decree would be a charge on the holding just as much as the arrears due under the first decree; and it is also true that S. 118 read with S. 126 contemplates only the sale of so much of the holding as is necessary to satisfy the particular demand which in the present case must be the amount due under the first decree. It is argued that the provisions of S. 125 whereby the sale is free of incumbrances other than those specified will not extend to statutory incumbrances such as are created by S. 5 and it must therefore be held that when the sale was held in execution of the first decree, though the proclamation did not recite the existence of the second decree, and no notice was taken to the purchaser at the time of the subsequent sale, the sale under the first decree must be deemed to be a sale subject to the charge for rent in respect of the second decree which was not being worked out by that particular sale. This argument would be forcible argument were it not for the provisions of S. 127. By sub-s. (c) of that section, if a sale results in a surplus after paying the costs and the amount of the arrears in respect of which the sale was held, the land-holder has a right to appropriate from and out of the surplus any rent which may have fallen due to him in respect of the holding between the date of the suit and the sale.

The effect of this provision seems to be to make the sale a sale in liquidation not only of the charge for the arrears in respect of which a sale was expressly held but also in liquidation of the charge for any subsequent arrears due on the same holding. To hold otherwise would involve the anomalous consequence that the land-holder would be entitled to liquidate a portion of the charge in respect of the latter arrears from and out of the proceeds of that sale and to treat that charge as still subsisting for any balance and bring the same property to sale again. The original defaulter would get a price which was determined by the value of the land less the amount of arrears including any subsequent arrears and the purchaser would pay a price which would take into consideration the amount of subsequent arrears. But the landholder would have a right to deduct those arrears from the price so paid and also would retain the right to claim those arrears over again to the extent to which they had not been satisfied from the purchaser of the land. The same question came up before the Calcutta High Court in a case under the Bengal Tenancy Act the provisions of which are in this respect essentially similar to those of the Estates Land Act: vide 21 Cal 169.[3] The learned Judges point out that the view similar to that which has been put forward on behalf of the respondent in this case would result in the landlord having a charge on the tenure as well as on the surplus sale proceeds, and, if that was the law, would lead to great injustice for the defaulter might be made to pay the full amount of the arrears without getting the full value of his tenure from the auction purchaser and the auction purchaser would get a tenure for less than its full value without having to pay the arrears of rent.

The learned Subordinate Judge who heard the appeal in the Court below has rejected the appellant's contention on the simple ground that the amendment of S. 125 by Act 8 of 1934 expressly provides that the purchaser at the rent sale shall take subject to any incumbrance created before the passing of the Act but not subject to any arrears of rent due in respect of the holding before the date of sale or to interest on such arrears, whether a decree has been obtained or not for such arrears or interest. After stating quite correctly that this amendment will have no retrospective effect, he assumes that the amendment necessarily makes a change in the law and that therefore the law as it stood prior to the amendment made such sales subject to any claim for arrears subsequent to the date of the decree. It seems to me that no such assumption is warranted and that the effect of the amendment of S. 125 by Act 8 of 1934 is merely to clarify the existing law and to remove the possibility of a contention such as has been urged before me on behalf of the respondent. I am of opinion that under S. 125 as it stood before the amendment, read in the light of S. 127, the sale of a holding in execution of a decree for rent must be deemed to put an end to the landlord's charge over that holding in respect of the arrears and interest thereon which have accrued due since the decree at the time of the sale. It follows, therefore, that the sale of the appellant's holding in pursuance of the decree obtained anterior to the purchase by the appellant was illegal. I accordingly allow the second appeal with costs throughout and restore the decree of the trial Court. Leave to appeal is granted.

Appeal No. 11 of 1941, Decided on 20th August 1941, from order of Krishnaswami Ayyangar J., in Appln. No. 284 of 1940, D/- 17th February 1941.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (1909), S. 9 (g)—Adjudication under S. 9 (g)—Petition and affidavit verifying same should be read together — Sufficient details of facts on which creditor relies should be given.

Where the petition for adjudication under S. 9 (g) states that the debtor has given notice to his creditors that he has suspended or that he is about to suspend payment of his debts and the affidavit verifying the petition shows that this is in fact the case, there is compliance with the law's requirements. The petition and the affidavit should be read together and if the petitioning creditor sets out in sufficient detail the facts on which he is relying, the debtor can have no complaint whether the information is contained in the petition or the affidavit. The Court has to be satisfied that there has been notice of suspension of payment or that the debtor has intimated to his creditors that he is about to suspend payment and the supporting affidavit is filed for that purpose : ('35) 22 A I R 1935 Rang 352, Not approved. [P 87 f]

T. K. Srinivasathathachariar and T. V. Srinivasan — for Respondents.

Leach C. J. — The appellant and one Ramanlal Trikamlal Desai carried on business in partnership in Madras under the style of Prabhulal Madhavlal Desai. On 14th October 1940, respondents 1 and 2 filed a petition in this Court asking for an order adjudicating the appellant and his partner insolvents. On 17th February 1941 an order of adjudication was passed. This appeal is against that order. It may be mentioned that the correctness of the order has not been challenged by Ramanlal. In the petition three acts of insolvency were alleged, namely, (1) with intent to defeat and delay the firm's creditors Ramanlal had absented himself from the firm's usual place of business, (2) with similar intent he had secluded himself so as to deprive the creditors of the means of communicating with him and (3) the debtors had intimated that they had suspended payment of their dues. The learned Judge sitting in insolvency (Krishnaswami Ayyangar J.) has found that all these allegations are true. The appellant contends that the action of his partner in absenting himself from the place of business and in secluding himself cannot affect him, but he concedes, as he must, that if the appellant's partner gave notice of suspension of payment, the law allows both of them to be adjudicated. The appellant, however, says that there was no notice of suspension of payment. It is not necessary to consider whether there is any substance in the appellant's first contention because it is obvious that in this case notice of suspension of payment was given. Before considering the evidence relating to the notice of suspension of payment it is necessary to deal with a preliminary argument advanced on behalf of the appellant to the effect that the petition is defective in so far as it relates to the third act of insolvency. The allegation in the petition is couched in these words: "On the evening of 5th October 1940 the debtors intimated that they had suspended payment of their dues." In para. 3 of the affidavit which was filed in support of the petition it is said :

> On the evening of 5th October 1940 the second debtor when pressed for payment intimated to me and Mr. Vallabhdas, a partner of Vallabhdas and Brothers, another creditor, that the firm was no longer in a position to meet its dues and that it had suspended payment of debts due by it and that he intended to file an insolvency petition.

It has been argued by Mr. Naidu on behalf of the appellant that the actual words used by Ramanlal should have been set out in the petition and that a defect of this nature is not cured by anything contained in the affidavit filed in verification. In this connexion, Mr. Naidu has drawn our attention to the decision of the Rangoon High Court in 13 Rang 686.[1] In that case the petition merely alleged that the debtors had given notice to the petitioners as well as to their other creditors that they had suspended or were about to suspend payment of their debts, but in the affidavit which verified the petition the deponent made this statement :

> I say that the debtors' manager and kartha further told me that they were not in a position to pay in full to their creditors.

The Court held that the act of insolvency alleged in the petition was not couched in terms sufficiently clear and precise to be the basis of an insolvency petition or to justify the Court in passing an order of adjudication. It was also held that an affidavit filed in verification could not be read in conjunction with the petition in order to supply a deficiency in the petition itself. With great respect, we are unable to accept this judgment as representing a correct statement of the law. In our opinion technicality is here carried too far. Where the petition states that the debtor has given notice to his creditors that he has suspended or that he is about to suspend payment of his debts and the affidavit verifying the petition shows that this is in fact the case, there is compliance with the law's requirements. The petition and the affidavit should be read together and if the petitioning creditor sets out in sufficient detail the facts on which he is relying, the debtor can have no complaint whether the information is contained in the petition or the affidavit. The Court has to be satisfied that there has been notice of suspension of payment or that the debtor has intimated to his creditors that he is about to suspend payment and the supporting affidavit is filed for that purpose. In the present case Krishnaswami Ayyangar J. held that the petition was sufficiently clearly worded and we are in full agreement with him. Turning now to the facts, the evidence is that Mr. Babu Bhai, a partner in respondent 1's firm met Ramanlal on the evening of 5th October 1940, and demanded payment of Rs. 7000, which was due to his firm by the insolvents. Thereupon, Ramanlal replied :

> My firm is not in a position to pay your moneys. I am not going to pay anyone anything. I want to file my insolvency.

A clearer intimation of suspension of payment is hardly possible to imagine; but it has been contended that the Court should not give these words their plain and ordinary meaning because Mr. Babu Bhai renewed his demand the next day. It is said that the renewal of the demand shows that he did not regard Ramanlal's statement to him on the 5th as being an intimation of suspension of payment. Mr. Babu Bhai was asked in cross-examination why he made a demand after the notice which he received on 5th October. His reply was that he made the demand "hoping against hope", but that the statement of the day before convinced him that the insolvents would not pay. We consider that there is no substance in this appeal which consequently will be dismissed with costs in favour of respondents 1 and 2. The costs will come out of the estate.

Appeals Nos. 127 and 136 of 1939, Decided on 24th September 1940, against appellate order of District Court, West Tanjore, D/- 27th July 1939.

(a) Insolvency—Adjudication—Application—Date of admission of.

On the presentation of an insolvency petition on 3rd July the Court ordered "check and file emergently." It was checked and was filed, and on the same day the Court further ordered that publication charges should be deposited by 7th July. On 7th July notice and publication were ordered :

Held that the date of admission was 3rd July and not 7th July. No doubt the order to issue notice may constitute the act of admission in many cases but it cannot be a universal rule of law: ('40) 27 A I R 1940 Mad 624, Expl. [P 89*a*]

(b) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 51—"Assets realized" — Sale of three lots of property originating from single proclamation — Amounts deposited on different dates—Assets are realized on dates of deposit into Court for each lot and not only on date of last deposit.

No doubt assets are realized only when the full amount of the bid is deposited. But where three lots of properties are sold originating from a single proclamation and the amounts are paid on different dates the assets are realized on the dates on which deposit for each lot is made and not only the date on which deposit is made for the third lot: 26 Mad 179, Dissent.; ('25) 12 A I R 1925 Mad 248, Ref.; ('25) 12 A I R 1925 Cal 966, Rel. on. [P 89*b*,g]

(c) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 51—"Benefit of execution"—Meaning of.

The phrase "benefit of execution" in S. 51 means the sum realized less the costs of execution: C. M. A. No. 175 of 1937, Foll. [P 90*b*] (d) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 51—Official Receiver is entitled to interest on assets realized.

Under S. 51, the Official Receiver is entitled to interest on the assets realized as this is a matter analogous to restitution. [P 90*b*]

Judgment. — These are appeals by five persons who were in 1933 some of the creditors of one Kasinatha Aiyar. One of the appellants in C. M. S. A. No. 136 (respondent 6 in the Courts below) was pursuing execution against Kasinatha Aiyar and on 30th June 1933 three lots of Kasinatha Aiyar's property were sold in court auction. Two lots in Annakudi village were sold for Rs. 7500, which amount was paid in full there and then. The third lot in Manikandi village was sold for Rs. 4520. One quarter of this amount was deposited on 30th June as required by O. 21, R. 84, and the remaining three-quarters on 4th July. The sum of Rs. 12,020 was treated as assets realized and rateably distributed amongst the appellants and another creditor who has not appealed. On 3rd July an insolvency petition was presented against Kasinatha Aiyar which resulted in his adjudication. The Official Receiver in administering his estate applied to the Court for an order directing the appellants to pay to him the sums which had thus been distributed to them with interest; and such an order has been passed in appeal by the learned District Judge of West Tanjore under the provisions of S. 51, Provincial Insolvency Act. Whether that order is right or wrong is the issue in these appeals. Section 51 (1), Provincial Insolvency Act, runs as follows :

> Where execution of a decree has issued against the property of a debtor, no person shall be entitled to the benefit of the execution against the receiver except in respect of assets realized in the course of the execution by sale or otherwise before the date of the admission of the petition.

There are four points for determination in these appeals : (i) What is the date of the admission of the insolvency petition ? (ii) What is the date (or are the dates) of the realization of the assets ? (iii) If the receiver is found entitled to all or any of these assets what is the precise meaning of benefit of the execution ? and (iv) Is the receiver entitled to interest on any sum awarded to him ? On the first point the District Judge has held that the insolvency petition was admitted on 3rd July. I have already mentioned that it was presented on that date. On its presentation the Court ordered 'check and file emergently.' It was checked and was filed, and on the same day the Court further ordered that publication charges should be deposited by 7th July. On 7th July notice and publication were ordered. It is now argued for the appellants that the insolvency petition was not 'admitted' until 7th July and I am referred to a ruling in (1940) 1 M L J 350[1] as an authority for the position that the order to issue notice constitutes the act of admission. In many cases this may well be so but it cannot be a universal rule of law. In the present case it cannot be disputed that the Court on 3rd July accepted the insolvency petition as having been validly presented, and that in my opinion, means that the insolvency petition was admitted on that day. I hold accordingly and it will now follow that any assets realized after 3rd July must go to the Official Receiver.

I come accordingly to the second point, and here repeat that two sums, Rs. 7500 and Rs. 1130 respectively, were paid into Court on 30th June, and that Rs. 3390 was paid in on 4th July. Clearly then the Official Receiver is entitled to at least Rs. 3390. He is also entitled to the sum of Rs. 1130. It has been held by a Bench of this Court, see 48 Mad 656,[2] that in a case of this kind assets are realized only when the full amount of the bid is deposited. There remains the principal item of Rs. 7500. This sum too has been held by the learned District Judge to have been realized only on 4th July, on the authority in 26 Mad 179.[3] That is the decision of a single learned Judge, Sir Arnold White, then Chief Justice of Madras, from which I must most respectfully express my dissent. I do so for the following reasons:— In the first place, it seems contrary to plain language and to common sense to say that Rs. 7500 which was actually realized on 30th June was not realized until 4th July. The learned Chief Justice gives no reasons for his view. It seems to me upon a critical examination of the position that the assets can be deemed not to have been realized on 30th June only if they are held insecurely and may prove, on the happening of some subsequent event, not to be assets after all, but only a temporary deposit. That is clearly the reason why the 25 per cent. deposit of Rs. 1000 in this case was not assets, until the remaining 75 per cent. had been paid. If the 75 per cent. were not paid, immediate resale of the property is obligatory : see O. 21, R. 86. There is therefore no sale and no assets can have been realized.

Now the subsequent event which the learned District Judge here holds converts the Rs. 7500 paid on 30th June into assets realized on 4th July is the payment of the remaining Rs. 3390 upon the third lot. I ask myself in vain why it should have this effect. The two transactions are quite distinct. If the Rs. 3390 were not paid and a resale were necessary under O. 21, R. 86 it is conceded that the resale would be confined to the third lot. How then can the nature of the payment made on 30th June be in any way affected by the payment or nonpayment on 4th July of money due on different property ? It is also clear law that when a sale is set aside under O. 21, R. 90 it can be set aside in respect of one lot only: see 1910 M W N 834[4] and 59 Mad 438.[5] It seems to me therefore very evident that the sale of three lots of property — though originating from a single proclamation of sale—is really equivalent to three sales. It is impossible to regard such a sale as one and indivisible on which basis alone, I think, can there be any logical principle for following 26 Mad 179.[3] I have been referred to only two other decisions on this matter. In 33 C L J 7,[6] (a judgment delivered in 1920) a Bench of the Calcutta High Court follows 26 Mad 179,[3] without any discussion. In 29 C W N 575[7] (a judgment delivered in 1924) another Bench of the same High Court takes the opposite view, though without reference to 26 Mad 179.[3] It sets out the essence of what is in my opinion a very simple matter in these simple words :

> The properties were sold separately, their sale proceeds were realized separately, and the sale of each lot was completed when the whole of the balance of the purchase money was deposited in Court.

I accordingly hold that the sum of Rs. 7500 represents assets realized on 30th June, and that the Official Receiver's claim in respect of this sum must be dismissed. As I have held that the appellants have no title to retain the sum of Rs. 4520 realized for the third lot the question next arises whether they must refund that sum in full, or whether the "benefit of execution" means that sum less any expenses incurred in realizing it, and if so, what is the measure of those expenses. Three different views have been taken by three learned Judges of this Court, all sitting singly. These cases in chronological order are : (i) 57 Mad 330[8] where it was held that the benefit of execution meant the amount realized less both expenses of the execution petition and expenses of the suit in which the decree was obtained; (ii) (1939) 1 M L J 205[9] in which the benefit was held to be the gross sum realized without any deductions, and (iii) an unreported decision of Wadsworth J. in C. M. A. No. 175 of 1937 in which the benefit is held to mean the sum realized less the costs of execution. I do not think I am called upon to discuss these points of view in detail. I need only say that I agree entirely with the view expressed by Wadsworth J. in the latest case, and following it, direct that the appellants here be permitted to deduct such costs of the execution petition as were necessary to realize the Rs. 4520 payable to the Official Receiver.

The final question is whether on the sum so calculated the Official Receiver is entitled to interest. The District Judge holds that he is so entitled, as this is a matter analogous to restitution. The appellant's learned advocate attempts to distinguish this case by arguing that, unlike persons whose decrees have been reversed, the appellants had a 'right' to receive the money. But as S. 51 denies them any such right they cannot be said to have possessed it. The parallel with restitution is I think complete, and interest must be allowed. The parties will pay and receive proportionate costs throughout. Leave granted.

Second Appeal No. 239 of 1937, Decided on 17th September 1940, against decree of District Court, South Malabar, in A. S. No. 244 of 1934.

 Malabar law — Tarwad — Karnavan not shown to have renounced — He alone can bind family by alienation — Performance of minor acts of management by karnavan's mother during his absence cannot constitute her karnavastri of tarwad so as to alienate property on tarwad's behalf.

The mere fact that the karnavan's mother performed minor acts of management during his absence cannot constitute her the karnavastri of the tarwad. Before the Court would be justified in holding that she had become the karnavastri and was entitled to alienate property on behalf of the tarwad it must be shown by positive evidence that the karnavan had renounced or that this was the only legitimate conclusion open to the Court. While there is a karnavan capable of acting and he has not renounced, either directly or by implication, he alone can bind the family. [P 91*g*, h]

ORDER OF REFERENCE

Krishnaswami Ayyangar J. — The question raised in this second appeal relates to the power of a karnavastri to mortgage the property of the tarwad for what may be described as necessary purposes of the tarwad. The karnavan of the tarwad is alive but seems to have left the tarwad house for a considerable time. After he left, the tarwad property was in the management of the karnavastri who executed the mortgage in suit. The facts referred to in the finding of the District Munsif in para. 9 seem sufficient to establish that the karnavastri was in the position of a de facto manager of the tarwad property. The learned District Judge is not apparently prepared to accept this view, but as the question is one of inference to be drawn from the facts found I should be prepared to accept the view of the District Munsif as correct. But still the main point for consideration is as to whether a karnavastri has the powers of a de facto manager to bind the tarwad property by her alienation. If the rule in Hanooman Pershad's case[1] is applicable to Malabar families I see no reason why a karnavastri, though not the legal manager of the tarwad properties, should not have the powers which the Judicial Committee have recognized as vested in a de facto manager. There is no direct decision of this Court brought to my notice. The only case cited, namely 29 M L J 632,[2] seems rather to be confined to a situation where the karnavan is acting prejudicially to the interests of the tarwad, a situation in which the junior members are allowed to do what in other circumstances the karnavan alone can do. In my opinion the question is sufficiently important for its being considered by a Bench of two learned Judges of this Court. The papers will accordingly be placed before the learned Chief Justice for his orders.

Judgment of Division Bench

Leach C. J. — On 11th October 1928 respondent 4 mortgaged certain property to the appellant and she purported to do so as the karnavastri of a tarwad. There was at the time a karnavan, who is respondent 5 and the son of respondent 4. He was employed as a pointsman on the railway and by reason of his employment he was absent from the family house for the greater part of the year. The appellant filed in the Court of the District Munsif of Tirur the suit out of which this appeal arises for the purposes of enforcing the mortgage. Two defences were raised, namely, (i) no consideration had passed and (ii) the mortgage had not been created in order to provide funds to meet a family necessity. The District Munsif found for the appellant on both these issues. An appeal was filed to the District Court of South Malabar by respondents 1, 2 and 3 who are the junior members of the family. The District Judge was not satisfied that certain questions of fact had been fully investigated by the District Munsif and he remanded the case for findings on two questions. The first was whether the mortgaged property belonged to the tarwad or was the private property of respondent 4 and the second was whether respondent 4 was entitled to alienate the property on behalf of the family as she was a woman. On remand the case was further investigated by the successor of the District Munsif who had tried the case in the first instance. The successor held that the property did not belong to the tarwad, but to respondent 4. He also held that the respondent 4 in any event had the right of alienation as the de facto karnavastri.

When the matter came before the District Judge again he overruled the finding of the District Munsif that the property belonged to the respondent 4. He considered that the evidence proved that it was tarwad property. He concurred, however, in the findings of the District Munsif that consideration had passed and that the alienation had been occasioned by family necessity and he confirmed the decree in part on the ground that there had been a prior mortgage in which the karnavan had joined. The District Judge was of the opinion that respondent 4 was not entitled to act on behalf of the family and that in consequence the mortgage of 11th October 1928 was not binding on the tarwad, but inasmuch as there had been a previous mortgage in which the karnavan had joined he allowed a decree for the amount of the earlier mortgage. This had the effect of reducing the decree in favour of the appellant by Rs. 102 and corresponding interest. The only question which this Court is called upon to decide is whether the District Munsif was right in holding that respondent 4 was not entitled to bind the family. The appellant has not printed the evidence and the Court can only look to the judgment under appeal for the purpose of ascertaining the facts. The District Judge held that the only acts of management which respondent 4 could claim as having been performed by her were these : (i) she lived in the family house ; (ii) she had plucked fruits from the trees on the paramba and (iii) she has paid the revenue or the purappad due to the jenmi. He was, however, of the opinion that attending to these matters when the karnavan was employed elsewhere did not amount to management and did not indicate abdication by the karnavan so as to give any right of alienation to respondent 4. In due course of his judgment the District Judge said :

> In thousands of families in Malabar it would now be happening that the karnavan is living elsewhere following some occupation or profession and that the three acts mentioned above are being performed as a matter of course by the members of the family living on the tarwad paramba. It cannot be stated that thereby a junior member of the family acquires a right to alienate the property.

With these remarks we are in agreement. There is no evidence in this case that the karnavan ever renounced his position. According to the karnavan's own evidence his mother paid the revenue out of moneys remitted to her by him for the purpose. This may not be true, but as the evidence has not been printed it is rather difficult for the Court to decide whether it is true or false. Be it either way, the mere fact that respondent 4 did perform minor acts of management during the absence of her son would not constitute her the karnavastri of the tarwad. Before the Court would be justified in holding that she had become the karnavastri and was entitled to alienate property on behalf of the tarwad, it must be shown by positive evidence that the karnavan had renounced or that this was the only legitimate conclusion open to the Court. While there is a karnavan capable of acting and he has not renounced, either directly or by implication, he alone can bind the family. In this case the document might have been sent tohim for signature as was done in the case of the first mortgage, but his mother decided to act without him. We consider that she was not justified in so doing. For these reasons the appeal will be dismissed with costs.

HORWILL J.

In re P. Rama Naidu — Appellant.

Criminal Appeal No. 287 of 1941, Decided on 27th August 1941, against order of the Court of Sessions Chittor Division, in C. C. No. 7 of 1941.

Penal Code (1860), Ss. 192 and 193—Accused attesting forged document purporting to discharge decree debt — Accused interested in bringing document into existence — Accused is guilty of abetment and fabrication of false evidence.

The accused attested a forged document purporting to discharge a decree debt and was interested in bringing the document into existence. It was contended that as the document being a receipt did not need attestors, the receipt was complete before the accused signed it, and therefore he could not be said to have abetted the making of a false document :

Held that the accused was guilty under S. 193 of fabricating false evidence as he knew that the document was intended to prove discharge of the decree debt: ('39) 26 A I R 1939 Mad 730, Disting. [P 92*g*]

Held further that since the persons who brought the document into existence intended that it should be attested and the accused should be one of the attestors, the document was not complete until the accused had signed and therefore the accused abetted the making of a false document. [P 92*f*]

K. S. Jayarama Iyer and V. V. Chowdhury — for Appellant.

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

Judgment. — The appellant was admittedly an attestor to a forged document. There had been litigation between P. W. 9 and the 9th accused and P. W. 9 had obtained a decree against the 9th accused for maintenance. The forged document purported to be a discharge of that decree debt. The appellant admits that he was an attestor, and the evidence shows that he knew of the litigation between the parties. The writer of the document turned approver and was examined as P. W. 3. He states that at the time when the document was forged, a blank space was left for the attestation of some other person and that when he saw the document again, that space was filled by the signature of the appellant. The appellant did not deny this but explained :

I was in my field in Nalagampalle. I did not see the payment of any money. I said 'how can I sign when I have not witnessed the payment?' He (Lingama Naidu, the first accused) said, 'she has affixed her thumb impression. The witnesses have all signed. Can you not trust me?' I then believed him and signed.

This statement itself suggests that the appellant was somewhat suspicious of the document. It is clear from the evidence that he knew of the suit that had been brought and that he was sufficiently nearly related to the parties to be interested in bringing such a document into existence in the interests of the first and the ninth accused in support of whom he had already deposed in the maintenance proceedings. On these facts, I think that the learned Judge was justified in coming to the conclusion that the appellant was guilty of forgery and of fabricating a false document. The judgment of Pandrang Row J. in 1939 M W N Cr 86[1] has been referred to as providing an instance where a learned Judge of this Court thought that the bare fact of an attestation was not sufficient to justify an inference that the attestor knew that he was attesting a forged document. The learned Judge had however other facts before him besides the mere fact of attestation, and he quoted the judgment of the trial Judge to show that it was improbable that the attestor had the knowledge imputed to him. Mr. Jayarama Ayyar has also argued that as a receipt does not need attestors, the receipt was complete before the appellant signed it, and that he therefore could not be said to have abetted the making of a false document. The fallacy of this argument is that although attestation was not necessary, the persons who brought this document into existence intended that it should be attested and that the appellant should be one of the attestors. The document was therefore not complete until the appellant had signed. He therefore abetted the making of a false document, and as he must have known that the document was intended to prove the discharge of the decree debt, he was also guilty under S. 193 of fabricating false evidence. The conviction is right and the sentence extremely light. They are therefore affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

Arunachala Goundar and another — Respondents.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 809 of 1937, Decided on 17th September 1940, to revise decree of Dist. Munsif, Turaiyur, in S. C. S. No. 592 of 1936.

(a) Religious Endowment—Trustees—Powers of—One of trustees authorised by others to borrow executing promissory note for loan taken—Transaction is transaction of all.

There is no rule of law which requires all the trustees of an institution actually to sign a promissory note. It is enough if those trustees who do not sign have authorised the transaction. Where the remaining trustees have authorised the trustee who executed the promissory note for the loan, the transaction is the transaction of them all. [P 93*e*]

(b) Religious Endowment—Loan incurred by trustees without sanction of temple committee but ratified by Religious Endowment Board—Loan expressed to be repayable out of properties of temple—Loan held binding on temple.

A loan was incurred by the trustees of a temple without the previous sanction of the temple committee as required under the terms of a scheme. It was expressly mentioned that the loan was to be repaid out of the properties of the temple. It was ratified by the Hindu Religious Endowments Board itself. There was no clear indication in the evidence whether the temple committee was in existence either when the loan was incurred or when it was ratified:

Held that when ratification had been secured from so high an authority there could be no ground for holding that the debt was in any way improper from the point of view of the temple and that it was binding on the temple. [P 93*f*]

(c) Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (1887), S. 25—Interference is discretionary.

Interference by the High Court in a revision petition under S. 25, is discretionary. [93*f*]

A. V. Narayanaswamy Iyer — for Petitioner.

M. S. Vaidhyanatha Iyer — for Respondents.

Order.—The subject-matter of this petition is a promissory note executed by one T. D. Palaniappa Mudaliar in favour of respondent 1 for Rs. 100 on 14th August 1933. Palaniappa Mudaliar described himself therein as managing dharmakartha of a certain temple at Chettikulam, and recites also that he is borrowing the money as manager of the temple and that repayment is to be made "from out of the properties of the said temple." Respondent 1 sued upon the note and obtained a decree both against Palaniappa Mudaliar personally, and against the properties of the temple. This is a petition by the temple with the contention that it should not have been held liable. That the money was actually borrowed, and expended for temple purposes, and that the loan was necessary are facts which are not now disputed. Nor can it be seriously urged that if Palaniappa Mudaliar was in fact authorised to borrow, his transaction will not bind the temple. It is contended, however, that he was not so authorised—on two grounds: (i) because the other two trustees did not join in executing the note; and (ii) because he did not obtain the previous sanction of the temple committee as he was bound to do under the terms of a scheme which had been framed to regulate the management of the temple.

There is no rule of law which requires all the trustees of an institution actually to sign a promissory note. It is enough if those trustees who do not sign have authorised the transaction. It is found as a fact in this case that the two remaining trustees did authorise it. The transaction was therefore the transaction of them all. The second objection is more substantial, but respondent meets it by saying that after the loan was incurred it was ratified by the Hindu Religious Endowments Board itself. This ratification is found to be true by the District Munsif. There is no clear indication in the evidence whether the temple committee was in existence either when the loan was incurred or when it was ratified—though it is probable enough that the reason why ratification was sought from the Board was the non-existence at that time of the committee. I need not, I think, pursue this matter further as this is only a revision petition in which interference by this Court is discretionary, and when ratification has been secured from so high an authority there can be no ground for holding that the debt was in any way improper from the point of view of the temple. This petition accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs.

Second Appeals Nos. 1124 and 1125 of 1938, Decided on 5th August 1941, against decrees of Sub-Judge, Chicacole, in A. S. Nos. 326 and 329 of 1937.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 88 (6D) and 386 — Wife A obtaining maintenance order under S. 488 — Certain property attached and money deposited in Court — Claim by other wife B rejected — Suit by B under S. 88 (6D) — Fact that B asked for money decree and not for declaration held did not take suit out of S. 88 (6D)—Money in Court not being held by or at disposal of Government, Secretary of State held not necessary party.

Wife A obtained a maintenance order under S. 488 and in execution thereof got certain property attached. The property was sold and money deposited in Court. The claim of the other wife B having been rejected, she instituted a suit against A under S. 88 (6D), with a prayer for declaration that the order in the claim proceedings was incorrect:

Held that (1) the mere fact that on account of a the sale of the attached property the plaintiff asked for a decree for money instead of a declaration did not take the suit out of the purview of S. 88 (6D); [P 94*g*]

(2) the suit need not have been for a declaration as attached property having been converted into money, the relief that should have been and was in fact claimed on behalf of the plaintiff was for that money itself; [P 95*a*]

(3) although the money in Court was capable of being realized as fine under S. 488 (3), it was not in fact a fine itself and was not being held by or at the disposal of the Government and hence the Secretary of State was not a necessary party to the suit : 28 Cal 540, Disting. [P 94*g*, P 95*a*]

(b) Practice—Relief — Necessary facts given —Court ought to grant relief to which party is

Where all the necessary facts have been given in the plaint, it is the duty of the Court to grant the relief to which a party is found entitled even if it has not been by a mistake asked for by the party. [P 95*b*]

B. Jagannadha Das—for Appellants.

G. Chandrasekhara Sastri—for Respondent.

Judgment. — The facts which led to the institution of the two connected suits out of which the present appeals have arisen are simple and may be briefly narrated. The respondent obtained an order under S. 488, Criminal P. C., for maintenance against her c husband in M. C. No. 97 of 1933 in the Court of the joint Magistrate of Berhampur. She got certain quantities of paddy attached in execution of the order passed by that Court. After attachment the paddy was stored in two pits. It was subsequently sold by the Magistrate and the sale proceeds are lying in that Court. The plaintiff in O. S. No. 201 of 1936 is the second wife of the respondent's husband, the plaintiff in the other suit being (her) maternal uncle. Both of them set up a claim to the whole of the paddy attached by the Magistrate but their claim petitions were rejected. They consequently brought the two suits. These suits were for the d recovery of money either from the Magistrate's Court or from the respondent in the event of the money having been paid by the Magistrate to her (who was the petitioner in M. C. No. 97 of 1933). These suits were dismissed by the District Munsif of Sompeta on the ground that the plaintiffs had failed to establish their title. The objection that the suits were not maintainable in their present form was, however, overruled by that Court. On appeal the Subordinate Judge of Chicacole did not go into the question of title but dismissed the appeals on the ground that the suits were not competent as the Secretary of State had not been impleaded as a party to the present suits. In dismiss-e ing the appeals on that ground he relied on a decision in 28 Cal 540.[1] The plaintiffs had consequently preferred the present appeals which may be disposed of by one judgment.

The contention advanced on behalf of the respondent is that the plaintiffs should have asked for a declaration to the effect that the order passed in the claim proceedings was incorrect and should be set aside. Since, it is contended, the suits are not for declaration, they are not competent. It is contended in the alternative that in so far as money was lying in the Court of the joint Magistrate and as long as that money was not paid, it was or must be deemed to be at the f disposal of the Secretary of State, the latter, that is the Secretary of State should have been made a party to the suits. There is no force in my opinion in either of these contentions. No rules have been framed by the local Government under S. 386, Criminal P. C., and it is therefore urged that the provisions of S. 88 of that Code must be held to be applicable. But even if that contention is assumed to be correct it would not help the respondent. There is a distinct provision in S. 88, cl. (6-D) which entitles a party whose claim or petition has been disallowed in whole or in part to go and institute a g suit to establish the right which he claims against the property in dispute and that is exactly what the plaintiffs in both the suits are trying to do. The mere fact that on account of the sale of the paddy, they have asked for a decree for money instead of a declaration does not take these suits out of the category of the suits contemplated by S. 88, cl. (6-D), Criminal P. C. It must not be overlooked that the money which has been realised although capable of being realised as fine under S. 488, cl. (3) is not in fact a fine itself and is not being held by or at the disposal of the Government for its own purposes, but with the object of paying h maintenance to the person in whose favour the order was passed. The Government cannot and does not lay any claim to any portion of the money thus realised. It is therefore futile to argue that the Secretary of State was interested in the decision whether the property attached at the instance of the respondent belonged to her, and should have been for that reason impleaded. The only party who is interested in the result is the respondent and the suit was instituted against her. There is therefore no force in the contention that the suit should have been against the Secretary of State and since the Secretary of State was not impleaded as defendant, is not maintainable.

1. ('01) 28 Cal 540 : 6 C W N 175, Secy. of State v. Jagat Mohini Dasi.

I cannot understand the ground on which the lower appellate Court dismissed the plaintiffs' suits. The decision in 28 Cal 540[1] had absolutely no application to the facts of the present case. As for the contention that the suits should have been for declaration the answer is simple. First of all the paddy having been converted into money, the relief that should have been and is being claimed on behalf of the plaintiff is for that money itself. But conceding for the sake of argument that the contention of the learned counsel for the respondent is correct all the necessary facts have been given in the plaint and it is the duty of the Court to grant the relief to which a party is found entitled even if it has not been by a mistake asked for by the party. Both these contentions therefore fail. The appeals must consequently be accepted and the suits sent back to the lower appellate Court for disposal of the appeals on their merits. It is unfortunate that the lower appellate Court did not go into the question of title at the same time. Had that been done a further delay would have been avoided. The costs in these appeals both in this and the lower appellate Court will be costs in the cause. The court-fees in these appeals may be refunded to the appellants.

South Indian General Assurance Co. Ltd. (in liquidation) by its Official Liquidator — Respondent.

Appeal No. 18 of 1941, Decided on 14th August 1941, from order of Gentle J., in Appln. No. 36 of 1941 (in O. P. No. 206 of 1940), D/- 28th February 1941.

Company—Directors—Meeting of—Quorum—Validity—Director interested in resolution cannot vote — Company can agree that debt due to shareholder should be set off against future calls — Director and managing agent held in fiduciary relation to company and hence incompetent to decide whether resolution was for company's benefit.

The company owed a sum of Rs. 16,000 to C who was its director and managing agent. C's brother, S, was also a director and a shareholder of the company and though he was not a creditor of the company, he had lent a considerable sum of money to C which was utilized for the purposes of the company. Article 29 of the articles of association stated that the directors might, if they thought fit, receive from a member all or any part of the capital due upon shares held by him beyond the sums actually called for, and permitted the directors to pay interest on any sum so received. The full quorum for a meeting of the board of directors was three. At a meeting of the directors in which three out of the five directors including C and S were present a resolution in terms of Art. 29 was passed and an arrangement arrived at whereby C purported to set off Rs. 11,900, out of the amount due to him from the company against what he owed in respect of the shares:

Held that (1) it was open to the company to agree with a shareholder to whom it owed money that the debt shall be set off against future calls: (1906) 18 Eq 670 and (1889) 41 Ch D 159, Rel. on; [P 97*a*]

(2) the arrangement arrived at the meeting was invalid as C and his brother S were not competent to vote as they were personally interested and the third director present, acting alone, could not give authority to C to apply the provisions of Art. 29. If three directors who had no interest in the matter had resolved that the debt due to C should be set off to the extent of Rs. 11,900 against his liability on his shares or the company in general meeting had so decided, the position would have been different; [P 96*g*,h]

(3) even assuming the resolution to have been lawfully passed, C as a director and the managing agent of the company was in a fiduciary position and was not in a position to decide whether it was fit and proper from the company's point of view that there should be the arrangement arrived at the meeting and therefore he could not act on the arrangement in respect of his own shares: ('38) 25 AIR 1938 P C 159 and (1914) 2 Ch 488, Rel. on. [P 97*a*]

O. T. G. Nambiar and K. N. Pandalai — for Appellant.

Leach C. J. — This is an appeal from an order passed by Gentle J. confirming the action of the Official Liquidator of the South Indian General Assurance Company Ltd. in placing the appellant's name in the list of contributories. The company was formed in the year 1929. On 29th August 1940, this Court passed an order directing that it be wound up compulsorily. During the 11 years, the company was operating, it never made a profit. Each year, in fact, showed a loss and long before the winding up order was passed, the company was in a precarious position. The appellant was a director of the company and was also its managing agent. The managing agents were stated to be K. C. Pandalai & Co., but it is common ground that the appellant is the sole proprietor of that firm. In 1936 the company owed the appellant a sum of Rs. 16,000. The appellant held 120 preference and 220 ordinary shares of Rs. 50 each in respect of which only Rs. 15 per share had been paid up. The appellant's brother, Mr. K. S. Pandalai, was also a director of the company. He held some 200 shares and these also were only paid upto the extent of Rs. 15 per share. Mr. K. S. Pandalai was not a creditor of the company, but he had lent a considerable sum of money to his brother and admittedly this money was utilized for the purposes of the company. Article 29 of the articles of association stated that the directors might, if they thought fit, receive from a member all or any part of the capital due upon shares held by him beyond the sums actually called for, and permitted the directors to pay interest on any sum so received. On 15th December 1936, a meeting of the board was held and was attended by the appellant, his brother and Mr. P. E. Raman Menon, who was also a director. They purported to pass the following resolution :

> Resolved that as per Art. 29 of the articles of association of the company the managing agents be hereby authorized, if they think fit, to receive from any member willing to advance the same, all or any part of the capital due upon the shares held by him beyond the sums actually called for; and upon the amount so paid or satisfied in advance, or so much thereof as from time to time exceeds the amount of the calls then made upon the shares in respect of which such advance has been made, to pay interest at 6 per cent. per annum.

There can be no doubt that this resolution was passed in order that an arrangement might be entered into relieving the appellant from liability in respect of his shares. This is obvious from what happened on 31st December 1936. On that date the appellant purported to set off Rs. 11,900, out of the amount due to him from the company against what he owed in respect of the shares and consequently called upon the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies to record that his shares had been fully paid up. When the company went into liquidation the validity of this transaction was questioned by the Official Liquidator and he decided that the appellant should be placed on the list of contributories in respect of Rs. 11,900. The appellant objected and asked the Court to strike out his name from the list, but this Gentle J. refused to do. The appellant as a director and the managing agent of the company was in a fiduciary position and in the circumstances the learned Judge held that he was not in a position to decide whether it was fit and proper from the company's point of view that there should be this arrangement. The learned Judge relied on the decision of the Privy Council in I L R (1938) Bom 421,[1] where the Judicial Committee held that the provisions of S. 91B, Companies Act, as it was before the amendment of 1936 were a concise statement of the general rule of equity. The Judicial Committee approved of these observations of the Court of appeal in England in (1914) 2 Ch 488[2] at p. 503 :

> Where a director of a company has an interest as a share-holder in another company or is in a fiduciary position towards and owes a duty to another company which is proposing to enter into engagement with the company of which he is a director, he is in our opinion, within this rule. He has a personal interest within this rule or owes a duty which conflicts with his duty to the company of which he is a director. It is immaterial whether this conflicting interest belongs to him beneficially or as a trustee for others. He is bound to do as well for his cestui que trust as he would do for himself. Again the validity or invalidity of a transaction cannot depend upon the extent of the adverse interest of the fiduciary agent any more than upon how far in any particular case the terms of a contract have been the best obtainable for the interest of the cestui que trust, upon which subject no inquiry is permitted.

When the case was before Gentle J., it appears to have been accepted that the resolution of 15th December 1936 was validly passed. The only point taken by the Official Liquidator was that the appellant could not act upon the resolution in respect of his own shares. It is, however, manifest that the validity of the resolution is open to question. Section 91B (1), Companies Act, as it stood at the time read as follows :

> No director shall, as a director, vote on any contract or arrangement in which he is either directly or indirectly concerned or interested; and if he does so vote, his vote shall not be counted.

At the time this resolution was passed, there were five directors, but only three of them attended and two of those present, the appellant and his brother, were not in a position to vote on the question as they were personally interested. Article 113 fixes the quorum for a director's meeting at three. As the appellant and his brother were not competent to vote and as the third director present, acting alone, could not give authority to the appellant to apply the provisions of Art. 29 the transaction cannot be regarded as binding upon the company. If three directors who had no interest in the matter had resolved that the debt due to the managing agent should be set off to the extent of the Rs. 11,900 against the appellant's liability on his shares or the company in general meeting had so decided the position would have been different. It is open to a company

This is well settled law: see Adamson's case, (1906) 18 Eq 670[3] and (1889) 41 Ch D 159.[4] But here the appellant applied the provisions of Art. 29 without lawful authority and consequently he cannot take advantage of what he has done. Even assuming the resolution to have been lawfully passed there is still the objection pointed out by Gentle J. The appeal fails and will be dismissed. There will be no order as to costs as the Official Liquidator appears in person.

Appeal No. 436 of 1938, Decided on 25th March 1941, against order of Addl. Sub-Judge, Madura, D/- 16th November 1937.

(a) Hindu law — Joint family — Creditor can attach coparcener's interest in portion of joint family property (Obiter).

It is possible for a creditor to attach his judgment-debtor's interest in a part only of the joint family property. Therefore, the holder of a money decree against one of several coparceners can attach and bring to sale that coparcener's interest in a portion of the joint family property, and need not proceed against his interest in the whole of the joint family property : 5 Cal 425 and 10 Cal 626 (P C), d Rel. on. [P 98*f*, g]

(b) Appeal — New point — Point requiring investigation into facts cannot be raised.

K. S. Ramabhadra Ayyar — for Appellant.

B. Sitarama Rao and O. V. Baluswami — for Respondent.

Burn J. — This appeal is from the order of the learned Subordinate Judge of Madura dismissing an application under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., to set aside a sale of immovable property held in execution. The sale was held on 13th July 1936. The application under O. 21, R. 90 was presented on 11th August f 1936 and was disposed of by the learned Subordinate Judge on 16th November 1937. The learned Subordinate Judge held that there were no material irregularities or fraud established in the case and that therefore the application to set aside the sale could not be allowed. He dismissed it accordingly. We have heard a very lengthy argument from Mr. K. S. Ramabhadra Ayyar on behalf of the appellant, defendant 2 in the suit O. S. No. 114 of 1925. The appellant is the son of defendant 1 in the suit and the suit was filed on a mortgage executed by defendant 1 who represented when he took the money from the g lender that the hypotheca was his self-acquired property. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the hypotheca was not the self-acquired property of defendant 1 but joint family property. The suit was dismissed against defendant 2; but, on appeal to the High Court by the plaintiff, the High Court passed a personal decree for money against defendant 2 also, and indicated in its decree that the plaintiff could recover against defendant 2 by proceeding in execution against his share of the joint family property. The present application for sale is in respect of four items of joint family property which were attached in execution of the h decree.

The hearing of this appeal has been considerably complicated by the fact that learned counsel for the appellant has chosen to abandon all the grounds of irregularity and fraud which were alleged in the application to the lower Court under O. 21, R. 90. He no longer contends that the sale was vitiated by any irregularity or fraud in the conduct of the sale. What he contends now is that the sale was ab initio illegal and therefore void; in other words, he says that the application to the lower Court ought not to have been an application under O. 21, R. 90, as in fact it was, but that it ought to have been an application under S. 47, Civil P. C. We have therefore heard no arguments with regard to the usual allegation under O. 21, R. 90, namely that there was no proper tom-tom or that there was combination preventing adequate bidding or that there was no proper advertisement of the sale; nor have we heard arguments on the point that the sale was adjourned without specifying the hour of the date to which it was adjourned or on the allegation that the encumbrances had not been properly mentioned. Learned counsel for the appellant has devoted his arguments entirely to an attempt to show that the attachment itself and the sale in pursuance of it were illegal.

The first point taken by the learned counsel for the appellant is that the sale in this case was in violation of the direction of the High Court in its decree in A. S. No. 406 of 1930. The relevant portions of the decree are as follows:

> (1) That defendant 2 in the suit (the present appellant) also do pay to the plaintiffs the amount decreed by the lower Court in O. S. No. 114 of 1925 with subsequent interest . . . . subject to the declarations that the plaintiffs are entitled to get a money decree in the suit as against defendant 2 and that the suit document is not binding on defendant 2 as a mortgagee; (2) that cl. (4) in the said decree be and hereby is deleted; (3) that plaintiffs be at liberty to execute the said decree by attaching and selling not only the share of defendant 1 but also the share of defendant 2 in the joint family properties.

There is no dispute about the fact that these items, which were items of the hypotheca, were attached and brought to sale as the self-acquired properties of defendant 1 and were purchased by the decree-holder for about Rs. 43,000. There is also no doubt about the fact that he applied to attach and bring to sale the interest of defendant 2 also in these properties. Learned counsel's contention that the sale proceedings in this case are in contravention of the High Court's decree is based upon an allegation that these four items of immovable properties did not constitute the whole of the joint family property in which defendant 1 and defendant 2 are coparceners. He says that besides these the joint family is entitled to vast extents of immovable property. He says that the only course open to the decree-holder in A. S. No. 406 of 1930 was to attach the share of defendant 2 in the whole of the joint family properties and to bring that to sale to satisfy his decree for money against defendant 2. He says that the attachment and sale of defendant 2's interest in only a small portion of the joint family property are illegal. This contention is one which, I think, cannot be heard in this appeal. It has nowhere been alleged in the execution proceedings in the lower Court, and it does not appear in the decree of the High Court which is being executed, that the joint family is possessed of any other properties besides the items concerned in this sale. As the learned Subordinate Judge has pointed out, the appellant has been aware of all the steps taken in execution, and he has never brought it to the notice of the executing Court that he had a coparcener's interest along with his father in vastly greater extents of immovable property and that therefore it was not in accordance with law to attach and sell his interest in these four items alone. It is not, I think, absolutely clear that the holder of a money decree against one of several coparceners is not at liberty to attach and bring to sale that coparcener's interest in a portion of the joint family property, but must proceed against his interest in the whole of the joint family property. Such a proposition would lead to absurdities. For instance, in the case of a creditor holding a money decree against a minor coparcener entitled to, say, a half share in properties of very great value, it would seem to be absurd to require the decree-holder to bring to sale the judgment-debtor's interest in joint family properties worth perhaps ten lakhs in order to satisfy a decree for money for say Rs. 100. Yet, that would follow from the contention put forward on behalf of the appellant in this case. It is only necessary to cite the decisions of the Calcutta High Court reported in 5 Cal 425[1] and of the Privy Council reported in 10 Cal 626[2] in order to show that it is possible for a creditor to attach his judgment-debtor's interests in a part only of the joint family property. But I would prefer to decide the question with reference to the principle that the judgment-debtor cannot lie by in the executing Court with an allegation of this kind, and then bring it up in appeal and found upon it a proposition of law to the effect that the sale is bad. I must agree with the learned counsel for the respondent that this allegation, namely that the joint family properties consist of more items than were brought to sale, is an allegation which would require an investigation into facts. The appellant ought to have brought this forward during the execution proceed-a ings and, as he has not done so, I think it is not proper to allow him to do so now.

The second objection made by the learned counsel for the appellant is that the decree-holder brought the interest of defendant 2 in these four items of joint family property to sale without specifying what interest it was and indeed coupled with an allegation that defendant 2 had no interest in these properties. Learned counsel for the appellant contends that the sale is invalid for these reasons, but there is no authority for such a statement. Learned counsel has only referred us to S. 60 (1) (m), Civil P. C., whereby b a merely contingent or possible right or interest cannot be attached and brought to sale in execution of a decree. That provision clearly has no application. There is no question here of the interest of defendant 2 being a merely contingent or possible right or interest. What the decree-holder said was, "I wish to sell the interest of defendant 2 in these items of property, whatever it may be. I do not know whether he really has any interest in it. I contend that he has not and I have filed in the Sub-Court O. S. No. 75 of 1934 to establish that contention of mine. But however that might turn out and whatc ever his interest might turn out to be when it is ascertained, I wish to bring it to sale." There is no allegation that the interest of defendant 2 is a matter of contingency or dependent upon any future happening. So far as it is an interest at all it must ex hypothesi be a vested interest. The case reported in (1938) 2 M L J 906,[3] therefore has no application, nor the case reported in 14 M I A 40.[4] I am not able to see how the want of specification of the extent of defendant 2's interest in the joint family properties could invalidate the proclamation or the sale.

d The third objection is that the order of attachment at first passed by the learned Subordinate Judge on the decree-holder's application for attachment was illegal. The order is "Attachment of defendant 2's interest in this property by 28th March 1935." The contention with regard to this point depends again upon the allegation that it was not permissible for the decree-holder to attach defendant 2's interest in separate items of joint family property and that he ought to e have attached defendant 2's interest in the whole of the joint family property. There is nothing in the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge to show that the property, the attachment of which was sought, was not the whole of the joint family property or that the learned Subordinate Judge was ordering the attachment of anything less than defendant 2's interest in the whole of it. This point therefore also fails, in my opinion. For these reasons I think that this appeal ought to be dismissed with costs.

Mockett J.—I entirely agree. Although frequently pressed to do so, the learned f counsel for the appellant has never been able to indicate to us that anywhere on the record there appears any trace of this contention, on which this appeal has been argued fully today, having been mentioned. It is quite clear that in the lower Court the appellant primarily went to attack the sale on the ground of the several irregularities to which my learned brother has referred. He also argued that owing to the alleged uncertainty of defendant 2's position his rights, if any, in this property came within the provisions of S. 60 (1) (m), Civil P. C., being in the nature of spes successionis and therefore something that could not be attached. The order in- g voked to set aside the sale was O. 21, R. 90, and it is worthy of mention that there is no reference to S. 47. The appellant is now asking us to order an enquiry into a state of fact which was peculiarly within his own knowledge and which we are satisfied was never mentioned to the lower Court. He is saying now that the decree-holder is seeking to execute the decree against part of a vast estate. I am certain that this was never mentioned to the lower Court. I am equally clear that it cannot be raised before us. The Judicial Committee have on two occasions dealt with positions similar to that which h arises before us today. In 15 I A 171,[5] their Lordships, referring to another decision of the Board in 10 I A 25,[6] said that if there was really a ground of complaint and if the judgment-debtors would have been injured by these proceedings in attaching and selling the whole of the property whilst the interest was such as it was, they ought to have come and complained. Their Lordships proceed:

> It would be very difficult indeed to conduct proceedings in execution of decrees by attachment and sale of property if the judgment-debtor could lie by and afterwards take advantage of any misdescription of the property attached, and about to be sold, which he knew well, but of which the execution creditor or decree-holder might be perfectly ignorant—that they should take no notice of that, allow the sale to proceed, and then come forward and say the whole proceedings were vitiated.

I respectfully consider that these remarks are particularly applicable to the case before us. I agree that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

In re Venkatachalam Chetty — Accused — Appellant.

Criminal Appeal No. 357 of 1941, Decided on 28th August 1941, against order of Court of Session, Coimbatore Division, in C. C. No. 30 of 1941.

Penal Code (1860), Ss. 302 and 328—Accused administering dhatura with food to three persons—All of them found lying in open next day—Two of them recovering but third developing pneumonia and dying week after—Death not due to poisoning — Accused held not guilty under S. 302.

On the night of 6th December the accused gave some food with which dhatura was mixed to three persons in order that he might rob them of whatever they had on their person. The three men were found next morning lying out in the open as a result of the coma or unconsciousness produced by the poison and were taken to the hospital. Two of them recovered completely. The third though he recovered from dhatura poisoning developed pneumonia and died on 13th December :

Held that the accused was not guilty under S. 302 since it was not shown that pneumonia was a likely consequence of the administration of dhatura nor was it established that the pneumonia was caused by the exposure or was a probable consequence of sleeping out. The accused was guilty under S. 328 : ('23) 10 A I R 1923 All 608, Disting. [P 101*b*]

V. L. Ethiraj, Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant was tried by the learned Sessions Judge of Coimbatore on a charge of murder (S. 302) and two charges of administering poison with intent to commit an offence. The facts found against him were that on the night of 6th December last at Pollachi he gave some food with which dhatura was mixed to three Malayalees in order that he might rob them of whatever they had on their person. The three men were found next morning lying out in the open and they were taken to the hospital. The medical evidence showed that all of them had been given dhatura. Two of them recovered completely. The third developed pneumonia and died on 13th December. There is no reason to differ from the finding of the learned Sessions Judge with regard to these facts. The learned Public Prosecutor has taken me through the evidence of the important prosecution witnesses, P. Ws. 1 and 2. These are the two men who recovered from the dhatura poisoning. P. W. 1 is the son of the deceased. This man identified the accused at parades held on different dates some time after the occurrence. The accused at the trial merely pleaded that he knew nothing and that the case was false. He was not able to say why any of the witnesses should have given false evidence against him.

The only point that needs discussion is whether the conviction of the accused for the offence of murder is correct. The conviction for the two offences under S. 328 of poisoning P. Ws. 1 and 2 is clearly correct and the sentences of seven years rigorous imprisonment passed upon the accused for those offences are not excessive. With regard to the person who died the learned Sessions Judge has convicted him of murder finding that he died of pneumonia consequent upon the exposure occasioned by coma or unconsciousness produced by the poison. The learned Judge refers to a case reported in 45 ALL 557.[1] There is however one important difference between the Allahabad case and this. In the Allahabad case it was proved that the deceased died within a very short time of the dhatura poisoning and the learned Judges held that the accused ought to have been charged under S. 302, Penal Code, and that his offence clearly fell within paras. 3 and 4 of S. 300. In the present case however death was not due to dhatura poisoning. The doctor's evidence is clear that the victim recovered from dhatura poisoning and that he died of pneumonia. The question therefore is whether pneumonia was a likely consequence of the administration of dhatura. If it was likely that the victim after being given dhatura and thereby being rendered unconscious would develop pneumonia, a disease which is very often fatal, then the pneumonia can be said to be so connected with dhatura poisoning that the act of the accused in administering dhatura had caused the death of the victim. But there is no evidence that pneumonia was a probable consequence of sleeping out at Pollachi on the night of 6th December. The doctor does not say that anyone who slept out in the open on that night was likely to get pneumonia. He says merely that the man "developed pneumonia on account probably of exposure in the open maidan on 6th December 1940."

Thus it is not established that the pneumonia was in fact caused by the exposure. Moreover, the doctor did not say that pneumonia was a probable consequence of sleeping out; and as a matter of fact it appears that the other two men who were poisoned, P. Ws. 1 and 2, although they also slept out in the open for the same length of time, did not develop pneumonia. In these circumstances it is clear that the act of the accused in administering dhatura to Kunjan Nayar has not been shown to have caused his death. The conviction of the appellant for the offence of murder cannot therefore be sustained and it is set aside. The appellant must be convicted in the case of Kunjan Nayar also of an offence under S. 328, Penal Code. I set aside the sentence of transportation for life and for the offence under S. 328, Penal Code, I sentence the appellant to ten years rigorous imprisonment, the sentence to run concurrently with the other two sentences of seven years rigorous imprisonment.

C.R.K./G.N. Order accordingly.

S. Sankaranarayana Iyer — Petitioner

v.

Paramasivam Pillai and others — Respondents.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 710 of 1937, Decided on 1st August 1940, to revise order of Sub-Judge, Tinnevelly, D/- 19th January 1937.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 55 (4) — Surety under, cannot claim to be released from obligation at his pleasure—Principle of S. 130, Contract Act, does not apply.

There is no analogy between a security bond executed by a surety under S. 55 (4), Civil P. C., and a continuing guarantee as defined in S. 129, Contract Act. In the former case, there is no series of transactions giving rise to distinct liabilities which the guarantee is intended to cover but there is only a single transaction under which the surety undertakes responsibility for certain things to be done in future though on different occasions. The markedly different terms of S. 55 (4), Civil P. C., and the absence of any provision for the discharge of the surety at any stage before he has fully carried out his undertaking point clearly to the conclusion that a person who becomes a surety under this section cannot claim to be released from his obligation at his pleasure and the principle of S. 130, Contract Act, does not apply. Therefore, where it is clearly provided by the terms of the security bond which is in conformity with S. 55 (4), Civil P. C., that the security deposited by the petitioner should be realized if the judgment-debtor did not apply to be declared an insolvent within a month from that date or did not appear when called upon to do so in the proceedings on such application or in execution of the decree, it would be contrary to this stipulation to release the petitioner from his undertaking and set free his security deposit : 28 Mad 161, Rel. on; ('34) 21 A I R 1934 Lah 962, Dissent.; ('35) 22 A I R 1935 Mad 543, Expl. [P 102*a*, b, c, d] R. Ramamurthy — for Petitioner.

Order. — This is a petition to revise the order of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Tinnevelly, refusing to discharge the petitioner from his suretyship under a security bond executed by him under S. 55 (4), Civil P. C. The facts are simple and not in dispute. Respondent 1 obtained a decree against respondent 2 and had him arrested in execution thereof. When the latter was brought before the Court under arrest, the petitioner deposited Rs. 500 as cash security and executed a surety bond on the strength of which the Court released the judgment-debtor from arrest. The bond runs as follows :

In case the respondent (i. e., the judgment-debtor) fails to apply to be declared an insolvent within one month from this date, and in case the said respondent fails to appear, when called upon in any proceeding upon such application or upon the decree in execution of which the said respondent was arrested, the Court may direct the cash security to be realized, but not personally from the depositor.

Respondent 2 then applied to be adjudicated insolvent and was adjudged accordingly. A few months later, when those proceedings were still pending, the petitioner applied to the executing Court under Ss. 55 and 151, Civil P. C., offering to produce the judgment-debtor before the Court on any day that might be fixed and praying for discharge from his suretyship, as he did not like to continue as surety any longer. The Court below rejected this application on the ground that, in view of the terms of the security bond, the petitioner could not claim release from his obligation as surety, and there was nothing in S. 55 of the Code to justify such release. The petitioner has challenged the validity of this order. He contends that a security bond given under Sec. 55 (4) of the Code is in the nature of a continuing guarantee for the production of the judgment-debtor whenever required by the Court, and when the surety offers to produce the judgment-debtor and desires to be absolved from further liability under the bond, the Court is bound to cancel the bond and discharge the surety. His learned counsel did not suggest that S. 130, Contract Act, which entitles the surety to revoke a continuing guarantee as to future transactions was in terms applicable to the present case, but it was said that the principle of that section applied by way of analogy. It is difficult to see what analogy there is between a security bond executed by a surety under S. 55 (4), Civil P. C., and a continuing guarantee as defined in S. 129, Contract Act. In the former case, there is no series of transactions giving rise to distinct liabilities which the guarantee is intended to cover but there is only a single transaction under which the surety undertakes responsibility for certain things to be done in future though on different occasions. In 28 Mad 161,[1] a Bench of this Court held that a security bond given by a surety under S. 78, Probate and Administration Act, for the due administration of an estate could not be revoked as to future acts of administration by the surety giving notice to the Judge or other officer of the Court. I can see no distinction between a security bond of the kind dealt with in that decision and the one now before me so far as the applicability of S. 130, Contract Act, or its principle is concerned.

It is clearly provided by the terms of the security bond in this case which is in conformity with S. 55 (4) of the Code, that the security deposited by the petitioner should be realized if the judgment-debtor did not apply to be declared an insolvent within a month from that date or did not appear when called upon to do so in the proceedings on such application or in execution of the decree. It would be contrary to this stipulation to release the petitioner from his undertaking and set free his security deposit, and I can find nothing in the Code or under the general law to warrant such procedure. This conclusion derives further support from a comparison of S. 55 (4) with the provisions of O. 38, Rr. 2 and 3. These rules expressly provide that a person who becomes a surety for the appearance of a defendant may at any time apply to the Court to be discharged from his obligation and that the Court shall direct his discharge on such application when the defendant is either produced by the surety or appears in pursuance of a summons or warrant issued by the Court. The markedly different terms of S. 55 (4) and the absence of any provision for the discharge of the surety at any stage before he has fully carried out his undertaking point clearly, in my view, to the conclusion that a person who becomes a surety under this section cannot claim to be released from his obligation at his pleasure.

1. ('05) 28 Mad 161 : 14 MLJ 482, Subroya Chetty v. Rangammal.

Petitioner's learned counsel placed reliance on a decision of a single Judge of the Lahore High Court in A I R 1934 Lah 962,[2] which no doubt supports his contention but with all respect I am unable to agree with it. I was also referred to a decision of Pandrang Row J., in A I R 1935 Mad 543,[3] which I find, however, is no authority on the point now under consideration. The question for decision in that case did not relate to the right of a surety to be released at any time from his liability on production of the judgment-debtor, but to the extent of his liability under a bond executed under S. 55 (4) when the judgment-debtor did not file the insolvency petition within a month. The learned Judge held, on the terms of the bond before him, that the only liability of the surety was to produce the judgment-debtor before the Court and that he was entitled to be given an opportunity of producing the judgment-debtor in Court on a date fixed by it before his security could be realized. It may be that, in the present case also, the petitioner would be entitled to an opportunity of producing the judgment-debtor if the latter does not appear as required by the Court before the security furnished can be realized. This is not, however, the question before me and the decision cited above has no application. The civil revision petition fails and is dismissed.

Order. — It seems to me clear that in S. 23 of Madras Act 4 of 1938 the words "property, in which an agriculturist had an interest has been sold" must refer to the state of affairs at the time of the sale and cannot cover a case in which the agriculturist had parted with his interest in the property sold long before the sale. Admittedly, the property sold in the present case belonged solely to the non-agriculturist defendants. Section 23 has therefore no application. Order. — The suit is for partition by persons in joint possession and it is common ground that court-fee is payable under Art. 17-B of Sch. 2, Court-fees Act. The dispute is as to the value of the suit for purpose of jurisdiction and as pointed out in 50 Mad 646,[1] in which all the decisions were considered, the valuation to be adopted for the purpose of jurisdiction is the actual market value of the property in suit. To the same effect are the decisions in 56 M L J 394[2] and (1939) 2 M L J 226[3] and it is found by the lower Court that the value of the shares of the plaintiffs will be not less than Rs. 10,000. This suit should therefore have been instituted in the Subordinate Judge's Court of Rajahmundry and the District Munsif has no jurisdiction to entertain it. The order of the District Munsif is therefore set aside and he is directed to return the plaint for presentation to proper Court. There will be no order as to costs.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (1909), S. 31—Creditor denied participation in dividend by reason of fraud practised on Court by insolvent—Payment of dividend to other creditors is not duly made.

Where a creditor has been denied participation in the dividend by reason of a fraud practised upon the Court by the insolvent, the payment of dividends to the other creditors cannot be held to have been duly made within the meaning of the expression in Section 31. [P 103*g*]

Official Assignee in person.

Order.—Prayer (c) is the only outstanding matter to be dealt with. The applicant who has been found to be a creditor was denied participation in the dividend by reason of a fraud practised upon the Court by the insolvent. It was represented that the applicant had agreed to have her rights postponed to those of the other creditors and that she was a major at the time. It is clear that she was not a major at the time and there is reason to think that the learned advocate who purported to act for her proceeded upon a mistake of fact in making such a representation to the Court. In these circumstances I hold that the payment of dividends to the other creditors cannot be held to have been duly made within the meaning of the expression in S. 31, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. The creditors who received dividends from the official assignee shall pay back into his hands such amount each as is necessary to make up the proper dividend payable to the applicant on the amount of her admitted claim. The creditors in the list herewith appended will pay to the official assignee the several sums set out against their names respectively making a total of Rs. 932-1-9 which I understand will be sufficient to pay Rs. 0-4-3 in the rupee to all the creditors including the applicant.

Second Appeal No. 1084 of 1938, Decided on 1st August 1941, against decree of Sub-Judge, Devakottah, in A. S. No. 31 of 1937.

(a) Partnership Act (1932), S. 42—Partnership for carrying on chit to run for 50 months—Partnership does not terminate immediately on expiry of 50th month—It comes to an end only when monies due are collected and liabilities discharged.

When two persons form themselve into a partnership for the purpose of carrying on a chit transaction for 50 months, the chit may come to an end on the expiry of the 50th month; but as between the two persons who are joint stakeholders the adventure or undertaking does not come to an end immediately. All the monies due to the partnership have to be collected and the liabilities have to be discharged and it is only then that the business can be said to come to an end. As between the two the relationship of partners continues until the termination of the business of the partnership, i.e., until all the assets of the partnership are realised and the liabilities paid. (b) Partnership—Dissolution—Suit for taking account — Onus of proving that dissolution had taken place three years before suit is on defendant.

The onus of making out such dissolution is upon the defendant and the mere fact that after a particular date no further business was done will not amount to a dissolution of partnership: ('37) 24 AIR 1937 Mad 599, Foll. [P 105*a*]

K. Bhashyam and V. C. Veeraraghavan — for Appellant.

K. Rajah Ayyar — for Respondent.

Judgment. — This is an appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Devakottah in A. S. NO. 31 of 1937. The plaintiff (appellant) filed in the suit out of which this second appeal arises for dissolution of a partnership which he and the defendant are said to have been carrying on. The business of the partnership consisted in the running of a chit transaction, both the partners acting as stakeholders. The chit was to be conducted for a period of 50 months. Two prizes were to be taken by the stakeholders and the remaining forty eight were to be open to the other subscribers. The person who offered the lowest bid was given the prize. The suit has been dismissed by the lower appellate Court as barred by limitation. The chit started on 13th March 1924 and the 50 months expired on 14th May 1928. The present suit was filed on 13th February 1933. If the adventure or undertaking of carrying on a chit fund was completed by the end of the 50th month, then there was a dissolution of the partnership under S. 42, Partnership Act. That would be on 14th May 1928. If there was a dissolution on that date, then under Art. 106, of Sch. 2, Limitation Act, a suit for an account would have to be filed within three years from that date, unless in the meanwhile there were acknowledgments within three years of each other. The lower appellate Court held that the business of the partnership or the undertaking or adventure as mentioned in S. 42 (b) came to an end on the expiry of the 50 months during which the chit was to run. If this is conceded, the rest follows. The lower appellate Court says :

> Ordinarily a chit to run for 50 months by two persons in partnership is an adventure which terminates at the 50th month, or it is a partnership for a particular period.

This is a thorough misunderstanding of the nature of the partnership. When two persons form themselves into a partnership for the purpose of carrying on a chit transaction, the chit may come to an end on the expiry of the 50th month; but as between the two persons who are joint stakeholders the adventure or undertaking does not come to an end immediately, for monies due to the partnership from the subscribers have to be collected. If it is a case of single stakeholder there is no trouble; he will collect all the monies due from the subscribers who drew the prizes. But in a case where two persons form themselves into a partnership and the partnership is the stakeholder, then the partnership business does not cease or terminate with the 50th month or earlier if the auction of the chits every month comes to an end, earlier for other reasons. Very much more has to be done; all the monies due to the partnership have to be collected and the liabilities have to be discharged and it is only then that the business can be said to come to an end. As between the two the relationship of partners continues until the termination of the business of the partnership, i.e., until all the assets of the partnership are realised and the liabilities paid. It is this initial misunderstanding of the nature of the business, namely, that the partnership business came to an end at the termination of the 50th month, that has led the lower appellate Court to hold that the suit is barred. As held by a Bench of this Court in 45 M L W 749,[1] a suit for taking the accounts of a partnership would not be barred unless the defendant makes out that there has been a dissolution of the partnership more than three years prior to the institution of the suit. The onus of making out such dissolution is upon the defendant and it is well established that the mere fact that after a particular date no further business was done will not amount to a dissolution of the partnership.

It is unnecessary to refer to the decisions cited in that judgment. In this case the onus of proving that there was a dissolution lay upon the defendant. All that is said by the respondent in support of the judgment of the lower Court is that the plaintiff pleaded that there was a reference to arbitration and an attempt to settle the accounts and that there was an agreement for division of the assets and liabilities of the partnership between the partners. Unfortunately the agreement pleaded by the plaintiff was denied by the defendant and the defendant succeeded in satisfying the lower Courts that the plaintiff's case in regard to the settlement is not true. The first Court found that there was only an attempt at settlement and the lower appellate Court says that the finding of the trial Court that the settlement was only an abortive settlement in April or May 1928 was not even challenged before him. In the evidence given by the defendant at page 18 of the printed papers this is what he says :

> The chit was stopped because plaintiff said the 43rd auction might be postponed owing to want of collections. The plaintiff looked into the accounts with his accountant for the attempted agreement. The proposed terms were the assets and liabilities should be divided equally. I do not remember the persons who might have been present at that time. There was only a proposal to wind up our business as stated above.

After this evidence it is idle to contend that there was a dissolution or a completed agreement in April or May 1928. I hold that the suit is not barred by limitation. I reverse the decree of the lower appellate Court and restore that of the District Munsif with costs here and in the lower appellate Court. Leave to appeal is refused.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 1324 of 1939, Decided on 30th July 1941, to revise order of Sub-Judge, Tinnevelly, D/- 16th March 1939.

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), Ss. 10 (2) (iii), 8 and 9—Liability excluded from operation of Ss. 8 and 9 is present liability under which debtor is indebted at time of his application —Debt on which decree was passed carrying interest not more than 9 per cent.—Fact that debts of which it was renewal carried interest over 9 per cent. cannot exclude it from operation of S. 10 (2) (iii).

The liability excluded from the purview of operations under S. 8 or S. 9 is the present liability under which the debtor is at the time of his application indebted. Consequently, a debt due to a company on the basis of which the decree was passed and which carried interest at not more than 9 per cent. is clearly excluded from the operation of Ss. 8 and 9, and the fact that the debts of which it is the renewal carried interest in excess of 9 per cent. cannot bring it within the operation of Ss. 8 and 9 so as to exclude it from the operation of section 10 (2) (iii). [P 106*a*]

T. L. Venkatarama Iyer — for Petitioner.

L. Krishnaswami Ayyar — for Respondents.

Order. — The contention raised in this petition under Madras Act 4 of 1938 is one which, so far as I am aware, is not covered by authority, but it seems to me to be clearly untenable. The petitioner was employed by the Indian Equitable Insurance Co., Ltd., and he borrowed from his employers in 1927 a sum of Rs. 250 on a promissory note carrying interest at 12 per cent. per annum. In 1930 that debt was renewed by the execution of a fresh promissory note for Rs. 340 with interest at the same rate. In 1933 there was a further renewal by the execution of a note for Rs. 450 carrying interest at only 9 per cent. On this note the company sued and got a decree on 23rd October 1936. The debtor applied to scale down this decree under S. 19 of the Act, and has been met by the objection that under S. 10 (2) (iii) of the Act, nothing in Ss. 8 and 9 applies to a liability in respect of a sum due to a public company when the interest payable in respect of the liability is not more than 9 per cent. The argument advanced before me is that because the debt which has been decreed is itself a renewal of earlier debts carrying interest at 12 per cent., the explanation to S. 8 can be applied and that by the application of this explanation the liability becomes tranformed into one bearing interest in excess of 9 per cent., so as to exclude it from the operation of S. 10 (2) (iii). That is to say, the petitioner proposes to apply S. 8 of the Act, in order to make this liability into one to which S. 8 of the Act shall apply. This process seems to me unjustifiable. The liability excluded from the purview of operations under S. 8 or S. 9 of the Act is the present liability under which the debtor is at the time of his application indebted. If that liability is due to a company and carried interest at not more than 9 per cent., it is clearly excluded from the operation of Ss. 8 and 9 and, therefore, these sections cannot be called in aid to substitute for this liability an earlier liability which bore a higher rate of interest. The petition is dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 970 of 1937, Decided on 14th March 1941, against decree of Sub-Judge, Chittoor, in A. S. No. 1 of 1936.

(a) Adverse possession — Person in adverse possession of property inheriting same within 12 years from date of his adverse possession— Vesting of property by inheritance puts an end to adverse possession.

A person cannot perfect his title to certain property by adverse possession if subsequently he inherits that property within twelve years from the commencement of his adverse possession as the legal consequence of the vesting of property in him by inheritance is that the adverse possession that was running against the owner comes to an end. When he becomes the owner adverse possession cannot run against himself: ('19) 6 AIR 1919 P C 44, Expl.; ('40) 27 AIR 1940 Mad 102, Disting. [P 107*c*]

(b) Hindu law — Inheritance — Daughter as heir of parents takes restricted interest similar to that of widow—Alienation for spiritual welfare of parents is for necessity.

Under the Hindu law the daughter as heiress of her father or mother takes a restricted interest similar to that taken by a widow with a similar power of disposal. Hence for religious or charitable purposes, or those which are supposed to conduce to the spiritual welfare of her parents the daughter has a larger power of disposition than that which she possesses for purely worldly purposes: 8 M I A 529 (P C); 34 Mad 288; ('22) 9 AIR 1922 P C 261, Rel. on; ('16) 3 A I R 1916 Cal 792, Approved. [P 108*h*; P 109*a*]

Judgment. — This second appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration that the sale of a house and lands (Ex. X) executed by defendants 1 and 2 in favour of defendant 3 is not binding on the plaintiffs beyond the lifetime of defendant 1. Defendant 1 is the daughter of one Tirupati Ramarao who died without any male issue leaving him surviving his widow Janaki Bai and his daughter defendant 1. The case for the plaintiffs is that the suit properties belonged to Ramarao and devolved on Janaki Bai by right of inheritance and on her death, on the plaintiffs and that the said alienation by defendant 1 was not for any legal necessity. The case for the defendants is that the property was the absolute property of Janaki Bai, that she gifted them to defendant 1 in or about 1904, that ever since the said date she had been in absolute possession and enjoyment of the property and acquired title thereto by adverse possession. Defendant 1 also pleaded that the said sale was made for discharging a prior mortgage which was executed for a necessary purpose, namely for discharging certain debts incurred for repairs to the house, for medical treatment and for obsequial ceremonies of her mother and for the marriage expenses of her daughter's daughter. She also denied that plaintiffs are the reversioners. The learned District Munsif found that the plaintiffs are the reversioners of Ramarao and also of Janaki Bai, that the property belonged to Janaki Bai, that though the property was gifted to defendant 1 in 1904, she did not acquire title thereto by adverse possession because Janaki Bai died within twelve years before succession opened, that the mortgage for the discharge of which the sale was executed was valid only to the extent of Rs. 600 on the ground that that sum must be deemed to have been spent towards the necessary expenses binding on the estate and that the balance of Rs. 1200 spent for the marriage expenses of her daughter's daughter was not a a legal necessity and that the said sale was therefore binding upon the plaintiffs only to the extent of Rs. 600. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge confirmed the finding as to the status of the plaintiffs as the reversioners of Janaki Bai and also in regard to the question of adverse possession. He upheld the sale in its entirety on the ground that the amount borrowed for the marriage of the daughter's daughter of defendant 1 was for a necessary purpose. He took the view that the marriage of the daughter's daughter was a proper religious object which would conduce to the spiritual benefit of defendant 1's father Ramarao and her mother Janaki Bai.

b This appeal is preferred by the plaintiffs and on their behalf their learned counsel Mr. Bhujanga Rao contended that the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge in regard to the expenses incurred towards defendant 1's daughter's daughter's marriage was wrong and that, in any event, the amount borrowed was excessive. The questions therefore to be decided are: (1) Was the amount borrowed for the expenses of the said marriage for a necessary purpose so as to bind the estate and (2) was the amount of Rs. 1200 spent in connexion therewith proper and justifiable, if not, what is the reac sonable amount that can be allowed? Before dealing with these questions, I shall deal with the argument of Mr. Venugopalachari on the finding of the lower Court in regard to the question of adverse possession. He contended that the finding was wrong and if it was decided in his favour, the decree of the lower Court could be supported on that ground. He put his argument thus: long before succession opened the property was gifted away by Janaki Bai to defendant 1 and from the date of the gift defendant 1 was dealing with the property in her own right and when Janaki Bai died she did not
d take the property as her heir but continued to hold it adversely to the estate and no suit having been filed within 12 years from the date of the gift, she acquired title thereto by adverse possession after the lapse of the said period. In support of his contention he relied on the decision of the Privy Council in 43 Mad 214[1] and a decision of this Court reported in 50 M L W 571.[2] On principle, it seems to me that the contention is untenable. On the death of Janaki Bai the property vested in defendant 1 by right of inheri- e ance. Under the Hindu law, succession cannot remain in abeyance and whether the heir at law wills or not the property will vest in him. Before the title to the suit property was perfected by adverse possession by defendant 1, the property vested in her. The legal consequence of that vesting is that the adverse possession which was running against the owner came to an end. Defendant 1 became the owner and adverse possession could not run against herself.

In 43 Mad 214[1] the facts were as follows: Gopalakrishna Pillai and Parthasarathi Pillai owned a mitta in equal shares. Gopalakrishna died leaving his widow f Rajammal and Parthasarathi Pillai died leaving his widow Alangarammal to whom he bequeathed absolutely his share in the said mitta. The whole mitta was registered in the names of both Rajammal and Alangarammal. On 10th October 1895 two petitions were presented to the Collector of Chingleput, one by Alangarammal and the other by Rajammal stating that each had gifted away the share in the mitta to which each was entitled to Duraisani Ammal on 8th October 1895 and that therefore the mitta might be transferred in her name. This was accordingly done and ever since that date g until the date of her death in 1911, Duraisani Ammal enjoyed the property and was in receipt of rents and profits solely. Rajammal died in 1901 and Alangarammal died in 1912, a year after Duraisani Ammal's death. Duraisani left a daughter Jeevaratnammal who succeeded to her property. The plaintiffs who were the reversioners of Parthasarathi Pillai and his widow Alangarammal sued to recover a half-share of the mitta. Among other pleas Jeevaratnammal pleaded that Duraisani Ammal acquired title to that share by adverse possession. This plea was upheld by their Lordships of the Privy h Council. They took the view that the gift was invalid on the ground that it was not made in conformity with the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act but Duraisani must be deemed to have enjoyed the property adversely to both Rajammal and Alangarammal from the date of the gift and that as by the date of her death in December 1911, 12 years had elapsed, the claim of Alangarammal and therefore of her heirs, the plaintiffs, was barred by adverse possession. It was contended before their Lordships that when Rajammal died in 1901 Duraisani succeeded to her moiety by right of inheritance and therefore her possession from that date must a be deemed to have been as a co-owner and that the possession of Duraisani as such co-owner could not be adverse to Alangarammal or her heirs. This contention was negatived by their Lordships and they remarked thus:

> In the present case it is plain that during the life of Rajammal the possession of Duraisani was adverse as against both co-owners; and this being so, there is no reason for holding that when on the death of Rajammal she became legally entitled to a moiety of the property, the character of her possession of the other moiety as against Alangarammal was changed. There having been an ouster of Alangarammal before the death of Rajammal, this ouster continued after her death, and the possession of Duraisani was adverse to Alangarammal
> b throughout. This contention therefore also fails.

It will thus be seen that their Lordships dealt only with the adverse possession regarding the share of Alangarammal. The possession of Duraisani even of the share of Rajammal during her lifetime was not as co-owner and therefore it was prima facie adverse to Alangarammal in respect of her share. Thus, on the death of Alangarammal, as against her heirs, the character of this possession would continue. She was not an heir of Alangarammal and therefore had no interest in her share. But their Lordships did not decide the question that if Rajam-c mal had left a co-heir along with Duraisani Ammal whether Duraisani could plead adverse possession in respect of Rajammal's moiety. In 50 M L W 571[2] this question pointedly arose and my learned brother Patanjali Sastri J. took the view that the principle of the decision in 43 Mad 244[1] would apply to it. In that case there were two brothers Servarayya Chetti and Alagiri Chetti. Servaraya died in 1891 leaving him surviving his widow who also died in the same year. Alagiri was therefore the person who became entitled to the property. But on the date of the death of the widow, one d of the sons of Alagiri (Alagiri had five sons) was in possession of the house and continued to be in sole possession thereof until the date of Alagiri's death in 1900. The plaintiffs who were the grandsons of Alagiri by two of his sons Annasami and Kandasami sued to recover the share of their fathers. Respondent 1 resisted the claim on ground of limitation and his plea was upheld on the ground that under Art. 141, Limitation Act, the suit should have been filed within twelve years from the date of the widow's death. It would seem to me that prima facie on the death of Alagiri Chetti the property having vested in all the heirs of Alagiri Chetti as tenants in common the adverse possession which was running against Alagiri Chetti must be deem-e ed to have come to an end. In the case of a tenancy in common each tenant has the entire possession as well of every part as of the whole. It cannot be said that one tenant in common who is in possession of the property can be held to be exclusively in possession of that whole because the principle is each has got an undivided moiety of the whole and not the whole of the undivided moiety. Therefore, on the death of Alagiri Chetty, all the heirs became entitled to the property and there was thus unity of title. The question is whether there was unity of possession. It cannot be denied that so far as f possession of respondent 1 was concerned, he cannot be said to be holding adversely to himself in respect of any portion of the property because the character of possession must necessarily change in consequence of the vesting in himself as part owner. As the possession of one tenant in common is prima facie possession of the other, the possession therefore of respondent 1 must only be held to be adverse after the date of the death of Alagiri.

There must be distinct evidence of ouster after that date because it cannot be said that at the moment of vesting there was ouster. In order to constitute ouster, there g must be assertion of a hostile title after vesting and notice thereof to the other co-heirs, direct or indirect, inferable from acts and circumstances which would warrant such an inference. It may be possible for the Court to infer that the possession of respondent 1 from the date of the death of Alagiri cannot be said to be on behalf of all the heirs of Alagiri having regard to the prior hostile possession of respondent 1. Whether 50 M L W 571[2] was correctly decided or not, the present case is distinguishable. The property vested solely in respondent 1 on the death of Janaki Bai. The person to sue and the h person to be sued being one and the same person, the owner must be deemed to have regained possession thus putting an end to any prior hostile title. I am therefore of the opinion that the view taken by the lower appellate Court that respondent 1 did not acquire title by adverse possession as against reversionary heirs is correct. I shall now deal with the question regarding the validity of the mortgage in so far as it was executed for borrowing moneys for the expenses of the daughter's daughter's marriage of defendant 1. Under the Hindu law, the daughter as heiress of her father or mother takes a restricted interest similar to that taken by a a widow with a similar power of disposal. The power of disposal of a Hindu widow inheriting her husband's property is thus defined by the Privy Council in 8 M I A 529[3] at p. 551 :

> For religious or charitable purposes, or those which are supposed to conduce to the spiritual welfare of her husband, she (the widow) has a larger power of disposition than that which she possesses for purely worldly purposes.

Dealing with this passage, Benson and Krishnaswami Ayyar JJ. in 34 Mad 288[4] remarked thus :

> Their Lordships did not attempt to further define the spiritual purpose. We have endeavoured to suggest the further limitation that the spiritual b purpose should be such as is regarded by Hindu community as reasonable and proper though not absolutely necessary.

The learned Judges further pointed out that > if the expenditure by the daughter is for the spiritual needs of the father's soul, it stands on the same footing as the expenditure by the widow for the spiritual needs of her husband.

I would add that in the case of an alienation by a daughter of her mother's stridhanam if the expenditure by the daughter was for the spiritual needs of the soul of her parents, it stands on the same footing as the expenditure by the widow for the spiritual needs of her husband. The views expressed c in 34 Mad 288[4] have received the approval of the Privy Council in 44 ALL 503.[5] Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee also cited with approval the observations of Mukerjee J. in 43 Cal 574,[6] namely that :

> It is absolutely impossible to define the extent and limit of the power of the widow to dispose of her husband's property for religious purposes, because it must depend upon the circumstances of the disposition whenever such disposition shall be made, and must be consistent with the law regulating such disposition.

Their Lordships further pointed out in that case that the necessity for the alienation need not be of the same character as in the case of alienations for secular purposes, that d the Hindu system recognises two sets of religious acts, one obligatory and the other optional, and that the alienation for both the sets of acts would be binding on the reversionary heir but only in regard to acts which are optional, the alienation must relate only to a reasonable portion of the property. Their Lordships upheld the gift of a small e portion of the property for the offerings to the deity and for the maintenance of the priest charged with the performance of that duty on the ground that it was a pious act in the Hindu system.

The question in the present case is whether the marriage of a daughter's granddaughter could be said to be a pious and meritorious act which would conduce to the spiritual benefit of the deceased parents of defendant 1. Judicial decisions have upheld alienations made for the marriage of a daughter's daughter or a daughter's son of a propositus. If, in this case, the marriage f expenses had been incurred for the expenses of the daughter of respondent 1 and the mother of the girl whose marriage is the subject of consideration, there could be no doubt as to the validity of the mortgage : vide 3 I C 77[7] following 18 ALL 474,[8] and 57 Mad 772[9] and 62 M L J 39.[10] In the case of the daughter's daughter's marriage of the propositus the alienation was upheld on the ground that the husband of the daughter and the father of the girl was indigent and the propositus, if he had been alive, would be under a moral duty to perform her marriage. In the case of a daughter's son, Venkatasubba Rao J.
g in 62 M L J 39[10] took the view that a Hindu would be morally bound to give support to the marriage of his daughter's son. In that same case he observed that so far as the marriage of a daughter's daughter is concerned, there could be no question that the costs incurred for her marriage would be a proper legal necessity to justify an alienation. In 57 Mad 772,[9] the learned Judges upheld an alienation made by a Hindu widow for debts contracted for the thread and marriage ceremonies of one of her daughter's sons even in a case where the father was not indigent. The learned Judges took the h view that the expenditure incurred must be said to be for purposes connected with the husband's spiritual welfare. In disapproving the contrary view taken by the lower Court, the learned Judges remarked thus :

> The pious endeavour of this widow to promote her husband's spiritual bliss by honouring his daughter's son may for aught we know in its result fall short of her intention; but so long as she acted with piety and in consonance with prevalent notions we do not think it incumbent upon us to interfere any more than the Judicial Committee interfered with the gift to the idol.

The ratio decidendi of these cases appears to be that if the acts for which alienations were made can be considered to be pious and meritorious according to the prevalent Hindu notions, the alienations, provided the quantum is reasonable, should be upheld. The question in this case is whether the marriage of daughter's grand-daughter would satisfy this test. It is recognized by Hindu Shastras that the gift of a virgin in marriage is a very pious and meritorious act that will confer spiritual benefit : cf. 22 Mad 113[11] at p. 115. In Danachandrika Anukramanicka by Divakara Bhatta we find the following :

Then the gift of a Kanya — in Hemadri (it is said): The gift of a thousand cows or that of a hundred is equal to that of a Bull. The gift of a vehicle (vahanam) is equal to that of ten Bulls. The gift of a horse is equal to that of ten vehicles. The gift of a Kanya is equal to that of ten horses or to that of land. Hence gift of Kanya is highly praiseworthy. In Agnipurana (it is said): Hearing about the gift of a Kanya (by a descendant) one's parents and grandparents are liberated from all sins and attain heaven (the abode of Brahman).

In Samskara Ratnamala of Bhatta Gopinatha (1st canto of Grihya Sutras edited by V. S. R. Kasinatha Sastri Bahu Sastri Padke, 1899 Edition) it is stated thus : (p. 499):

The benefits accruing from the shastraic gifting of a destitute Kanya are told thus in Puranas. It is advisable to make one's own, another's daughter (Kanya) in exchange for gold, even though the Kanya does not belong to one's own Gotra and gift her away according to Sastraic injunctions — He who on perceiving a destitute girl makes a gift of her to a proper bridegroom obtains twofold the benefits accruing from the gift of a Kanya.

Page 501 :

The benefits accruing from the gifting of a Kanya—bejewelled and with ornaments (Kookuda), i. e., a person making such a gift mentioned above, a man performing Aswamedha Sacrifice, a man who protects another in peril, all three are invited to Indra's abode in his car.

In Mahabaratham Anusasana Parvam XIII, Chap. 235, stanzas 67 to 73, the spiritual benefit of Kanyadhanam is thus described :

Sloka 1. उमोवाच —

Goddess Uma said to Iswara: 'Oh Lord, what are the things that can be given as gifts with a view to Dharma? Please explain them to me. I wish to hear the same.

The Lord said :

After this, I shall say about Kanyadhanam (gift of a maiden). Oh Mahadevi, one must give a girl with clean vratams, good conduct, good caste and good looks, either his own girl or another's girl, to a good boy who has an affection for her, after first coming to a decision himself on the propriety of the boy and then in consultation with the relations, the gift to be made according to Sastras. That girl is to be gifted with house, with all jewels, maidservants, menservants, gifts, household articles, cattle, grains, etc., to one who is fit for her and who loves her, before agni (fire) and the marriage celebrated according to Sastras. The couple must be provided with means of livelihood and they both must be settled in a good house. If Kanyadhanam is done in this manner, by virtue of that dhanam, the giver after death will reach Swarga, be praised there and be happy. Even in the next birth, he will acquire wealth and progeny.

Thus, the gift of a destitute virgin in marriage is a pious and meritorious act from a religious point of view. Much more so, it must be in the case of a daughter's grand-daughter whose parents are indigent. According to prevalent Hindu notions the propositus would be morally bound to perform her marriage. It is clear from the evidence in this case that the mother of the girl was dead and the father was poor and not possessed of any means to perform the marriage. The girl and her parents lived with defendant 1 and she was being brought up by her. I would, therefore, hold that the marriage of this girl is a pious and meritorious act according to the Hindu system and the expenses incurred therefor must be deemed to be expenses incurred for charitable or religious purposes within the meaning of the rule laid down by the Privy Council and that it was open to defendant 1 to mortgage the property for the expenses in connexion therewith.

The question is whether the sum of Rs. 1200 spent towards the expenses of the marriage was justifiable; if not, what is the reasonable amount to be allowed? The property was sold for Rs. 2700. It appears to me that a sum of Rs. 1200 towards marriage is a little excessive. Having regard to the fact that the girl was given away to a well educated bridegroom, I would hold that the widow would be justified in this case to alienate a third of her property and I would, therefore, uphold the mortgage to the extent of Rs. 900. The result of my finding is that the sale in favour of defendant 3 must be upheld subject to the obligation of refunding a sum of Rs. 300 to the next reversioner. I accordingly hold that the sale is valid and binding on the reversioners, but I direct defendant 3 to refund after the death of defendant 1 a sum of Rs. 300 with interest at 6 per cent. per annum to the plaintiffs from that date if they happen to be the next reversioners or to the persons who happen to be the next reversioners on the date of her death. Parties will bear their own costs in this appeal.

Kovvuri Subba Rao — Petitioner

Venkatapuram Panchayat Board represented by President Gudipati Venkatappayya — Respondent.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 482 of 1938, Decided on 11th October 1940, to revise decree of Sub-Judge, Masulipatam, in S. C. S. No. 36 of 1936.

Local Authorities Loans Act (1914), S. 3— Panchayat Board borrowing money from plaintiff for purpose falling under S. 3, Local Authorities Loans Act, without Local Government's sanction as required by rules framed under Act — Contract is void — But plaintiff is entitled to restoration of his money under S. 65, Contract Act — Plaintiff can amend his plaint so as to claim relief under S. 65, Contract Act—Purpose not falling under S. 3, Local Authorities Loans Act of 1914—Plaintiff is not entitled to equitable relief under S. 65, Contract Act — Burden to show that S. 65, Contract Act, does not apply is on Panchayat Board.

Where the Panchayat Board has borrowed money from the plaintiff for any of the purposes enumerated in S. 3, Local Authorities Loans Act, without the previous sanction of the Local Government as required by the rules framed under the Act, the contract is void but the plaintiff is under S. 65, Contract Act, entitled to restoration of his money and can be permitted to amend his plaint so as to claim relief under S. 65, Contract Act: ('34) 21 AIR 1934 Mad 480; ('38) 25 AIR 1938 Mad 746; ('39) 26 AIR 1939 Mad 929 and ('27) 14 A I R 1927 Cal 465, Rel. on : ('21) 8 A I R 1921 Bom 147 and ('29) 16 AIR 1929 Bom 89, Not applied. [P 112*g*; P 113*c*]

Where however the purpose for which the loan was borrowed without the previous sanction of the Local Government does not fall under S. 3, Local Authorities Loans Act of 1914 the plaintiff is entitled to no equitable relief under S. 65, Contract Act : (1880) 5 Q B D 483 and (1910) 2 Ch 560, Rel. on. [P 113*b*]

The burden to show that S. 65, Contract Act, does not apply is on the Panchayat Board and that burden cannot be discharged merely by a reference to the provisions of Act of 1914 which prohibit the loan. [P 112*b*]

V. Viyanna — for Petitioner.

P. Satyanarayana Rao — for Respondent.

Order.—The petitioner brought the present suit in 1936 against the Panchayat Board of Venkatapuram to recover from it the balance said to be due upon an alleged loan of Rs. 400 made by him to the board in March 1933, which was to carry interest at Re. 1-9-0 per cent. per mensem. It is admitted by the petitioner that the board has not obtained any sanction from the Local Government to borrow the money, as it was bound to do under the rules framed by the Government under S. 4, Local Authorities Loans Act. The board accordingly contended that the contract was void and no suit to enforce it would lie. Petitioner accepted this proposition of law, but pleaded that though he could not enforce the contract as such, he was entitled to the restoration of his money under S. 65, Contract Act. The learned Subordinate Judge of Masulipatam refused to allow petitioner to amend his plaint so as to found his claim upon S. 65, and also held that, even if the plaint were so amended such a claim was unsustainable. Whether that view of the law is right or wrong is the question which I have now to decide.

There is nothing in the language of S. 65 which prevents the petitioner from arguing that his claim falls within it, as that language is very wide and general, and the burden, it seems to me, is upon the respondent to show that S. 65 does not apply. That burden cannot be discharged by a mere reference to S. 7, Local Authorities Loans Act, which prohibits the present loan, as S. 65 deals necessarily with contracts that are void, and it is this very prohibition which makes the present contract void. Respondent has therefore fallen back upon the argument that the board in the matter of this contract occupies the same position in law as a minor or a lunatic; or in other words that it was "disqualified from contracting" in the words of S. 11. In 45 Bom 225,[1] it has been held that S. 65 cannot be invoked in the case of a contract which was void because one of the contracting parties was a minor; and in 53 Bom 309[2] the same principle has been followed in the case of a contract with a lunatic. To extend this principle to the case of a local body which enters into a contract which the law forbids would appear to be at first sight a simple and logical solution of the problem, but the current of authority in this country is against it. There are three cases in Madras in which municipalities have entered into contracts which infringe positive provisions of law, 58 Mad 65,[3] 47 M L W 668[4] and AIR 1939 Mad 929[5] and in all these cases S. 65 has been applied. And there is also one case in Calcutta, 54 Cal 189,[6] in which the section has been applied to a contract entered into by the Port Commissioners of Chittagong in contravention of the requirements of law.

It is argued for the respondent that these cases deal with mere formalities. For instance the only defect in the contracts in 47 M L W 668[4] and AIR 1939 Mad 929[5] was the failure by the Committee to whom the power to contract had been delegated by S. 68 (1), Madras District Municipalities Act, to obtain the previous sanction of the Council under S. 68 (2). In those cases there could never be any doubt as to the competency of the Council to contract. Here the defect is more serious as the Panchayat Board cannot borrow any money at all without the previous sanction of the Local Government. But if I am to hold that this is a contract void under S. 11, Contract Act, as one which the Board was disqualified by law from entering into, it is clear that the municipalities were equally disqualified in 47 M L W 668[4] and A I R 1939 Mad 929[5] from entering into the contracts there dealt with. I can see no difference in principle between those cases and this case. In all the cases the power to make the contract exists (as S. 3, Local Authorities Loans Act, gives power to borrow subject to the prescribed conditions), and all that has been done is failure to comply with the conditions laid down by the Act or rules. It is significant that in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge the word "formalities" is used more than once to describe the rule which the Board has in this case infringed. I am of opinion therefore that I am bound by the decisions above referred to hold that the petitioner in this case can be permitted to sue under S. 65, Contract Act.

My attention has been called to a number of very interesting cases decided in England in which the powers of a company or a corporation to borrow money have been very closely scrutinized and strictly construed. But there is no case in which it has been held that there is no right of recovery of money lent merely because some previous necessary sanction has not been obtained. to the case now before me, most stress was laid upon the fact that money was borrowed for purposes not sanctioned by law and that, as I shall show, is a matter concerned not with the exclusion of S. 65, but with the way in which it is to be interpreted.

I have now given reasons for holding that petitioner's suit cannot be dismissed out of hand on the ground that S. 65 can in no circumstances apply. The suit will therefore have to be remanded for disposal under S. 65 after a full consideration of all the facts. The Court below must find (i) whether the board has received any advantage or not under the contract and (ii) whether the petitioner has, in any way, disqualified himself from applying to the Court for the equitable remedy which S. 65 affords. In deciding both these issues, the consideration of the purpose for which the money was borrowed and applied will be of considerable importance. If such purpose does not fall within the purposes enumerated in S. 3, Local Authorities Loans Act, it is difficult to argue that the board has received any advantage; and if petitioner intended that the money should be used for a purpose not so enumerated he has deliberately lent the money in order to break the law and is entitled to no equitable relief. There was no serious objection before me to the amendment of petitioner's plaint on any other ground than those discussed. He will be permitted to amend it so as to claim relief under S. 65. The respondent will be permitted to file an additional written statement and the learned Subordinate Judge will then proceed to dispose of the suit in the light of this judgment. The question of what interest, if any, is to be allowed to the petitioner will of course be dealt with under S. 65 as there can be no question of enforcing the terms of the agreement as such. Costs of this revision will be costs in the cause.

FACTS. — The Nadars of the village of Chintamani were contending that they were entitled to take the Mariamman deity in procession through the Brahmin street and the Brahmins were resisting the claim. In November 1939, the deity was taken in procession by the Nadars and at the entrance of the Brahmin street it was objected to. The police stopped the procession and dispersed the crowd and the deity and the chapram were left at the spot where they stood. The police applied for and obtained on 15th November 1939 an order under S. 133, Criminal P. C., and the said order was made absolute ex parte on 17th November. The petitioner who became aware of the ex parte order obtained from the Sub-divisional Magistrate an order under S. 138, Criminal P. C., by appointment of a jury under S. 135, Criminal P. C. The jury decided in favour of the petitioner that the deity should be allowed to go in procession through the Brahmin street, because the chapram and the deity should not be taken back. The Magistrate agreed with the jury but modified the jury's verdict by saying that the deity should go through the Brahmin street without the paraphernalia of a procession. In a revision filed by the Brahmins the High Court in Cr. R. C. No. 22 of 1940 ordered that the Sub-divisional Magistrate should have dropped the proceedings under Chap. 10 as required by S. 139, if he did not accept the jury's verdict and therefore set aside the order.

Subsequent to it on 7th April 1940 as a continuation of the order dated 17th November 1939 the Sub-divisional Magistrate passed an order directing the removal of the chapram and the deity within one week from receipt thereof on peril of being penalized under S. 188, Penal Code, for disobedience and this order was followed by another order on 27th April 1940 in similar terms only also containing directions as to the route through which the chapram and deity are to be taken. Against this order the present revision was filed by the Nadars on the ground that the proceedings under Chapter 10 having been dropped under S. 139 cl. 2, Criminal P. C., it was not competent to proceed under Chap. 10 and that no order could be passed under a Ss. 137 and 140, Criminal P. C., under the circumstances.

Order.—The order under S. 133, Criminal P. C., was not made absolute under cl. (1) of S. 139, Criminal P. C., and further proceedings had to be dropped as provided in cl. (2) of S. 139, Criminal P. C. Section 140, Criminal P. C., is therefore inapplicable and the order of the Sub-divisional Magistrate cannot be sustained. The revision petition is therefore allowed and the order of the Sub-divisional Magistrate is set aside.

WADSWORTH J.

Konda Boyan — Appellant

v.

Palaniswami Goundan — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 979 of 1939, Decided on 21st January 1941, against decree of Sub-Judge, Coimbatore, D/- 8th September 1939.

Fraud — Decree obtained by perjury or on forged document—Decree cannot be set aside—Plaintiff executing pronote in defendant's favour — Defendant forging another pronote similar to genuine one and obtaining decrees on both by playing trick upon Court, also on debtor and witnesses to prevent truth being c discovered — Case held of fraud much wider than scope of matters decided in suit in which wrong decree was obtained—Decree on forged note held must be set aside.

A decree will not be set aside merely on proof that it was obtained by perjury or that the document upon which it is based is a forged document. The questions whether there was perjury or forgery are matters which must be taken to have been decided in the suit itself and even if they have been decided wrongly and a decree has been given as the result of forgery or perjury or both, the Court in the interests of finality will refuse to reopen the matter in a subsequent suit between the same parties: ('16) 3 A I R 1916 Mad 364, Rel. on. [P 115*f*]

The defendant obtained two decrees against the plaintiff, who was in jail, one on the genuine promissory note executed by the plaintiff in his favour d and the other on a forged pronote which was made to appear exactly similar to the genuine pronote except for one more attestor. The decree on the forged document was obtained by playing a trick upon the Court and also upon the debtor and the witnesses to prevent the truth being discovered:

Held that the decree on the forged pronote must be set aside as the case was one of fraud much wider than the scope of the matters decided in the actual suit wherein the wrong decree was obtained. [P 116*a*]

Judgment. — This appeal arises out of a suit brought for the cancellation of one of two decrees obtained by the present appellant, defendant 1 in the Court of first instance against the plaintiff. The facts which have been found by the Courts below make e out a very unusual story. The plaintiff was a convict in jail. He had executed a promissory note in favour of defendant 2 which promissory note had been transferred to defendant 1 and a small payment had been made to defendant 1 after the assignment. It has been found by the Courts below that defendant 1 evolved a very cunning conspiracy whereby his claim against the plaintiff was duplicated in such a way as not to arouse the suspicion of the plaintiff and to prevent him from defending the two suits, one filed upon a forged promissory note and the other filed upon the genuine promissory note. According to the findings of fact, de- f fendant 1, knowing that the plaintiff was in jail forged what is almost a duplicate of the genuine promissory note, making it of the same date for the same amount with the same attesting witnesses, together with one additional attestor, and transferred at the same time to the same defendant 1. It is found that, when the suit on the forged promissory note, EX. G, was filed, the summons was served upon the plaintiff in jail on 7th August 1935 and he, thinking that this was a suit on the genuine promissory note to which he had no defence, took no action to contest the suit. A decree followed on 7th g September 1935. About a fortnight before this decree a second suit, O. S. NO. 592 of 1935 was filed on the basis of EX. A, the genuine promissory note and the summons in the second suit was served on the present plaintiff in jail on 5th September 1935 that is to say, nearly a month after the previous summons and two days before the decree in the earlier suit. The present plaintiff not having the summons in the previous suit in his custody because of jail rules, was under the impression that the second summons was another summons in the first suit and did not notice the difference in the suit h number and the slight difference in the amount. Consequently, the plaintiff thought that no purpose would be served by doing anything about this second summons. The second suit was also decreed. It is found by the Courts below that the evidence upon which the second decree was obtained was the genuine evidence of the original promisee and the attesting witnesses who were quite innocent of any knowledge that a fraud had been played in the earlier suit. The decree in the earlier suit is found to have been obtained by putting forward some person unknown who impersonated the promisee and gave evidence in support of the forged promissory note and also by putting forward another individual as the third attestor to the promissory note whose name and address did not correspond to those of any known person. An attempt was made on behalf of the defence to establish the fact that this third witness to the forged promissory note was an individual who had died shortly before the trial of the present suit. The Courts below have rejected this story and have refused to believe that the person alleged to have died in a place some seventeen miles away was the same person as the witness who is put forward as having signed this promissory note.

According to the findings, therefore, defendant 1 got two decrees, one on a forged note supported by two witnesses each of whom must have been personating some one else and the other on the true promissory note supported by three witnesses who were deliberately kept in ignorance of the earlier suit and the present plaintiff was hoodwinked into not defending either suit by the trick which was played upon him, of filing the suits and issuing notices in rapid succession so that in the circumstances in which he was placed he was led to believe that both notices related to the same suit. Having got these decrees, defendant 1 proceeded to execute the earlier decree and the plaintiff in jail hearing of this execution, still thinking that it was a decree to which he had no answer, instructed his relatives to satisfy the decree. After collecting the amount of this decree, defendant 1 proceeded then to execute the second decree obtained upon the true note and it was then the plaintiff received notice of execution in respect of a decree, which he thought was a single decree already fully satisfied, that he had inquiries made and learnt of the fraud and lodged the present suit.

It is not open to me sitting in second appeal to go into the correctness of the findings of fact reached in the Courts below. Both Courts are agreed that the promissory note in the first suit was a forgery, that the person who gave evidence in that suit in the name of the promisee, defendant 2 here, was some individual who impersonated defendant 2 and that the other witness was some unknown person whose name had been added in order to avoid the complication of having to examine the attestors to the genuine promissory note in both the suits. It has also been found as a fact that the promisee, defendant 2, was speaking the truth when he says that he took only one promissory note from the plaintiff and endorsed only one promissory note to defendant 1 and that he never gave evidence in the suit on the other promissory note and that the thumb prints appearing on that promissory note and also on the deposition in the suit on that promissory note are not his thumb prints. Taking all these findings of fact to be true, do they amount to a case of fraud extrinsic to the matters adjudicated upon in the earlier suit so as to justify the cancellation of that decree on the ground that it has been obtained by fraud? It is not necessary to set forth the authorities on the question of the nature of the fraud which must be established in order to set aside a decree. They are summarised in a decision in 38 Mad 203[1] which has been followed in many other cases. It is, I think, established that a decree will not be set aside merely on proof that it was obtained by perjury or that the document upon which it is based is a forged document. The questions whether there was perjury or forgery are matters which must be taken to have been decided in the suit itself and even if they have been decided wrongly and a decree has been given as the result of forgery or perjury or both, the Court in the interests of finality will refuse to reopen the matter in a subsequent suit between the same parties.

It has been urged by the appellant that the present case is nothing more than a case in which the Court is asked to set aside a decree on the basis of findings that the document on which the suit was based is a forgery and that the evidence with which the decree was obtained is perjured evidence. But, it seems to me that the case put forward by the plaintiff goes much further than this. The plaintiff alleges that there has been a deliberate conspiracy of a number of people not only to hoodwink the Court into passing a wrong decree, but also to deceive the defendant as to the nature of the suit and by a trick to prevent him from resisting that suit. It is not merely a case of an allegation of forgery or perjury but of an allegation that a suit on the forged promissory note was deliberately filed in such circumstances that it might be mistaken for the suit on the genuine promissory note and that the suit on the genuine promissory note was filed in such circumstances that the defendant would not be apprised of the trick which had been played upon him in the earlier suit, so that he might canvass the matter in appeal. It is also alleged that the two main witnesses who supported the forged promissory note were both individuals who were impersonating the proper witnesses and that the whole scheme whereby these two suits were conducted was so devised that neither the debtor nor the true witnesses should realise the nature of the trick which was played. Such a case is to my mind a case of fraud much wider than the scope of the matters decided in the actual suit wherein the wrong decree was obtained and one in which a trick was played upon the Court and also upon the debtor and the witnesses to prevent the truth being discovered. In law therefore the decision of the Courts below is in my opinion correct.

I wish to make it clear in view of the criminal proceedings which are said to be pending that I express no opinion as to the correctness of the findings of the Courts below on the questions of fact upon which it is not open to me to give a contrary decision. In the result therefore the appeal is dismissed with costs of respondent 1. Leave refused.

Second Appeal No. 1068 of 1937, Decided on 27th September 1940, against decree of the Sub-Judge, Tinnevelly, in A. S. No. 2 of 1937.

(a) Workmen's Compensation Act (1923), Ss. 10 (1) and 22 — Word 'claim' in Ss. 10 (1) and 22—Meaning of.

The claim referred to in S. 10 (1) and S. 22 means a formal claim made before the commissioner and not a claim made of the employers : ('39) 26 A I R 1939 Pat 181, Approved; ('34) 21 A I R 1934 Cal 460 (SB), Not approved.

(b) Workmen's Compensation Act (1923), Rules under, R. 19 and S. 22 — Claim for compensation—Omission to give particulars under S. 22 or file certificate under R. 19 is not fatal defect—Application held amounted to claim for compensation.

The Legislature did not intend that a claim should not be entertained or enquired into, or that no compensation should be granted, unless the application were in strict form. Consequently, an omission to give particulars mentioned in S. 22 in the claim for compensation or to file a certificate under R. 19 is not fatal. If those particulars and the certificate are necessary, the commissioner can obtain them after the claim is made. (Application to commissioner held constituted a claim for compensation.)

(c) Workmen's Compensation Act (1923), Ss. 3 (5) (a) and 10 (1)—Construction of S. 10(1) —Claim even if rejected in limine is claim instituted within S. 3 (5) (a).

The whole of S. 10 (1) indicates that the claim for compensation is of the nature of a plaint without which no proceedings for the recovery of compensation are maintainable; so that unless there is a formal claim for compensation, the commissioner cannot make any enquiries or conduct any proceedings. A claim even if rejected in limine by the commissioner must be regarded as a claim instituted before the commissioner within the meaning of S. 3 (5) (a).

[P 118*f*, g]

(d) Workmen's Compensation Act (1923), S. 10 (1) — Commissioner condoning delay and rejecting claim as barred without going into merits—Rejection is illegal.

The rejection of a claim petition by the commissioner, after condoning the delay in filing the same, on the ground of its being time barred, without giving any decision on the merits of the petition, is illegal.

Judgment.—On 13th August 1933 the appellant met with a serious accident in the respondents' mill, his leg being fractured by the falling of a beam on it. The employers (the respondents) assured him that they would look after him, pay his expenses while he was in the hospital, maintain him, re-employ him when he was discharged from the hospital, and see that he was looked after for the rest of his life. On the strength of this assurance he was persuaded to file a leave application, in which he said falsely that he fell into a channel and so wanted some leave. After his discharge from the hospital sometime in November, he was re-entertained. On 1st March 1934 he was dismissed from service, apparently because he was not able on account of his injury to perform his duties properly. Lawyer's notices were sent to the employers, who denied that the mill was open on the day of the accident and asserted that the appellant had been on leave. As no satisfactory reply was forthcoming, an application was made before the Labour Commissioner on 27th March 1934. Although this was beyond six months from the date of the accident, the application was entertained and treated as a claim for compensation, and some enquiry seems to have been made. On 23rd April 1934 the commissioner asked the appellant to furnish certain particulars and to furnish a medical certificate. Before that date, the Inspector of Factories, to whom the application for compensation was referred, received a letter from the respondents asserting that the day on which the accident was alleged to have taken place was a Sunday and that the mill was not open on that day. They also referred to the leave application of the appellant in support of their contention. On 12th May 1934 the commissioner passed an order which seems to me very discreditable. Instead of dealing with the application on its merits after having apparently condoned the delay in filing the application, he dismissed the application on the technical ground that it was barred by time under S. 10 (1), Workmen's Compensation Act. Although the unfortunate appellant had engaged lawyers in connexion with this matter with regard to sending notices and so on, he was not advised to take this matter to the High Court, under S. 30 of the Act. Instead, he filed the present suit on 1st August 1934 before the District Munsif, Tinnevelly, for compensation and for damages for negligence. That suit has been dismissed on the ground that it is barred by S. 3 (5), Workmen's Compensation Act, and that decision was confirmed on appeal by the Subordinate Judge. It is first contended that if the letter to the commissioner was an application for compensation, it was not barred by time under S. 10 (1). Section 10 (1) reads :

> No proceedings for the recovery of compensation shall be maintainable before a commissioner unless notice of the accident has been given, in the manner hereinafter provided as soon as practicable after the happening thereof and before the workman has voluntarily left the employment in which he was injured, and unless the claim for compensation with respect to such accident has been instituted within six months of the occurrence of the accident . . .

There are certain provisos to this section which enable the commissioner to dispense with some of these limitations. It is contended that the 'claim for compensation' referred to in S. 10 (1) means a claim made of the employers and not a formal claim made before the commissioner. The section speaks of a claim being instituted. "Instituted" implies the formal making of a claim before some tribunal and is not the same as making a claim of the employer. Moreover, the words 'claim' and 'instituted' are referred to not only in S. 10 (1). Even proviso 3 to S. 10 (1), gives a clear indication of the meaning of the word 'claim' for it runs :

> Provided further that the commissioner may admit and decide any claim to compensation in any case notwithstanding that the notice has not been given or the claim has not been instituted in due time as provided in this sub-section (1) . . .

The word 'claim' must have the same meaning throughout and must be the claim made to the commissioner. In S. 3 (5) (a) it is clear that the instituting of the claim for compensation is before the commissioner, and it is difficult to believe that the instituting of the claim referred to in S. 3 (5) (a) is not the same instituting of the claim as is referred to in S. 10 (1). Section 22, which deals with the procedure to be adopted during the enquiry of the claim, refers to the 'claim,' and the 'claim' there clearly relates to a claim made before the commissioner. This was also the view of two learned Judges of the Patna High Court in 17 Pat 658.[1] There is, however, a decision of the Calcutta High Court to the contrary in 61 Cal 508.[2] The reasons given by the learned Judges were : (1) the Indian Legislature intended to follow the English Act and (2) the wording of S. 22, to which I have referred. With regard to the first point, with great deference to the learned Judges, it seems to me very unsafe to presume that the Indian Legislature knew and intended to adopt the interpretation put by the English Courts upon the corresponding English Act. I should have thought that there was little reason to suppose that the Indian Legislature had studied the corresponding English Act and wished to adopt it. No doubt a drafter may closely follow an English original, but I do not think there is any reason for assuming that the Legislature had a similar desire. Moreover, the Indian Act departs in many respects from the English Act and the Legislature have substituted for the word 'make' in the English Act the word 'instituted,' which has a very much more formal meaning and suggests the making of a claim before some tribunal. It has been pointed out by the learned advocate for the respondents that the Legislature has now amended the wording of S. 22 (1) because the Calcutta High Court had given to the section a meaning not intended by the Legislature. The second reason given by the Calcutta High Court, to use the words of the learned Chief Justice in 61 Cal 508,[2] is this :

> Section 22 relates to the initiation of proceedings before a commissioner and refers to an "application for the settlement of any matter by a commissioner" and prescribes certain particulars which are to be contained in the application, and among them, "in the case of a claim for compensation against an employer" certain details are to be given. I should find it difficult to hold that the words at the head of the section, "an application for the settlement of any matter by a commissioner" and the reference to a 'claim to compensation against an employer' both refer to exactly the same thing, namely that by which proceedings are initiated before the commissioner.

1. ('39) 26 A I R 1939 Pat 181 : 181 I C 450 : 17 Pat 658, Abdul Matin v. Bidesi Bagwan.
2. ('34) 21 A I R 1934 Cal 460 : 149 I C 169 : 61 Cal 508 : 38 C W N 613 (S B), Abdul Karim v. Eastern Bengal Railway.

This is no doubt a weighty argument, but the learned advocate for the respondents points out that S. 22 does not deal only with claims for compensation. This is indicated by the fact that in S. 22 (2) (b) special reference is made to the form of application where it amounts to a claim for compensation against an employer, certain particulars being required in addition to those to be furnished in other applications for the settlement of any matter by a commissioner. This question does not however directly arise for decision here because, unfortunately for the appellant, he did not carry the matter to the High Court and contend that the order of the commissioner was wrong. Whether the decision of the commissioner was right or not, that decision is now final, and the only question here is whether a claim has been filed at all. It is argued that EX. L, which is the claim on which the commissioner acted, is a very loosely worded document and does not contain by any means all the particulars that are required by S. 22; nor does it contain the certificate referred to in R. 19 (2) of the Rules framed under the Act. A form (FORM F) under R. 19 has been prescribed, but this form the commissioner, if he thinks fit, may get the applicant to fill up and sign after the claim is made. It is no doubt true that several of the particulars required by S. 22 are not to be found in EX. L, the claim; but there can be no doubt, reading EX. L as a whole, that it was intended to be a claim for compensation. It would not have been the intention of the Legislature that a claim could not be entertained or enquired into, or that no compensation should be granted, unless the application were in strict form. If those particulars and that certificate were necessary, the commissioner could have obtained them; but he did not in fact do so, presumably because he did not think them necessary. In para. 4 of EX. L the appellant says :

> The mill agent has, the petitioner now understands, got such a letter (referring to the leave application) signed by the petitioner in order to avoid the penalties for negligence giving rise to injuries to the petitioner in the course of employment and to escape giving compensation to the petitioner.

The appellant at the end of his petition does not directly ask for compensation, but prays that the commissioner will be pleased 'to enquire into the matter and render justice.' This is the conventional ending of a petition; but the petitioner added, "N. B.— It is prayed that notice of the date of enquiry be given to the petitioner." He seems to have had in view the enquiry that is to take place in an ordinary claim for compensation. The application was treated as a claim for compensation by the commissioner. It was admitted and the commissioner made enquiries, called for particulars from the appellant in connection with his claim for compensation; and the appellant furnished those particulars. It is impossible to construe EX. L as anything but an application for a claim for compensation. If EX. L was a claim for compensation before the commissioner, then it is clear that the suit is barred by S. 3 (5) of the Act. It has been contended that a claim that has been rejected in limine would not be a claim instituted before the commissioner within the meaning of S. 3 (5) (a). The wording of S. 10 (1) : is referred to in support of that argument. The whole of S. 10 (1) however indicates that the claim for compensation is of the nature of a plaint without which no proceedings for the recovery of compensation are maintainable; so that the words relied on only mean that unless there is a formal claim for compensation, the commissioner cannot make any enquiries or conduct any proceedings. In the present case, proceedings did however take place and the claim for compensation was instituted and was admitted by the commissioner. Section 3 (5) (a) therefore clearly applies, and the lower Courts were right in holding that the suit was barred.

The appellant has suffered very greatly at the hands of the Labour Commissioner, who should have dealt with his application in accordance with the spirit as well as the letter of the Act. Although this question has not been argued, it seems to me that the commissioner acted illegally in rejecting the application after condoning the delay, without giving any decision on the merits of the application. The appellant was deceived by the respondents, who lulled him into a sense of security by promising to give him employment and to look after him, which security led him to prefer his claim before the commissioner out of time. This behaviour of the respondents was disgraceful. Nothing can be done for the appellant in this appeal; but the respondents have represented through their learned advocate that they do not wish to take advantage of the dismissal of this appeal by refusing relief to the appellant.

They promise to give compensation to him and I hope, for the sake of their reputation as employers, that they will do so. The respondents do not press for their costs. The appeal is dismissed without any order as to costs. The appellant will have to pay the court-fee due to Government.

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), S. 19—Decree-holder given leave to bid and set off but sale not confirmed—Decree is not satisfied and application under S. 19 can be filed.

Where, in execution of a decree, a sale is held and the decree-holder with leave of Court to bid and set off, purchases the property, the decree cannot be regarded as satisfied until the sale has been confirmed. Therefore, before confirmation of the sale, an application by the judgment-debtor under S. 19, Agriculturists Relief Act, lies as the decree is subsisting : 33 Bom 311 ; ('19) 6 A I R 1919 All 253 and ('33) 20 A I R 1933 P C 101, Rel. on.

Advocate General, C. A. Seshagiri Sastri and K. S. Desikan — for Appellants.

K. Rajah Ayyar and K. S. Rajagopalachari— for Respondent.

Wadsworth J. — These three matters all arise out of the same order which raises a question under S. 19, Madras Act, 4 of 1938. C. M. A. No. 325 and C. R. P. No. 1346 are alternative proceedings brought by defendant 1. C. M. A. No. 428 is an appeal against the same decision by the other defendants in the case. There was a decree passed on 31st January 1934 for a sum of Rs. 10,000, odd by the Tanjore Subordinate Judge's Court. In execution of that decree, a sale was held under the orders of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam on 26th August 1937 and the property was purchased by the decree-holder for Rs. 11,328, which was a little more than the amount due under the execution petition. He was given leave to bid and set off, so that there was no actual payment of cash. Within one month of the sale, an application was filed by the defendants under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., to set aside the sale on the ground of irregularity, etc. When that application was still pending, Madras Act, 4 of 1938 came into force and on 20th June 1938 applications were filed by the judgment-debtors to scale down the decree. These applications were rejected by the Court below on the ground that there was no subsisting decree in view of the fact that the purchaser was the decree-holder and had been allowed to bid and set off.

After the proceedings in this Court began, there was a consent order whereby the application under O. 21, R. 90, was terminated on conditions providing for the cancellation of the sale on payment of an amount which will depend on this Court's orders in the present proceedings. We have, therefore, to proceed with the matter as it stood when the applications under S. 19 were filed, at which time a sale had been held but its confirmation was held up owing to the application to set aside the sale.

It has been argued that by reason of O. 21, R. 72, Civil P. C., there is an immediate satisfaction of the decree in a case where the decree-holder has been given leave to set off the purchase money against his decree. This is a contention which it is difficult to maintain not only by reason of decisions to the contrary, but also in view of the provisions of R. 89 which enable the judgment-debtor to get such a sale set aside on payment of the amount due together with the solatium to the purchaser. It has not been contended that R. 89 does not apply to a sale to a decree-holder, and in such a case, it seems to follow that the decree cannot be regarded as satisfied so long as the judgment-debtor can proceed under R. 89. There are, moreover, decisions which to our minds show conclusively that the decree is not satisfied in such a case as this until the sale has been confirmed; for example, 33 Bom 311,[1] 41 ALL 526[2] and the decision of the Privy Council in 12 Pat 305,[3] which, though it relates to an income-tax matter, decide quite clearly on the basis of the Civil Procedure Code that the date on which the proceeds of the sale are received in such a case by the decree-holder is the date of the confirmation and not the date of the sale. In the face of these authorities, it is not very profitable to refer to cases of rateable distribution in which the Court is concerned merely with the date of the receipt of the assets by the Court and not the date of the satisfaction of the decree. We are of opinion that on the facts of the present case it must be held that at the time when the applications under S. 19 were filed, the decree was still unsatisfied and the applicants were entitled as judgment-debtors to ask that the decree be scaled down under the Act. We, therefore, allow the appeals and the revision petition, set aside the lower Court's order and remand the applications for disposal in the light of this judgment. M. Achuthan Nayar and another — Respondents.

Civil Revn. Petns. Nos. 1638 and 1835 of 1939, Decided on 20th March 1941, to revise order of District Munsif, Ottapalam, D/- 9th March 1939.

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), S. 3 (ii), Proviso D— For purposes of S. 3 (ii), Proviso (D) total payments of land revenue by jenmi must be taken into consideration.

In S. 3 (ii), Proviso (D) the words, "is a jenmi under Malabar Tenancy Act, 1929, who pays any sum exceeding Rs. 500 as land revenue" do not refer only to the land revenue paid by the jenmi on his jenmam land but include land revenue paid by the jenmi in respect of other lands held on other tenures. Consequently, for the purpose of proviso (D) to S. 3 (ii) the total payments of land revenue paid by the jenmi not only in respect of his jenmam land but also in respect of ryotwari land or in respect of land held by him under kanom must be taken into consideration : ('41) 28 A I R 1941 Mad 305, Rel. on. [P 120*e*, f, h]

Order. — Each of these petitions raises a question as to the effect of proviso (D) to S. 3 (ii) of Madras Act, 4 of 1938. The applicant whose case is dealt with in C. R. P. NO. 1638 of 1939, is a jenmi who paid as jenmi just over Rs. 400 land revenue. But he also paid a similar sum as a kanomdar under contracts whereby the obligation to pay land revenue was undertaken by him. It does not appear that there had been any registration under S. 14, Malabar Land Registration Act, so as to make this obligation to pay the land revenue statutory in respect of the kanom land. The applicant in the case covered by C. R. P. NO. 1835 of 1939 is a jenmi who paid as a jenmi Rs. 430, but also was liable to ryotwari assessment amounting to about Rs. 300. The question is whether in proviso (D) the words, "is a jenmi under Malabar Tenancy Act, 1929, who pays any sum exceeding Rs. 500 as land revenue" should be taken to refer only to the land revenue paid by the jenmi on his jenmam land and not to include land revenue paid by the jenmi in respect of other lands held on other tenures. So far as C. R. P. NO. 1835 is concerned, the matter is covered by a decision of King J., in (1940) 2 M L J 934,[1] where the learned Judge held that for the purpose of proviso (D) the total payments of land revenue paid by the jenmi not only in respect of his jenmam land but also in respect of ryotwari land, must be taken into consideration.

The position in C. R. P. NO. 1638 is rather different, for the lands in respect of which the appellant pays land revenue under the kanom contract are lands in respect of which some other jenmi is under a liability to the Government to pay land revenue, and it would follow if the same principle is to be applied that the land revenue payable by the kanomdar who happens also to be a jenmi might disqualify both him and his own jenmi from the benefits of the Act. But there is no particular reason why if the criterion laid down in the Act is based purely on the amount of land revenue paid, two persons each liable for the same land revenue should not be equally disqualified by the payment of that land revenue to enjoy the benefits of the Act. It is true that in respect of the kanom lands, the tenant, in the absence of registration, is not under a statutory liability to pay the land revenue to the Government. But when he makes the payment he does so by virtue of the contract not merely as an agent of his mortgagor but under his contractual obligations and to protect his own interests as well as that of the mortgagor. It cannot be held that one who pays land revenue under a kanom deed does not pay land revenue for himself merely because the payment enures for the benefit of his jenmi. Turning to the words of proviso (D), we find with reference to the jenmi no such qualifying words as are found with reference to the other classes of landholders enumerated. The clause does not restrict the disqualification of a jenmi by saying that a person who pays as a jenmi Rs. 500 is disqualified, or a person who pays in respect of his jenmam land Rs. 500 is disqualified. The plain words of the proviso apply to any jenmi who pays more than Rs. 500 as land revenue.

I do not think we are entitled to speculate as to the possible intention of the Legislature to make the criterion not payment of land revenue, but payment of land revenue in the capacity of a jenmi. The words as they stand are plain, and even if there were an ambiguity, on the principle that ambiguities in this measure are to be solved in favour of the person expropriated and not in favour of the expropriator, the decision would have to be such as to give the widest range to the exception contained in that proviso. I am therefore of opinion that the decision of King J., is correct and that the same principle covers also the case of the jenmi who pays land revenue exceeding Rs. 500 partly in respect of his jenmam land and partly in respect of land held under kanom. Both the revision petitions are allowed with costs in both Courts and the orders of the Courts below are set aside.

CHANDRASEKHARA AYYAR J.

Mangineddi Varadia Chetty — Appellant

v.

Province of Madras represented by District Collector, Chittoor — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 342 of 1939, Decided on 19th August 1941, against decree of Dist. Court, Chittoor, in A. S. No. 70 of 1938.

Madras Revenue Board's Standing Orders, O. 15, sub-r. (18) — Communal land not to be granted on darkhast — Tahsildar granting it believing that it was not required for communal purposes — Collector can cancel grant under revisional powers under O. 15, sub-rule (18)— Civil Court cannot review orders of Revenue Officers acting within scope of their authority even if wrong.

Communal land or land required for communal purposes cannot be granted on darkhast. If the Tahsildar grants the same on darkhast believing that it was not required for communal purposes, while really it was, it would be a case of the order being passed under a mistake of fact, and the Collector cannot be said to have exceeded his powers in revision under O. 15, sub-rule (18) in cancelling the assignment on the ground that the land was in fact required for communal purposes. Civil Courts have clearly no jurisdiction in such matters and the orders of the Revenue Officers acting within the scope of their authority and jurisdiction cannot be reviewed by the civil Courts, even though the orders may be wrong, or can be shown to be wrong : 26 Mad 268, Rel. on. (P 121*g,h* ; P 122*a*) N. C. Vijayaraghavachariar — for Appellant.

Government Pleader — for Respondent.

Judgment. — The plaintiff challenges the act of the Collector of Chittoor cancelling a darkhast assignment made in his favour by the Tahsildar. He says that the cancellation was illegal and ultra vires of the powers of the Collector. Having lost in both the Courts below, he has preferred this second appeal. The contention advanced for him is that the revisional power vested in the Collector under Board's standing Order 15, sub-r. (18) can be exercised by him only if certain conditions therein specified are satisfied but that in this case he exceeded his revisional jurisdiction because no such conditions were satisfied as a matter of fact. After the tahsildar had granted the land on darkhast to the appellant, a petition is said to have been filed by some of the villagers objecting to the assignment and stating that the land was required for communal purposes. The Revenue Divisional Officer made a local inspection and found the objection to be well-founded. The Collector took the report of the Revenue Divisional Officer under consideration and apparently gave notice to the appellant asking him to show cause why the darkhast should not be cancelled, for the order speaks of a petition dated 20th January 1937 from the appellant which is later than the report of the Revenue Divisional Officer. He also heard the appellant's pleader and ultimately made the order complained against which is in these terms :

> On inspection the Revenue Divisional Officer, Chittoor, has found the assignment of Survey No. 9/1 Diguvamasapella village in Chittoor Taluk objectionable as it is required for communal purposes. The assignment is therefore cancelled.

In other words, he accepted the Revenue Divisional Officer's report and acted on it, being satisfied that the land was required for such purposes. Communal land or land required for communal purposes cannot be granted on darkhast. Such a grant made by the tahsildar can certainly be described as inequitable or exceeding the powers of the tahsildar. If the tahsildar believed that it was not required for communal purposes while really it was, it would be a case of the order being passed under a mistake of fact. These are some of the conditions specified in sub-r. (18) of standing Order 15; and it is futile to say that the Collector exceeded his powers in revision in cancelling this assignment for the reasons mentioned by him. Civil Courts have clearly no jurisdiction in such matters and the orders of the revenue officers acting within the scope of their authority and jurisdiction cannot be reviewed by civil Courts, even though the orders may be wrong, or can b shown to be wrong. This was laid down even in 26 Mad 268,[1] which is frequently relied on by parties in the position of the present plaintiff. The view taken in 26 Mad 268[1] was really responsible for the change in the Board's standing orders conferring revisional jurisdiction on the Collector. The second appeal is dismissed with costs. (Leave to appeal is refused.)

SOMAYYA J.

Thekke Mannengath Ittichiri alias Ammu Poduvalssiar — Appellant

v.

Vengalur Naduvilepat Poozhi Kunnath Karnavan Appu Menon and others — Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 309 of 1938, Decided on 18th July 1941, against decree of Sub-Judge, Ottapalam, in A. S. No. 35 of 1936.

(a) Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act (2 of 1927), S. 76 — S. 76 applies to voluntary transfers — It does not apply to compulsory renewal under S. 19 and Ss. 22 to 25, Malabar Tenancy Act.

Section 76 applies to voluntary transfers by the trustees or persons in charge of public religious institution. The bar as to the previous sanction of the Religious Endowments Board or the committee of the temple enacted in S. 76, Madras Act, 2 of 1927, cannot apply to the case of a compulsory renewal under S. 19 and Ss. 22 to 25, Malabar Tenancy Act, or to the case of a forced sale in execution of a money decree against the temple. [P 123 c,e]

(b) Malabar Tenancy Act (14 of 1930), Ss. 22 and 25 — Renewal application by kanomdar under S. 22—Both jenmi and melkanom-holder made parties — Court granting renewal — Renewal is binding on melkanom-holder.

Under S. 25 it is the Court that grants the renewal, which means that the Court does it on behalf of the person who is bound to grant the renewal. Where in an application for renewal by the konamdar both the jenmi and the melkanom-holder that is the immediate landlord are made parties a renewal granted by the Court is binding on the melkanom-holder under S. 25(3) for a period of 12 years so as to preclude him from suing for redemption during that period. [P 123 g,h; P 124*a*]

(c) Malabar Tenancy Act (14 of 1930), Ss. 20 and 22 — Redemption suit by melkanom-holder against kanomdar — Kanomdar pleading suit to be incompetent by reason of renewal under S. 22 — Further claim that even if suit was barred, plaintiff as melkanom-holder was entitled to claim certain arrears from kanomdar held could not be allowed to be raised for first time in second appeal.

Where in a redemption suit against the kanomdar by the melkanomdar, the kanomdar pleads that the suit was incompetent by reason of a renewal obtained by him under S. 22, the plaintiff cannot be allowed to set up a further claim, that even if the suit was barred he as melkanomdar was entitled to claim certain arrears of rent, for the first time in second appeal. [P 124*d,e*]

D. A. Krishna Variar and Ravi Varma — for Appellant.

P. Govinda Menon and D. H. Nambudiripad — for Respondents.

Judgment. — The appellant brought the suit out of which this appeal arises for redemption of a kanom and for other reliefs. Defendant 1 is the kanomdar whose mortgage was sought to be redeemed. He died after the action and his legal representative is respondent 1 in this appeal. The property in suit is trust property and defendants 2 and 9 in the action were the urallars or the trustees of the devasvom. The main defence is that in proceedings under the Malabar Tenancy Act defendant 1 got a renewal under S. 25 of the Act, that the renewal which he obtained was still subsisting and that therefore the suit for redemption was premature. Both the lower Courts upheld this contention and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. Hence this appeal.

It appears that the jenmis, that is defendants 2 to 9 as representing the devasvom of which they are the urallars, filed O. S. No. 556 of 1931 for redemption of the mortgages of both the present plaintiff and of the present defendant 1. In that suit the present plaintiff, the melcharthdar, was defendant 2 and present defendant 1 was defendant 3. The present defendant 1 filed an application under S. 22, Malabar Tenancy Act, asking for a renewal of his kanom. Notice was given to the other parties and the Court registered this application as an independent application, I. A. No. 884 of 1932, and passed an order, EX. 4, on 5th January 1934 upholding the applicant's right to obtain a renewal. Time was granted for the payment of certain monies which had to be paid under S. 24 of the Act and the matter was adjourned to the 26th of that month. The money was paid a few days beyond the time fixed but the Court evidently excused that delay and accepted the deposit made by the applicant and passed an order under S. 25 directing the execution of a renewal deed, the effect of which under sub-s. (3) of S. 25 is that the tenant shall be entitled to enjoy the holding for 12 years. In this case the Court directed that the renewal should operate for a period of 12 years from the 1st of Vrichigam 1103 which corresponds to 16th November 1927. If this order is binding on the plaintiff it is clear that the renewal in favour of defendant 1 was operative till 1939 at any rate, and the present suit filed in 1931 is liable to be dismissed.

Mr. Krishna Variar, the learned advocate for the appellant, urges two objections against the validity of the proceedings in O. S. No. 556 of 1931 just mentioned. The chief objection is that a renewal which under S. 25, Malabar Tenancy Act, is to operate for 12 years is either a mortgage or a lease for over five years and that therefore it is bad under S. 76, Hindu Religious Endowments Act, 2 of 1927. That section provides :

> No exchange, sale or mortgage and no lease for a term exceeding five years of any immoveable property belonging to any math or temple shall be valid or operative unless it is necessary or beneficial to the math or temple and is sanctioned by the Board in the case of maths and excepted temples and by the committee in the case of other temples.

So the point urged is that, as the suit property is property belonging to a public temple and is therefore governed by S. 76, Hindu Religious Endowments Act, 2 of 1927, a renewal which is a lease for a term exceeding five years or a mortgage is invalid because admittedly the sanction of the Board or of the temple committee was not sought or obtained in this case. The wording of S. 76 appears to my mind to apply to voluntary transfers by the trustees or persons in charge of public religious institution. It cannot, for instance, apply to the case of a forced sale in execution of a money decree against the temple. In the present case, S. 17, Malabar Tenancy Act, confers a right upon the kanomdar to call upon his immediate landlord for a renewal for 12 years on conditions and the landlord is bound to grant such a renewal. The section says :

> A kanomdar shall on the expiry of the kanom under which he holds be entitled to claim and his immediate landlord shall be bound to grant a renewal enuring for a period of 12 years . . . .

If the jenmi or the immediate landlord does not grant the renewal which he is bound to do under S. 17, the kanomdar is given the right of applying to the Court under S. 22 of the Act, and on receipt of that application the Court calls upon the landlord to state in writing what objections he has. Under S. 24 the Court determines the amount payable as renewal fee and under cl. (2) of that section it makes an order for deposit within a time to be fixed in the said order, of the amount directed to be paid and also of all arrears as interest thereupon at the contract rate. Under S. 25, if the amount ordered under S. 24 is deposited, then the Court has to execute a renewal deed containing such terms as it determines to be the terms of the expiring transaction and as are in accordance with law. It is obvious that in such a case the immediate landlord or the jenmi has no option but to grant a renewal ; else he will be mulcted with costs as provided by S. 25 (2) (iii). It therefore appears to me that the bar enacted in S. 76, Madras Act 2 of 1927, cannot apply to the case of a compulsory renewal under S. 19 and Ss. 22 to 25, Malabar Tenancy Act.

There are some other minor points raised in this connexion that the person from whom the renewal was to be obtained was the immediate landlord and not the original landlord. It is said that the present plaintiff who had obtained a melcharth was the immediate landlord. In the present case, in the application under S. 22, both the original jenmi, that is the temple represented by its trustees, and the present plaintiff, the melcharthdar, were all made parties and defendant 1 asked for a renewal in accordance with the provisions of the Act. In fact para. 4 of EX. P, the petition filed under S. 22, refers to the melkanom demise granted in favour of the present plaintiff. The present plaintiff was respondent 3 in that application. Paragraph 12 stated that respondent 3 was impleaded as she was the melkanom holder and prayer (b) in that application is "directing that, on the petitioner paying the fees by the time fixed, a renewed demise be executed to him and got registered by the Court in accordance with law on the terms of the prior demise;" and ultimately the demise was actually executed by the Court. Respondent 3 having been made a party and the order under S. 25 made in her presence she is bound by the order and she is not entitled to go behind that order now. If an order was not made in her favour allowing her to draw the amount deposited by the present defendant 1 but the Court allowed the jenmi to take it away, that is a matter with which we are not now concerned. What is important is that in a proceeding under S. 22 to which the present plaintiff was also a party a request was made that a proper renewal should be executed in accordance with law and under S. 25 it is the Court that grants the renewal, which means that the Court does it on behalf of the person who is bound to grant the renewal. If, as Mr. Variar contends, the present plaintiff is the person who was entitled to grant the renewal, then the Court, in executing the renewal under S. 25 of the Act, must be taken to have done so on behalf of the present plaintiff. So far as the grantee, defendant 1, is concerned there is a valid renewal obtained in the presence of the plaintiff. The suit for redemption therefore fails. In the view taken by me on this question the other points discussed by the lower appellate Court become immaterial.

Mr. Variar then says that his clients paid certain arrears of rent due on the property when his client took the melcharth and that his client is entitled to all the rent that was unpaid. He says that the melcharth in his favour operates at least as an assignment of a right to recover rent payable by defendant 1, that defendant 1 did not pay the rents for certain years and that his clients should be given a decree for that amount. This right is not part of the redemption which the plaintiff sought in the present suit. It is a right which is now put forward as an alternative or additional right, that is, even if the renewal in favour of defendant 1 is right and therefore a suit for redemption does not lie, still, as the assignee of the right to collect certain rents, the plaintiff is entitled to claim those arrears in the suit. I do not find this question mooted in the Court below. The lower appellate Court does not say anything about it. In fact when the appeal examiners pointed out that court-fee had to be paid on the arrears of rent that was claimed by the plaintiff, the plaintiff took up the stand that there was only one claim, namely redemption, and that the claim for arrears of rent and for accounts were part of the redemption right. It is not admitted on the other side that there were any arrears unpaid. In fact, Mr. Govinda Menon says that his client paid up all the arrears which were payable in respect of this holding, which, he points out, is a condition precedent for his obtaining the renewal. On the other hand, Mr. Variar says that what the jenmi claimed in the other suit was the arrear outstanding after giving credit to the amount paid by the present plaintiff and that the present plaintiff was therefore entitled to recover from defendant 1 what he, defendant 1, did not pay to the jenmi. These are questions of fact which ought to have been investigated and would have been investigated if a proper claim had been made for such arrears. The claim made is one for arrears and right through it was treated as one for redemption and when the appeal examiners pointed out that it was more than a suit for redemption the position was contested and the Court agreed with the plaintiff in saying that it is only a suit for redemption. In these circumstances I do not think it right to allow the plaintiff to advance this claim at this stage. If she has any such right, she is of course entitled to claim the same in a separate suit. This appeal is therefore dismissed with costs, one set to be divided among all the respondents. Leave to appeal is refused.

P. Satyanarayana Rao — for Appellant.

P. Somasundaram and P. Suryanarayana — for Respondent.

Judgment. — This is an appeal by the defendant against a decree directing his ejectment from the suit property and the delivery thereof to the respondent. The appellant and the respondent are two out of five brothers who originally formed a joint f Hindu family. Two of the brothers separated in June 1930, and the appellant and the respondent and one Subba Rao continued joint till 20th May 1932 on which date the properties held by them jointly till then were divided between them under the document marked as EX. A. The respondent's case was that the property in suit was among the properties allotted to his share under this document and that the appellant unlawfully trespassed upon it shortly before the suit. The document which is described as "list of shares of immovable property equally divided on 20th May 1932 among these three g individuals, viz., etc.," recites :

We, viz., our five brothers effected partition previously, i. e., on 16th June 1930 and we were keeping our three shares jointly up till now and managing the same. We have now mixed the property pertaining to our three shares together and have again effected division of the same with reference to good and bad qualities through mediators as follows.

Then follow the lists of properties allotted to each sharer who has signed at the end of his list. A "remark" at the end provides that each of us should with full rights, enjoy the trees and fruit trees which are in his lands, that each should pay circar taxes for the lands pertaining to (his) respective shares and that each should enjoy his respective share with rights of alienation h by way of gift and sale, and the document as a whole is signed by all the three brothers and attested by two witnesses and the writer. It is thus clear that the document purports to effect a partition of the properties comprised therein between the three brothers and it is admitted by the appellant's own witnesses that the allotment under it was intended to be final. It was argued for the appellant that this document (EX. A) not having been registered, was inadmissible to prove the allotment of the suit property to the respondent, and that as the latter based his title only on Exhibit A, his suit was bound to fail.

a The Court below has repelled this contention on two grounds. First, it has held relying upon the oral evidence in the case that it was intended that there should be another comprehensive partition deed executed subsequently when the moveables and outstandings belonging to the family were to be divided, incorporating therein the allotment of the immovable properties made under EX. A, and that therefore the partition under EX. A could not be treated as a final partition and did not require registration. This view cannot be accepted, for, as already observed, it is not disputed that the allotment of the immovable properties under b EX. A was intended to be final. The mere fact that the parties contemplated the execution of a more comprehensive partition deed later on does not make EX. A any the less operative to create interests in the immovable properties comprised therein. It cannot therefore be said that EX. A does not require registration. It clearly falls within S. 17, Registration Act, and being unregistered, it must be held to be inadmissible in evidence.

It is, however, argued by Mr. Somasundaram for the respondent that even if this partition deed is put aside as inadmissible c in evidence, it is still open to the Court to take into consideration the subsequent conduct of the parties, and as both the Courts have found that the respondent was in exclusive possession for about two years after the partition till the appellant trespassed upon the suit property in 1934, the decision of the Court below can be supported on the ground of the respondent's possessory title. Mr. Somasundaram placed reliance upon a decision of Ramesam J., in A I R 1927 Mad 830,[1] which to some extent appears to support his contention. That was a case where the plaintiff sued to recover certain properties alleging that her deceased husband and his d brothers divided certain properties in 1910, that in such division the properties claimed fell to her husband's share and were enjoyed by him till 1918 when he died and that her husband's brothers thereupon trespassed upon those properties. The learned Judge held that the partition of 1910 being unregistered was not admissible in evidence and could not therefore be relied on to show what properties fell to the share of the plaintiff's husband. The learned Judge, however, proceeded to hold that this did not prevent the Court from finding that the properties there in question were enjoyed by e the plaintiff's deceased husband as his separate properties at the time of his death, and passing a decree in favour of the plaintiff on the strength of such possessory title which had devolved on her. With due respect, I find it difficult to follow this reasoning. If the partition deed could be used as evidence of only a division in status and could not be relied on to show that the properties there in question were allotted to the share of the plaintiff's husband as held by the learned Judge, the position would be that the plaintiff's husband and his brothers were tenants in common of the family properties. As pointed out in 54 Mad 27[2] at p. 53 f the finding that the partition deed was inadmissible to show what property fell to each cosharer must result in the conclusion that each cosharer enjoyed an undivided share in each item of the properties. In such circumstances, even if one cosharer happened to be in sole enjoyment of a particular piece of property, he could not, as it seems to me, sue in ejectment if another co-owner disturbed such enjoyment. He could only bring a suit for partition of all the properties owned in common or, according to some decisions, for joint possession with his co-owners. Mr. Somasundaram was unable to g cite any authority binding on me holding that a possessory title, that is to say, mere previous possession can be made the basis of a decree in ejectment against co-owners. I have to hold therefore that the appellant being unable to establish his exclusive title to the property in suit on the basis of its allotment to his share at a valid partition, is not entitled to the relief claimed by him in the suit.

The next ground relied on by the lower Court in support of the conclusion that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for possession is that the doctrine of part performance h is applicable to the circumstances of the case, as the appellant was found to have been in possession of the property in pursuance of the partition till the respondent disturbed such possession in 1934, and reliance was placed on certain decisions which were, however, cases decided before the Transfer of Property Amendment Act of 1929. The limits of the application of the doctrine of part performance have now been defined in S. 53A of the Act and it is plain that that provision only entitles a person in possession a to invoke the doctrine as a shield to protect such possession if the conditions therein referred to are satisfied and does not enable a person who has lost possession to sue for recovery of it. Mr. Somasundaram frankly admitted that he could not invoke that docrine in the circumstances of this case. In the result, the second appeal is allowed and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed with costs throughout. Leave to appeal is granted.

Secretary of State represented by Collector of Vizagapatam — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 1052 of 1938, Decided on 8th August 1941, against decree of Sub-Judge, Chicacole, in A. S. No. 8 of 1937.

Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act (3 of 1895), Ss. 7, 23—Suit by dismissed village headman that order of dismissal is ultra vires on ground that rules had not been followed does not lie.

When a right is given by a special statute and a c remedy is provided for the violation of the right in that very statute, ordinarily the person whose right is violated is bound to follow the remedy provided in that Act. [P 128*d*]

A village headman who has been dismissed has under S. 23 of the Act a right of appeal to the District Collector and a further appeal to the Board of Revenue. Therefore, he has no right of separate suit in a civil Court that the order of dismissal is ultra vires on the ground that the rules have not been strictly followed : ('41) 28 AIR 1941 Mad 530 (FB), Rel. on. [P 128*c*, d, e]

K. S. Desikan — for Respondent.

Judgment. — The appellant brought the d suit out of which this second appeal arises for a declaration that the order of the Sub-Collector, Vizianagaram, dated 16th June 1926 dismissing him from the hereditary office of village headman of Veeraghattam is ultra vires and illegal. Both the lower Courts dismissed the suit holding that the order of the Sub-Collector was not ultra vires of his powers. What happened in this case was that there were several complaints against the appellant, none of which was taken serious note of by the authorities. But when complaints persisted to pour in action was ultimately taken in the year 1926 and the Sub-Collector of the place asked the tahsildar to hold an inquiry and submit a report. The tahsildar examined certain witnesses, framed e some charges in addition to those that had been framed by the Sub-Collector and called upon the appellant to submit his explanation. He submitted an explanation on 3rd May 1926 and the matter was considered by the Sub-Collector who held that the appellant should not remain the village headman of the place. "The village Munsif," he says: was warned in December last not to identify himself with the factions in the village; and it is clear that he has paid no heed to the warning. Matters have no doubt reached a point when he could hardly do so if he wished. But it is quite clear that to have as a village Munsif a man who is the leader of a party in his village is prejudicial alike to the peace and good order of the village. I therefore f dismiss the village Munsif.

This order was taken on appeal under S. 23 of Madras Act, 3 of 1895. It was confirmed and a further appeal to the Board of Revenue proved infructuous. The present suit was filed in 1933 for a declaration that the order of the Sub-Collector was ultra vires for the reason that the Sub-Collector did not observe the procedure laid down by the Act before dismissing a village officer. Section 7 of the Act, so far as it is material to this case, runs thus:

> The Collector may, of his own motion or on complaint and after inquiry . . . dismiss the holder of any of the offices forming class (1) in S. 3, for g misconduct or for neglect of duty or incapacity or for non-residence in the village or for any other sufficient cause and shall make a record of his reasons for so doing in writing.

The expression "Collector" obviously includes "Sub-Collector." Under S. 23 of the Act, from every order passed by a Collector under S. 7, an appeal lies to the District Collector and thereafter to the Board of Revenue within three months from the order of the District Collector on appeal. In this case it cannot be said that the provisions of S. 7 were not complied with. There was an inquiry and the Sub-Collector has recorded what he considers to be a sufficient cause h why the appellant should not be allowed to continue as the village headman. What is said, however, is that the provisions of the Board's standing Order 147, R. 8 have not been followed. That rule provides that in the case of charges preferred against a village officer the witnesses shall be examined in the presence of the accused. In this case it is said that no evidence was recorded by the Sub-Collector and that the examination of the witnesses was not made in the presence of the village officer. This matter has not received the attention that it deserves in the Courts below. What appears is that the tahsildar examined certain witnesses on a requisition by the Sub-Collector. The Sub-Collector had framed certain charges; the tahsildar framed some more. After evidence was taken by the tahsildar, a notice was sent to the village officer to submit his explanation, which he did. The explanation was considered by the Sub-Collector, who deemed it insufficient and dismissed the village officer. The matter was taken up on appeal under S. 23 to the District Collector, who confirmed the order of the Sub-Collector. A further appeal to the Board of Revenue proved infructuous. It is said that Rr. 7 and 8 in the appendix to the Board's standing Order 147 printed on p. 873 of Vol. 3 of Board's standing orders were made under the power conferred by the Legislature under S. 20 of Madras Act, 3 of 1895, that therefore the rules made are a part of the Act itself and that a violation of the rules would be a violation of the provisions of the Act.

It is to be observed that there is no specific finding that the evidence which was recorded by the tahsildar was in the absence of the village officer, but it does appear that the inquiry was made by the tahsildar. This is said to be irregular for the reason that S. 7 and the rules made under S. 20 embodied in the standing orders contemplate an inquiry by the Sub-Collector himself. Assuming that the rules were not strictly followed, the question is whether there is a right of separate suit. The right of the village officer to have a charge framed and then to have the witnesses examined in his presence by the Collector and the right to cross-examine the witnesses are all given under S. 7 of the Act. If any of these rights conferred upon village officers under the Act is infringed, there is a special remedy provided by the Act, namely, the right of appeal under S. 23 to the District Collector and from an order passed by the District Collector a further appeal to the Board of Revenue, and it is said that the order of the Board of Revenue or of the District Collector, shall be final. When a right is given by a special statute and a remedy is provided for the violation of the right in that very statute, ordinarily the person whose right is violated is bound to follow the remedy provided in that Act. In this case S. 23 provides the remedy for the violation of this right and the plaintiff is bound to follow the remedy granted under S. 23, namely, the right of appeal. The plaintiff did prefer an appeal under S. 23 to the District Collector and a further appeal to the Board of Revenue and failed. The recent decision of a Full Bench of this Court in 54 M L W 7[1] makes the position clear. In the result the second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Leave to appeal is refused.

Second Appeal No. 805 of 1938, Decided on 5th August 1941, against decree of the Sub-Judge, Tinnevelly, in A. S. No. 6 of 1938.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 11—Land, and crops on that land are different subject-matters — Decision on claim as to latter is not res judicata as to former.

The subject-matter of the claim order, that is the crops on the land, is not identical with the land itself and hence a decision in a previous claim for crops under O. 21, R. 58 does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit with respect to the land : ('17) 4 AIR 1917 Cal 669, Rel. on. [P 129*b*]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 11 and O. 21, R. 63 — Decree-holder in claim suit is not representative of judgment-debtor.

A decree-holder can never, in a suit under O. 21, R. 63, be the representative of his judgment-debtors. In so far as the judgment-debtors take any interest in the case at all they have their own point of view to put forward, which almost invariably is in opposition to that of the decree-holder : ('37) 24 A I R 1937 Mad 651 and 15 Mad 477, Rel. on. [P 129*d*]

(c) Transfer of Property Act (1882 as amended in 1929), S. 53 — Claim under O. 21, R. 58 — Resistance by creditor is not in representative character.

A suit by a creditor to set aside an adverse claim order may in certain circumstances be in essence a suit under S. 53, but when one creditor merely resists a claim by a claimant his resistance in those summary proceedings cannot be deemed to be on behalf of all the creditors : 18 All 413, Foll. [P 129*e*, f]

Judgment. — This appeal arises out of a suit under O. 21, R. 63 to vacate an order on a claim petition. Plaintiff is the attaching creditor; defendant 1 is the claimant; defendants 2 to 4 are the judgment-debtors. Defendant 1's title is based upon two sale deeds, Ex. 4 by defendants 2 to 4 to one Muthukrishna Ayyar in 1927 and Ex. 1 by Muthukrishna Ayyar to himself in 1932. It has been held as a question of fact that defendant 1 was a bona fide purchaser for consideration under Ex. 1 and plaintiff's suit has been dismissed. In this appeal plaintiff contends that the issue between himself and defendant 1 is res judicata in his favour. This contention is based upon the following facts : One T. V. Krishna Ayyar, another creditor of defendants 2 to 4, attached in execution of his decree against them the crops standing on the land now in dispute. Muthukrishna Ayyar claimed under Ex. 4 to be the owner of the land and the crops. His claim was dismissed. Against that order of dismissal he filed no suit. Muthukrishna Ayyar was, of course, the predecessor-in-title of defendant 1, and it is now argued that plaintiff represents the interests of defendants 2 to 4. What therefore was res judicata between Muthukrishna Iyer and defendants 2 to 4 is res judicata between defendant 1 and plaintiff and defendant 1 cannot claim title to the subject-matter of this suit. The argument, as was thus put forward, was not considered by the learned Subordinate Judge, who has dismissed the plea of res judicata, on the ground that the subject-matter of the claim order, that is the crops on the land, is not identical with the subject-matter of the present suit that is the land itself. In view of the decision in 44 Cal 698[1] I think this reasoning is sound, and of itself sufficient for rejecting the plaintiff's plea, but as the general question of the status of the plaintiff in his relationship to defendants 2 to 4 has also been argued I proceed briefly to discuss it.

The statement that plaintiff is now the representative of defendants 2 to 4 is a legal fiction, and though it may derive support from some observations in (1937) 1 M L J 575,[2] that is a case in which in fact the judgment-debtors had unsuccessfully resisted the future claimant and I find myself quite unable to act in the circumstances of this case, where defendants 2 to 4 are never shown to have pleaded anything upon a legal fiction which, it is universally known, is almost always in direct conflict with the actual facts. In the strict sense of the word a decree-holder can never, in a suit of this kind, be the representative of his judgment-debtors. In so far as the judgment-debtors take any interest in the case at all they have their own point of view to put forward which almost invariably is in opposition to that of the decree-holder. As is stated very clearly in 15 Mad 477[3] at p. 480, the attachment by a decree-holder is not effected by him as the privy or representative of the judgment-debtors, but "by virtue of a right inherent in him to attach what was really their property at the date of the attachment." I have not been shown any authority in which this proposition has been overruled and being the decision of a Bench of this Court it is binding upon me.

Finally appellant's learned advocate falls back upon the position that he as one of the creditors of defendants 2 to 4 can take advantage of an adjudication obtained by another of those creditors. This position is directly negatived by 18 ALL 413[4] but it is now contended that since the date of that decision S. 53, T. P. Act, has been amended so as to make all suits under that section representative suits. Now, of course a suit by a creditor to set aside an adverse claim order may well in certain circumstances be in essence a suit under S. 53, but it cannot possibly be argued, I think, that when one creditor merely resists a claim by a claimant his resistance in those summary proceedings should be deemed to be on behalf of all the creditors. I see no reason therefore why I should not still follow 18 ALL 413.[4] The plea of res judicata must therefore fail at all points, and there being no other question of law in this appeal, it is dismissed with the costs of respondent 1. Leave refused.

ABDUR RAHMAN J.

T. P. Manicka Mudaliar — Appellant

v.

Ammakannu alias Venkalakshmi Ammal — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 41 of 1939, Decided on 8th August 1941, against decree of Dist. Court, Salem, D/- 26th October 1938.

(a) Pleadings—Pure question of fact such as married couple had no access to each other not definitely raised in pleadings—It should not be allowed to be raised in course of arguments even in trial Court much less in appeal.

A pure question of fact such as that the husband could not have had access to his legally married wife if not definitely raised in the pleadings should not be permitted to be raised during the course of arguments even in the trial Court much less so in a Court of appeal. [P 130*h*]

(b) Evidence Act (1872), S. 112 — Child born in lawful wedlock — Onus to prove that parties to marriage had no access to each other is on person alleging illegitimacy — Method of proof — It is for him to show that strained feelings were not reconciled before child could have been begotten—That feelings continued to be strained cannot be presumed.

Since every assumption is to be made in favour of legitimacy of a child who is found to have been born in lawful wedlock, the onus of proving non-access that is the parties had no opportunity for sexual intercourse at any time as a result of which the child could have been begotten or that of illegitimacy is on the party who alleges the same: ('34) 21 A I R 1934 P C 49, Rel. on; ('32) 19 A I R 1932 Mad 44 and (1831-46) 7 E R 365, Approved; ('32) 19 A I R 1932 Mad 39, Not approved. [P 133*a*,b]

It is for the person alleging intimacy to show that the relations between them were strained and continued to be so without any reconciliation before the child could have been begotten. The continuance of the strained and bitter feelings cannot be assumed in the absence of a divorce or such other circumstances as may lead to that inference. The mere fact that the parties are living separately in two different houses is insufficient to establish non-access. The non-access has to be proved like any other physical fact and may be established both by direct and circumstantial evidence of an unambiguous character but unless such evidence is forthcoming, it will not be possible for a Court "to believe it to be probable that there was no access." The fact that the father took no interest in the child by itself is not of much value in establishing illegitimacy nor can the fact whether the father did or did not perform the funeral obsequies of his wife be of very great assistance either. [P 131*d*,e; P 132*e*; P 133*b*,c]

(c) Evidence Act (1872), S. 35—Birth register — Entry in, is relevant to show date of birth — Legitimacy of child—Mother's name appearing in register but not of father—Evidentiary value.

The entry in the birth register may be relevant under S. 35 to show the date of birth; but how far the fact that the name of the mother was given and not that of the father by the informant would bear on the question of the child's legitimacy depends, even if assumed to be relevant largely on the means that the informant may be shown to have possessed of the knowledge in connection with the child's birth. If the informant happens to be a stranger, who did not know the father the statement may be, even if relevant, wholly unimportant. The entry becomes of no value when the informant was not examined and no explanation has been given for the omission to do so: ('34) 21 AIR 1934 Mad 318 and ('34) 21 A I R 1934 Mad 630, Ref. [P 131*g*,h]

(d) Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 41 and 13 — Guardianship proceedings for custody of child—Father not made party — Parentage of child in issue in subsequent suit—Orders in guardianship proceedings are not admissible.

Where the father was not made a party to the guardianship proceedings for the custody of his child, the orders passed in those proceedings, which were not proceedings in rem, are inadmissible under S. 41 in subsequent suit involving the issue of the parentage of the child. Nor can the order recognising the right of guardianship be relevant in the subsequent suit under S. 13. Those proceedings might be of value if the father had been notified and failed to allege that he was the father of the child. [P 132*b*,c]

V. V. Srinivasa Ayyangar and V. V. Ramadurai — for Appellant.

K. Umamaheswaran and P. S. Raghavarama Sastri — for Respondent.

Judgment. — Whether Madurai Naicken was the legitimate son of Narayanaswami Mudali is the only question that falls to be determined in this appeal. Both Narayanaswami and Vanajakshi were members of the Naick community and were alleged by the plaintiff to have been married. The marriage was found to have been established by the trial Court and from the manner in which the judgment of the lower appellate Court proceeds, it may be assumed that this finding was affirmed. In spite of this, however, their conclusions on the question of Madurai's legitimacy were conflicting. The District Munsif's finding is in para. 20 of his judgment. It is in the following words:

> I am of opinion that there is no evidence worth the name, or even any attempt to prove non-access as between the married husband and wife.

The District Judge on the other hand, found that the presumption raised by S. 112, Evidence Act, had been effectively rebutted. This inference was drawn from certain circumstances which will have to be considered by me in due course. But before I do so, let me see, as contended for by learned counsel for the respondent, if the allegation of fact to the effect that in the event of Narayanaswami's marriage having been established, he could not have had access to Vanajakshi at any time when Madurai could have been begotten was made by the defendant. This is important as a question like this, which is purely one of fact, if not definitely raised in the pleadings should not, in my opinion, be permitted to be raised during the course of arguments even in the trial Court much less so in a Court of appeal. The relevant portion of the written statement filed on behalf of defendant 1 reads as follows:

> She, (Vanajakshi) remaining unmarried, was following the dancing girl's profession till her lifetime. Narayanaswami Mudali is not her husband nor is he the father of the minor Madurainayakam Mudali nor heir. The suit house never belonged to Narayanaswami Mudali at any time after the death of Madurainayakam Mudali, nor was it in his possession.

If I understand this plea correctly, it only meant to deny the marriage between Vanajakshi and Narayanaswami. There was no allegation in this written statement that even if these two persons were found to have been married to each other, they were living separately and they did not have any access or could not have had any access to each other and hence Madurai could not have been an offspring of this marriage. That is why no attempt was made by the contesting defendant, according to the trial Court, "to prove non-access as between the married husband and wife." In the absence of any specific plea on that point, as urged by learned counsel for the appellant, this aspect of the case ought not to have been permitted to be raised or discussed by the lower appellate Court and much less to have formed the sole basis of its judgment. This would be sufficient to dispose of the appeal. But, since the circumstances which have led the lower appellate Court to come to the conclusion that the parties to the marriage have had no access to each other have been considered in the judgment under appeal at some length, it appears to be preferable to consider them with the object of testing the inference drawn from them. Had I been even of the opinion that one could have legitimately arrived at the conclusion which the lower appellate Court has drawn from the circumstances mentioned in its judgment, I would have had either to set aside the same on the ground that no such case was ever put forward on behalf of defendant 1 or at any rate remanded the case for further evidence and a fresh decision. But since I am of opinion that even if held to have been established, they are inconclusive, such a contingency does not arise in this case. These circumstances, may, at the most, show that the parties were not living in one house but are wholly insufficient to establish that Narayanaswami could not have had any access to Vanajakshi when both of them were living in the same city.

The first circumstance on which reliance was placed by the learned District Judge was that a will EX. J executed by Vanajakshi in 1902 under which a bequest of her property was made by her to her husband Narayanaswami was revoked by her on 20th May 1903 (EX. 9). There is undoubtedly a reference in this exhibit to certain grievances, which Vanajakshi had against her husband at the time when the will was revoked; but this does not show that the relations between them continued to remain as strained in the following four years as they were in 1903. The lower appellate Court observes after this that there was no reliable evidence showing reconciliation. But who was to show that there was no reconciliation or that they were not on visiting terms? The burden of proving that there was no access lay clearly on defendant 1 who alleged Madurai Naicken to be illegitimate and it was for her to show that they were not reconciled before Madurai could have been begotten or that the feelings between the two continued to remain as bitter and strained as they were in 1903. It is a matter of common knowledge that husbands and wives very often fall out but these differences are made up more often than not and in the absence of a divorce or such other circumstances that may lead me to draw an inference of their continuance, it will be wholly unsafe to assume that they continued to do so. The third circumstance on which a great deal of reliance was placed was an entry in the birth register in which the name of the father was given by one Varathappa Naicken in the first instance as Chinnaswami but that statement was withdrawn at once and the name of the mother was substituted instead — the father's name not having been disclosed at all.

Learned counsel for the respondent has not placed any reliance on the entry which was scored off, although he laid considerable stress on the fact that the name of the mother appeared in the entry and not that of the father. Reliance was placed in this connexion on the decision of a learned Judge of this Court in A I R 1934 Mad 318,[1] in which an entry in the birth register was considered to be relevant. The entry in the birth register may be relevant under S. 35 to show the date of the birth; but how far would the fact that the name of the mother was given and not that of the father by the informant bear on the question of the child's legitimacy depends, even if assumed to be relevant in regard to which I have grave doubts, largely on the means that the informant may be shown to have possessed of the knowledge in connexion with the child's birth. If the informant happens to be a stranger, who did not know the father as a reference to Chinnaswami would seem to point, the statement may be, even if relevant, wholly unimportant. The entry becomes of no value when I find that the informant was not examined and no explanation has been given for the omission to do so. Moreover, in a decision appearing in the same volume in A I R 1934 Mad 630,[2] the relevancy of such a document was doubted by Varadachariar J.

On the death of Vanajakshi certain applications were made by defendant 1 for

1. ('34) 21 AIR 1934 Mad 318 : 149 I C 953 : 66 M L J 283, Sivakami Ammal v. Kooliyandi Chettiar.
2. ('34) 21 A I R 1934 Mad 630 : 155 I C 708 : 67 M L J 389, Guruswami Nadar v. Irulappa Konar.

Madurai's guardianship in 1910. But Narayanaswami was not even referred to in those applications. No notice of those applications was ever given to him. In fact, in those applications Vanajakshi was described as a dancing woman and the petitioner in those applications, who is now defendant 1 in the case, asked for the custody of the child. The lower appellate Court appears to have attached considerable importance to those proceedings. But I cannot understand how various orders in those proceedings are relevant in this case, particularly when Narayanaswami was not even made a party or no notice of the application was given to him. The petitioner in that case was not interested in disclosing Vanajakshi's husband's name, as Narayanaswami has now been found to be, and the omission of his name from those proceedings is very significant and makes the orders passed in those proceedings, which were not proceedings in rem, irrelevant. Section 41, Evidence Act, to which reference was made by learned counsel for the respondent has absolutely no application. Nor could an order like this be relevant under S. 13 of the Act as the right that may be taken to have been recognized in that case was that of the guardianship claimed by defendant 1 and had nothing to do with the parentage of the child which is in issue now. These proceedings might have been of value if Narayanaswami had been notified and failed to allege that he was the father of the boy.

A reference was made by the lower appellate Court to EX. E, an order passed by the Court in connexion with the application for guardianship, whereby defendant 1 was permitted to take possession of the property which had devolved on the minor on the death of his mother. This property happened to be in the possession of certain members of the community. But it cannot be forgotten that the plaintiff's case was that the property was entrusted to them by Narayanaswami himself. Whatever may be the truth, the fact that the persons who got the property did not raise objection to the order of delivery of possession passed by the Court, cannot raise the assumption that Narayanaswami had not delivered possession of the property to them as he had become an ascetic (a fact which was to some extent found by the learned District Judge to have been established) and did not want to deal with the property himself.

A reference to the sale deed by Narayanaswami in favour of the plaintiff in 1925 and the plaintiff's delay in filing the present suit after a notice had been given by him in 1925 appear to my mind to be entirely irrelevant to show what the defendant was required to establish that Narayanaswami could not have had access to Vanajakshi. A great deal of emphasis was laid by learned counsel for the respondent on Narayanaswami's conduct towards the child. But the only finding on that point is that there was no evidence on the record that he took any interest in that child. This by itself could not be of much value. The fact whether Narayanaswami did or did not perform the funeral obsequies of his wife would not be of very great assistance either although there appears to be evidence on the record that he did perform them. In the end, adverse conclusion appears to have been drawn against the plaintiff by the fact that Narayanaswami himself was not examined. But he was summoned by the plaintiff and could not be served. For this the plaintiff could not have been blamed. The oral evidence of the plaintiff, it is true, has not been accepted by the lower appellate Court and the evidence of the defendant's witnesses 2 and 3 has been accepted on the point that Vanajakshi was leading the life of a dancing girl. But neither the rejection of the plaintiff's witnesses nor the acceptance of the statements of D. Ws. 2 and 3 on this point could have any bearing on the question that the Court was called upon to decide. There was no allegation that the marriage that had come into existence between the parties could have been and was ever dissolved and in the absence of any such allegation the only thing that the defendant should have proved was, in the words of the section, that the parties had no access or, as their Lordships of the Privy Council interpreted that word in 66 M L J 288[3] to mean, had no opportunity for sexual intercourse at any time as a result of which Madurai could have been begotten. That she has definitely failed to do and it is impossible to deduce that conclusion from the circumstances detailed in the lower appellate Court's judgment.

My attention was drawn by learned counsel for the respondent to the decisions in 61 M L J 874[4] and in 61 M L J 878[5] and to

(1831-46) 7 E R 365.[6] But the law was not laid down in those decisions in any way differently except to the extent that the definition of the word "access" given in the second of these was not the same. This was not accepted by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 66 M L J 288.[3] When a child is born during lawful wedlock and that is how S. 112 has been drafted, he will have to be assumed to be the child of the man who was at the time the husband of the mother unless it is shown that they had no opportunity of sexual intercourse in consequence of which the child could have been begotten. Since every assumption is to be made in favour of legitimacy of a child who is found to have been born in lawful wedlock, the onus of proving non-access or that of illegitimacy has been laid on the party who alleges the same. The law requires, in such cases the positive proof of a negative fact, that is, non-access as between the parties to the marriage and the mere fact that they are living separately in two different houses is insufficient to establish non-access. The non-access has to be proved like any other physical fact and may be established both by direct and circumstantial evidence of an unambiguous character but unless such evidence is forthcoming, it will not be possible for a Court "to believe it to be probable that there was no access." For the above reasons, the appeal must be accepted and the order of the first Court restored. The plaintiff will have his costs in this Court and in the lower appellate Court. (Leave to appeal refused.)

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 1905 of 1940 (and Appeal No. 72 of 1939 converted into a Civil Revn. Petn.), Decided on 15th October 1940, to revise order of Sub-Judge, Dindigul, D/- 25th August 1938.

(a) Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), Ss. 19, 8, 9 — Promissory note dated 4-1-1931 and letter of guarantee dated 7-8-1933 —Decree against both executants — Remedy of each for scaling down explained.

In a suit on a promissory note dated 4th January 1931 executed by defendants 1 and 2 and guaranteed by defendants 2 to 5 by letter of guarantee dated 7th August 1933, a decree was passed. Defendants 1 and 5 applied for scaling down of the debt under Section 19:

Held that in an application under S. 19, the Court was entitled only to proceed in accordance with the provisions of that Act, and defendant 5 was entitled to have his liability scaled down with reference to S. 9 and not with reference to S. 8 inasmuch as his liability arose after 1st October 1932. [P 134*b*,c]

(b) Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), S. 19 — Execution—Plea by surety that full amount due from judgment-debtor has been paid cannot be adjudicated.

It may be that under the general law he, the surety, will have a right to resist execution on the ground that the full amount due from the principal debtor has been paid. But an adjudication on such plea cannot form part of proceedings under S. 19 of the Act. [P 134*c*]

(c) Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), S. 19—Compromise decree can be scaled down with reference to original principal.

A decree on a compromise is substantially the same as a decree on any other contract and to the extent to which the compromise is a renewal of a pre-existing debt the decree has to be scaled down with reference to the original principal : ('41) 28 A I R 1941 Mad 56, Rel. on. [P 134*d*]

(d) Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), S. 19 Proviso—Proviso relates only to costs originally decreed — Compromise decree not separately allocating payments towards costs—Court cannot reopen compromise and act under proviso.

Where the compromise did not separately allocate any portion of the payment towards the cost in the suit it is not proper for the Court to reopen the compromise, tax the cost and treat the payment of the sum so taxed as the amount first to be provided for with reference to S. 19 of the Act. The proviso relates only to costs as originally decreed to the creditor: ('40) 27 A I R 1940 Mad 925 and ('41) 28 A I R 1941 Mad 62, Rel. on. [P 134*e*,f]

Wadsworth J. — This matter has been brought before us as a civil miscellaneous appeal but owing to the doubt regarding the existence of a right of appeal against an order under S. 19 of Madras Act 4 of 1938 we have treated the appeal as a revision petition. The appellant was the decree-holder in a suit on a promissory note. There were five defendants. Defendants 1 and 2 were impleaded as promisors. Defendants 3 to 5 were impleaded as liable under a letter of guarantee. The date of the promissory note was 4th January 1931. The date of the letter of guarantee was 7th August 1933. The suit ended in a compromise decree whereunder an amount of Rs. 5000 and odd was agreed to be due for the debt including interest and costs. There were two applications before the lower Court, one by defendant 1 and the other by defendant 5. There were no applications by defendants 2 to 4 nor was any evidence adduced that they were entitled to the benefits of the Act. The plain-a tiff asks us to hold that the defendants 2 to 4 are not entitled to the benefit of the scaling down operation. As we read the order of the lower Court, that order purports only to scale down the decree so far as the two applicants are concerned. Had it expressly conferred any benefit on defendants 2 to 4, it would obviously have been necessary to implead those defendants in the appeal before that benefit was taken away; but we do not find that any benefit was in fact conferred under this order upon those defendants who were not parties to the applications. Secondly the plaintiff contends that defendant 5 became liable only on 7th b August 1933 and that his liability under the decree must therefore be scaled down under S. 9 of the Act and not under S. 8, though the principal debtor's liability has to be scaled down under S. 8. It is objected that the liability of the surety must be co-extensive with the liability of the principal debtor with reference to S. 128, Contract Act, and that the order of the lower Court treating both the principal and surety in the same way is therefore correct. It seems to us that in applications under S. 19 of Madras Act, 4 of 1938 the Court is entitled only to proceed in accordance with the provisions of c that Act. In accordance with the provisions of that Act, defendant 5 is entitled to have his liability scaled down with reference to S. 9 and not with reference to S. 8 of the Act. It may be that under the general law he will have a right to resist execution on the ground that the full amount due from the principal debtor has been paid. But that is a plea the adjudication on which cannot properly form part of proceedings under S. 19 of this special Act. We therefore leave it open to defendant 5 in execution to raise any contention which may be available to him with reference to S. 128, Contract Act. d We do not think it necessary to say anything on the further contention of the plaintiff that the decree on the compromise is to be the starting point in the scaling down operation. We have made it clear in our decision reported in 52 M L W 262[1] that a decree on a compromise is substantially the same as a decree on any other contract and that to the extent to which the compromise is a renewal of a pre-existing debt the decree has to be scaled down with reference to the original principal. It has not been shown before us that the decision of the lower Court treating this compromise as a renewal e of the pre-existing liability under the promissory note is out of harmony with the principles just referred to.

It has been brought to our notice by the respondents that the lower Court has gone wrong in regard to its treatment of costs. The compromise did not separately allocate any portion of the payment towards the costs in the suit. In accordance with the decision in 52 M L W 403,[2] it is not proper for the Court to reopen the compromise, tax the costs and treat the payment of the sum so taxed as the amount first to be provided for with reference to the proviso to S. 19 of the Act. This proviso relates only to costs f as originally decreed to the creditor. There is no decree for costs as such. Similarly, it has been settled by a decision of this Bench (vide 52 M L W 607[3]) that the proviso applies only to costs as decreed and not to costs in execution. The lower Court is therefore wrong in directing payment to be made towards execution costs before the scaling down process was to start. In the result therefore the appeal, treated as a revision petition, is allowed and the case is remitted to the trial Court for fresh disposal in the light of this judgment. Defendant 1 will be entitled to his costs as against the plaintiff. g The plaintiff and defendant 5 will bear their own costs. The appellant will pay the deficient court-fee.

Wadsworth J. — This civil revision petition arises out of an order under S. 19 of Madras Act, 4 of 1938. There is no serious dispute as to the facts. Defendant 1 here and another person were indebted under a contract which was anterior to 1932. That debt ripened into a decree of 1933. To discharge that decree a fresh promissory note was executed by defendant 1 (one of the two judgment-debtors) and by defendant 2 who was not apparently concerned in the earlier debt. Both the defendants are agriculturists and they applied under S. 19 to scale down the debt. The lower Court has scaled down the debt as against both the defendants on the basis of its being a renewal of the original liability. The plaintiff decree-holder has filed the present revision petition in which he contests firstly the validity of Act 4 of 1938 and secondly the propriety of the scaling down order. It is conceded now that the question of the validity of the Act is settled by the Full Bench decision and that so far as defendant 1 is concerned, the scaling down is correct. It is however contended that defendant 2 is not entitled to any relief on the basis of the explanation to S. 8 and that the most that he can claim is the relief under S. 9 in the matter of interest on the promissory note which discharged the decree of 1933.

We have held in (1940) 2 M L J 517[1] that in order to claim the benefit of the explanation to S. 8 the debtor must be the same debtor who incurred the antecedent liability. In (1940) 2 M L J 786,[2] we recognized that there might be cases in which there was a substantial identity of the debtor though in form the debt appeared to have been incurred by different individuals. That was a case of a joint family debt incurred by certain coparceners along with strangers and renewed by different coparceners from those who executed the earlier note. In C. R. P. No. 1905 of 1940[3] we had to deal with an application under S. 19 to scale down a decree against two judgment-debtors one of whom claimed that his liability was only that of a surety, the other judgment-debtor being the person who was liable under the earlier debts to which the decree could be traced back. We held that whereas the judgment-debtor who was a party to the earlier debts could claim that his liability was a renewal of a pre-existing liability, so far as the alleged surety was concerned he could not by any proceeding under Act 4 of 1938 claim that his debt was to be scaled down with reference to the amount for which the principal judgment-debtor was found liable and that if the surety was entitled to relief having regard to the terms of S. 128, Contract Act, he must claim that relief in separate proceedings and not in proceedings under Act 4 of 1938. From this decision it follows that when there is a debt due by A which is renewed by a later debt due jointly and severally by A and B, B cannot claim that his liability under the later debt is a renewal of an antecedent debt, though A can put forward such a claim.

In the present case we are dealing with actual proceedings in a suit so that defences are open not merely under Act 4 of 1938 but also under the general law. It is not denied that defendant 1 is entitled to the benefit under Act 4 which the lower Court has awarded. It is however contended that defendant 2 was liable only as a surety and that by virtue of S. 128, Contract Act, the liability of the principal debtor having been reduced, the surety's liability should be proportionately reduced on the ground that it must be co-extensive with that of the principal debtor. This contention cannot succeed, for in the first place, it is not established that defendant 2 was a surety, strictly speaking. The promissory note EX. A makes it clear that both the defendants bound themselves jointly and severally to pay the amount of the debt to the promisee in consideration for the satisfaction of the decree debt against defendant 1. The lower Court infers from this fact that defendant 2 was a mere surety. But the contract itself makes defendant 2 liable as a principal and for that liability the abandonment by the promisee of his decree against defendant 1 is a sufficient consideration. By the terms of S. 132, Contract Act, a mere knowledge by the promisee that defendant 2 was only a surety for defendant 1 would not affect the liability of the promisors to the promisee under the contract. Nor is it open to defendant 2 to let in parole evidence to vary the terms of the contract EX. A : vide 24 M L J 91.[4] By the terms of a written contract both the defendants are jointly and severally liable for the full amount of the debt. There is sufficient consideration as regards both the defendants for this contract and it is not in our opinion open to defendant 2 to try and whittle down his liability by reason of any private arrangement with defendant 1 to which the promisee was not a party. It follows therefore that the decree of the lower Court is correct so far as it relates to defendant 1 but the plaintiff is entitled to a decree as against defendant 2 for the principal amount of the promissory note with interest at 5 per cent. from the date of the note to 22nd March 1938 and thereafter at 6 per cent. and proportionate costs. The petitioner (plaintiff) will pay the costs of defendant 1 in revision and will receive his costs from defendant 2.

1. ('41) 28 A I R 1941 Mad 58 : 193 I C 171: I L R (1941) Mad 128 : (1940) 2 M L J 517, Neelappa Reddiar v. Sulaimuthu Udayan.
2. ('41) 28 A I R 1941 Mad 202 : (1940) 2 M L J 786, Periakaruppan Chettiar v. Appaji Naidu.

Judgment. — This appeal raises a question of some importance touching the applicability of S. 6, Married Women's Property Act, to policies of life insurance effected in 1905 by a Mahomedan on his own life for the benefit of his children. The subject-matter of the suit out of which this appeal arises relates to five policies being Nos. 65284 to 65288. The plaintiff is the father, defendants 2 and 4 to 9 are his sons and defendants 10 and 11 are his daughters. Policy No. 65284 was effected for the benefit of defendant 2, No. 65285 for the benefit of defendant 4, No. 65286 for the benefit of defendant 8, No. 65287 for the benefit of one of his daughters who is not a party to the suit and No. 65288 for the benefit of defendant 10. Defendant 1 is the Oriental Life Assurance Company with whom the policies were effected. Defendant 3 is the Official Assignee of Madras representing the estate of defendant 2. The suit is for a declaration that the plaintiff is the owner of the said policies and that none of the several defendants for whose benefit the policies were effected are entitled to claim any rights thereunder. The basis of the claim is that the Married Women's Property Act does not apply to Mahomedans and therefore under S. 6 of the Act none of the children for whose benefit the plaintiff effected the policies will obtain any benefit thereunder; that even assuming they obtained such benefit, it was released or transferred in favour of the plaintiff in pursuance of a family arrangement by a release deed dated 31st July 1935. Defendant 1 company has contended that the policies were effected in Bombay and that the Married Women's Property Act is not applicable to the policies in question as they were effected long before 1923.

The contention on behalf of defendants 3 and 4 was that under S. 6, Married Women's Property Act, a trust was created in favour of the several beneficiaries for whose benefit the policies were effected, that there was no family arrangement, that the deed of release on which reliance was placed by the plaintiff could not put an end to the trust in their favour and therefore the plaintiff is not entitled to any declaration. The parties did not adduce any oral evidence and contented themselves with filing certain documents. The learned City Civil Judge came to the conclusion that the Married Women's Property Act applied to the policies in question, that there was a family arrangement by which the parties surrendered their rights in favour of the plaintiff and the trust was therefore put an end to. On these findings he gave a declaration in favour of the plaintiff. Defendant 4 has preferred this appeal. Defendant 1 has filed a memorandum of objections raising a contention that the Married Women's Property Act would not apply to these policies and that in any event defendant 2 not being a party to the deed of release it would not bind him. The first question which arises for decision is whether S. 6, Married Women's Property Act, governs the policies in question. In 37 Mad 483[1] the applicability of S. 6, Married Women's Property Act, to a policy of insurance effected by a Hindu male on his own life for the benefit of his wife and children came for decision and it was held that S. 6 of the Act applied to the policy in question. This decision would govern a similar policy effected by a Mahomedan male. The Bombay High Court in 37 Bom 471[2] took a different view on a claim made by a widow in respect of a policy effected by her husband for her benefit and it was held that as the Act of 1874 did not apply to Hindus, she could not claim the benefit of its provisions. This view was followed in 18 C W N 1335[3] and the learned Judges were of the opinion that > although S. 2 of the Act expressly provides that nothing in the Act applies to any married woman who at the time of her marriage professed the Hindu amongst other religions, or whose husband at the time of such marriage professed that religion and does not expressly exempt their children from the operation of the Act, the intention of the Legislature taking the Act as a whole, is to exclude the children also from the benefits of S. 6 of the Act.

They dissented from the decision in 37 Mad 483.[1] Apparently, in consequence of this conflict of views, the Married Women's Property Act was amended in 1923 by an amending Act and the following proviso was introduced to S. 6 :

> Notwithstanding anything contained in S. 2 the provisions of sub-s. (1) shall apply in the case of any policy of insurance such as is referred to therein which is effected by any Hindu, Mohamedan, Sikh or Jain in Madras, after the 31st day of December 1913 or in any other part of British India after the 1st day of April 1923.

After this amending Act came into force, the question of the applicability of the Act to life policies effected before 1913 came up for consideration in our High Court, and it was contended before Venkatasubba Rao and Madhavan Nair JJ. (52 Mad 936[4]) who were dealing with the matter that the amendment of S. 6 introduced by the Amending Act of 1923 clearly implied that the Full Bench decision was wrong. The contention was that as the proviso says :

> The provisions of sub-s. (1) shall apply in the case of any policy of insurance such as is referred to therein which is effected by any Hindu, Mahomedan, Sikh or Jain in Madras after the 31st December 1913.

It indicates that the Act would not apply to a policy effected before that date. This contention was repelled and the learned Judges held that the Full Bench decision governed the case and that all the policies effected before 1923 would be governed by the Act of 1874 as it stood before the amendment. Subsequent to this decision a question arose with reference to a claim made by a widow of a Hindu male on a policy effected in Calcutta by her husband for her benefit and the learned Judges, the Chief Justice and Bardswell J. in 65 M L J 455[5] made the following observations :

> The point to be considered by us here is, where was this policy of insurance effected ? If it was effected in Madras, then a trust has been created in favour of the assured's wife and the policy money has to be paid to the Official Trustee of Madras ; and that is by reason of S. 6, Married Women's Property Act. If, on the other hand, the policy was effected in Calcutta, it having been effected in 1919, that is to say, before 1923, there is no trust and letters of administration will have to be taken out by the widow of the assured for the purpose of obtaining the policy money.

Neither the Full Bench decision in 37 Mad 483[1] nor the decision in 52 Mad 936[4] was noticed and considered. So far as this High Court is concerned, the Full Bench decision in 37 Mad 483[1] is a clear authority for the position that S. 6, Married Women's Property Act, would govern a policy effected by a Mahomedan male for the benefit of his children. No doubt it may be contended, as it was contended in 52 Mad 936[4] that the mention of date "December 1913" in the proviso introduced by the Amending Act was made with reference to the Full Bench decision in 37 Mad 483[1] and it was the intention of the Legislature to make it plain that having regard to the interpretation placed on S. 6 in 37 Mad 483[1] all policies effected after 1913 should be governed by the Act though the Act was passed in April 1923. But the proviso cannot be construed as a declaratory enactment declaring what the previous law was and therefore from the positive nature of the enactment that from a particular date the Act should apply, it does not arise by necessary implication that the Act would not apply to a policy effected before that date. Whatever it is, so long as the Full Bench decision in 37 Mad 483[1] stands, it must be treated as the governing law so far as our Court is concerned. If S. 6 of the Act were to apply there can be no doubt that a trust was created in favour of the several defendants for whose benefit the suit policies were effected though the interest taken by them was contingent. Tomlin J. in dealing with a similar policy in (1926) Ch 48[6] at page 53 observed thus :

> It is true it is expressed to be for the benefit of his wife in a certain event only, but the fact that the benefit is of a limited or contingent character does not prevent it from being a benefit within the meaning of this Act. I think therefore that the policy creates a trust in favour of the wife, but only in the terms of the trust.

The next question is what is the effect of the family arrangement and the consequent execution of the release deed by the defendants who executed it. It is contended before me that such a release is invalid and inoperative having regard to the express language of S. 6 of the Act which says that so long as the object of the trust remains it can never become the property of the plaintiff. It is contended that the expression "object" in the section means the beneficiary and so long as the beneficiary is alive, it must be taken that the object of the trust remains. This section is borrowed from the provisions of the English Act (S. 10, Married Women's Property Act, 1870) and there is a conflict in English law as to what the expression 'object' means. According to one view the expression 'object' means beneficiary; according to another view, it means purpose : vide (1930) 2 Ch 37[7] and (1933) Ch 126.[8] It seems to me that it is not necessary to deal with this conflict in the view I am taking of the effect of the deed of release. Section 6, Married Women's Property Act, provides that the policy money should not form part of the estate of the insured only so long as the object of the trust remains. But if the performance of the trust becomes impossible or the trust fails or otherwise is satisfied or comes to an end, the policy money will form part of the estate of the insured. In (1933) Ch 126[8] at p. 139 Romer L. J. in construing S. 11, Married Women's Property Act, 1882—corresponding to S. 6 of the Indian Act — observed that the proviso meant that > the policy moneys shall not form part of the estate of the insured or be subject to his or her debts until the trusts have come to an end.

Therefore the trust can come to an end by revocation of it. Section 78 (a), Trusts Act, provides that a trust can be revoked where all the beneficiaries are competent to contract by their consent. It was therefore perfectly competent to the several defendants to revoke the trust created by the policies in their favour. Under S. 58, Trusts Act, it is also clear that it is competent for a beneficiary to transfer his interest. The interest taken by the several defendants under the policies though contingent can be transferred because the right created under the policies is not in the nature of a mere right to sue: vide 8 Rang 8.[9] If the beneficiary is capable of transferring his interest, he can also release it. The effect of the deed of release therefore is to put an end to the trust. Once the trust is put an end to, the plaintiff becomes the owner of the policies and the moneys payable thereunder. Defendant 4 was a party to the deed of release and he was competent to contract on that date. On his own admission the deed of release was executed on account of the family arrangement by which the plaintiff settled his own property on his children. I would therefore dismiss the appeal of defendant 4 with costs, one set to be shared between respondents 1 and 2. In regard to the memorandum of objections, it must be noticed that defendant 2 was not a party to the release deed. The finding of the learned City Civil Judge as to the existence of the family arrangement was based on the admission made in the deed of release and as defendant 2 was not a party to it, it will not be open to the Court to bind him by the said document. Therefore the declaration so far as defendant 2 is concerned must be set aside. The memorandum of objections is allowed only so far as defendant 2 is concerned. I may point out that defendant 1 company stated before the learned City Civil Judge that they did not dispute the jurisdiction of the Court to deal with the case and before me too, the question of jurisdiction was not raised. As defendant 1 company have partly failed and partly succeeded, I direct the company to bear their own costs in the memorandum of objections.

LEACH C. J. AND

Messrs. Sha. Moolchand Kesarimull by its partner Mita Lal — Appellant

v.

Messrs. Associated Agencies, Firm of Merchants — Respondent.

Appeal No. 22 of 1940, Decided on 24th April 1941, against judgment and decree of Gentle J., in C. S. No. 215 of 1939, D/- 30th January 1940.

(a) Contract — C. I. F. contract — Effects of stated — Breach — Cancellation of contract — Validity — Test — Contract partly typed and partly printed — A agreeing to purchase and B agreeing to sell 60 bottles of quicksilver to be imported from Italy, half quantity to be shipped in July 1939 and remaining half in August 1939 — Typed portion mentioning terms as "Document against sight payment" — Printed portion providing that on arrival of steamer by which goods were shipped indentor should take up documents which would be delivered against payment only — On receipt of bill of lading and other documents relating to first consignment B presenting same to A and on A's refusal to pay for same cancelling whole contract and refusing to give delivery of second consignment when received — Contract held lawfully cancelled by B — A held not entitled to delivery of second consignment.

The tender of the goods under a C. I. F. contract is effected by the tender of the bill of lading and accompanied in case the goods have been lost in transit, by the policy of marine insurance, which it is the seller's duty to take out for the protection of the buyer. In the absence of any stipulation with regard to the time for payment, the payment must be made when the bill of lading and other necessary shipping documents are presented to the buyer, provided, of course, that the goods have been shipped within the stipulated period and the documents are presented at a reasonable time. [P 141*d*, e]

Under a contract which was partly typewritten and partly printed in a form commonly used by B, a firm of merchants, A agreed to buy and B agreed to sell 60 bottles of quicksilver to be obtained from Italy and it was stipulated that there should be a shipment of half the quantity in July and half in August 1939. The typewritten portion of the document included these terms: "Price: £16-12-0 per steel bottle, c. i. f. Madras. Terms: Document against sight payment." The document also contained a printed clause that "on arrival of the steamer by which the goods have been shipped, the indentor shall take up the documents. The documents shall be delivered against payment only." It was contended by A that the printed clause gave him liberty to refuse to pay until the goods had actually arrived in Madras and that he was not liable to pay for each consignment as soon as the bill of lading and the other shipping documents were presented to him, irrespective of the arrival of the goods. The goods comprising first consignment were duly shipped from Italy, but the ship never arrived in Madras due to outbreak of the war. On receipt of the relevant shipping documents with regard to the first consignment B forwarded the same to A on 23rd August and on his failure to pay the amount due wrote to A on 8th September 1939 demanding payment within 24 hours and informing him that on his failure to comply with the demand, the contract would stand cancelled and he would be held responsible for the damages which might be incurred as the result of his non-compliance with the demand. This letter brought a reply from A in which he stated that he would make arrangements for payment to the bank as soon as the steamer had arrived in port. When second consignment arrived on 19th September 1939, A wrote to B claiming that delivery should be given to him, but B refused to do so on the ground that the contract had been cancelled by reason of A's breach in respect of the first consignment:

Held that (1) the contract was a C. I. F. contract. There being a direct conflict between the typed portion and the printed portion, the typed portion prevailed and entitled B to present the bill of lading and other documents to A when he did and that the presentation required A to pay then and there for the goods represented by the documents. A having refused to pay the price of the goods comprised in the first consignment when the documents were presented and payment demanded broke the contract and therefore could have no claim in respect of that consignment. [P 141*c*; P 142*c*,d,e]

(2) In deciding whether there had been a repudiation of the contract, regard must be had first, to the ratio quantitatively which the breach bears to the contract as a whole, and secondly the degree of probability or improbability that the breach will be repeated. Since the reason given by A for refusing the first consignment was a breach which B might well expect to be repeated with regard to the second half of the consignment and the breach which took place when A refused to pay for the first consignment was a refusal to perform the contract to the extent of one-half, the contract was lawfully cancelled by B and consequently A had no claim to the goods which comprised the second consignment : (1934) 1 K B 148 and (1882) 50 L J Q B 529, Rel. on; (1884) 9 A C 434, Disting.

[P 142*e*,f,g]

(b) Contract—Construction — Contract partly typed and partly printed — If both portions can be read together effect must be given to all provisions — Printed portion not reconcilable with typed one — Typed portion must prevail.

If the typewritten and the printed portions of a contract can be read together, effect must, of course, be given to all the provisions, but if the printed portion cannot be reconciled with the typewritten portion the typewritten portion must prevail : (1803) 4 East 130; (1864) 33 L J Q B 97; (1893) A C 351; 30 Bom 1 and ('28) 15 AIR 1928 Bom 170, Rel. on.

[P 141*e*]

(c) Deed—Construction — Intention must be gathered from words used — Surrounding circumstances are not to be ignored.

The intention of the parties to a document must be gathered from the words used, but, in deciding what was the intention the Court is not called upon to ignore the surrounding circumstances. [P 142*a*]

K. Rajah Ayyar, K. S. Raja Gopalachariar and P. V. Subramaniam — for Appellant.

T. A. Rangachari — for Respondent.

Leach C. J.—The appellant sued on the original side of this Court to recover a sum of Rs. 7920 claimed as damages for breach of contract. The appellant also asked for an order directing specific performance of part of the contract and put his claim for damages here in the alternative. The nature of the contract, however, precludes any decree for specific performance being granted and the claim for damages alone calls for consideration. Gentle J., who tried the suit came to the conclusion that there had been no breach of the contract by the respondents, but the appellant himself had broken it. The contract is partly typewritten and partly printed, and is dated 5th July 1939. A printed form commonly used by the respondents, who are a firm of merchants, carrying on business in Madras was used, but the main provisions were inserted by means of a typewriter at the beginning of the document. By the typewritten portion, the appellant agreed to buy and the respondents agreed to sell 60 bottles of quicksilver, each bottle to contain 34·5 kilograms net. The quicksilver had to be obtained from Italy and it was stipulated that there should be a shipment of half the quantity in July and half in August 1939. The typewritten portion of the document includes these terms :

Price.—£16-12-0 per steel bottle, C. I. F. Madras.
Terms.—Document against sight payment.

It is a C. I. F. contract and if the document had stopped at the end of the typewritten portion there could be no doubt that the appellant would have made himself liable to pay for each consignment as soon as the bill of lading and the other shipping documents were presented to him, irrespective of the arrival of the goods. Mr. Rajah Iyer on behalf of the appellant has rightly conceded this, but he relies on the following statement in para. 3 of the printed conditions:

On arrival of the steamer by which the goods have been shipped, the indentor shall take up the documents. The documents shall be delivered against payment only.

He says that this clause gave him liberty to refuse to pay until the goods had actually arrived in Madras. The case for the respondents is that the printed clause is in direct conflict with the typewritten portion of the document and that the typewritten portion must prevail. The goods comprising the first consignment were duly shipped from Italy, but the ship never arrived in Madras. The goods were placed on board a German vessel and was at sea when the present war broke out on 3rd September 1939. The vessel was apparently in the vicinity of Mormagao in Portugese territory on the out-break of hostilities and sought refuge there. The August portion of the contract was duly shipped on a Dutch vessel and arrived in Madras on 19th September 1939. On 18th August 1939 the respondents wrote to the appellant informing him that they had received the relevant shipping documents with regard to the first consignment and they would be sending their invoice for the amount due in respect of the goods in the course of the week. The invoice and the relative shipping documents were forwarded to the appellant the next day and on 23rd August the respondents wrote to the appellant enclosing a copy of the invoice which had been certified by the customs and asked him to pay the amount into the Eastern Bank Ltd., Madras. On the same day, the manager of the Eastern Bank Ltd., wrote to the appellant informing him that he had received instructions to collect the amount and requested him to make arrangements for payment. The appellant took no notice of these communications. On 8th September 1939, the respondents wrote to him demanding payment within 24 hours and informing him that on his failure to comply with the demand, the contract would stand cancelled and he would be held responsible for the damages which might be incurred as the result of his non-compliance with the demand. This letter brought a reply from the appellant two days later, in which he stated that he would make arrangements for payment to the bank as soon as the steamer had arrived in port. He did not challenge the validity of the respondents' demand for immediate payment.

When the second consignment arrived on 19th September 1939 the appellant, through an advocate, wrote to the respondents claiming that delivery should be given to him, but the respondents refused to do so on the ground that the contract had been cancelled by reason of the appellant's breach in respect of the first consignment. Thereupon the appellant filed this suit. He maintained that he was fully justified in refusing to pay for the first consignment until the ship carrying the goods had reached Madras, and that as there had been no breach of contract on his part he was entitled to delivery of the goods which had been consigned in August and had arrived here in September. He also averred that even if there had been a breach of the agreement on his part, the breach was not of a nature which warranted the respondents cancelling the contract, and therefore he was entitled in law to delivery of the second consignment. The learned Judge decided against the appellant on all his contentions.

The contract is a C. I. F. contract, whether it is to be construed in the way the appellant would have it construed or in the respondents' way. The effects of a C. I. F. contract are fully stated in the judgment of Kennedy L. J. in (1911) 1 K B 934[1] which received the approval of the House of Lords, (1912) A C 18.[2] The tender of the goods under a C. I. F. contract is effected by the tender of the bill of lading and accompanied, in case the goods have been lost in transit, by the policy of marine insurance, which it is the seller's duty to take out for the protection of the buyer. As the result of the decision in (1911) 1 K B 934[1] it is now settled law that in the absence of any stipulation with regard to the time for payment, the payment must be made when the bill of lading and other necessary shipping documents are presented to the buyer, provided, of course, that the goods have been shipped within the stipulated period and the documents are presented at a reasonable time. If the typewritten and printed portions of the contract can be read together, effect must, of course, be given to all the provisions but if the printed portion cannot be reconciled with the typewritten portion the typewritten portion must prevail : see (1864) 33 L J Q B 97[3] and (1893) A C 351.[4] In (1893) A C 351,[4] the House of Lords had to construe a charter party, and in his judgment in this case Lord Herschell said :

> Where general words are used in a printed form which are obviously intended to apply, so far as they are applicable, to the circumstances of a particular contract, which particular contract is to be embodied in or introduced into that printed form, I think you are justified in looking at the main object and intent of the contract and in limiting the general words used, having in view that object and intent.

Lord Halsbury agreed and in so doing laid stress on the principle stated by Lord Ellenborough in (1803) 4 East 130[5] at p. 135, where Lord Ellenborough said :

> The words superadded in writing (subject indeed always to be governed in point of construction by the language and terms with which they are accompanied), are entitled nevertheless, if there should be any reasonable doubt upon the sense and meaning of the whole, to have a greater effect attributed to them than to the printed words, inasmuch as the written words are the immediate language and terms selected by the parties themselves for the expression of their meaning and the printed words are a general formality adapted equally to their case and that of all other contracting parties upon similar occasions and subjects.

The same principle has been accepted in India: see 30 Bom 1[6] and 30 Bom L R 415.[7] Therefore cl. (3) of the printed terms of this contract must be given effect to if this can be done without doing violence to the typewritten portion, but not otherwise. Before turning to examine in detail the two portions of the document, I would mention that this contract was entered into at a time when war clouds were gathering. The goods had to be obtained from Italy, a direction from which some of the war clouds were coming. The printed form represented the usual conditions on which the respondents did business in normal times. Therefore it can be well understood that in entering into the contract the sellers insisted that the buyer should pay the price as soon as the bill of lading and other relevant documents were presented to him. The intention of the parties must be gathered from the words used, but in deciding what was the intention the Court is not called upon to ignore the surrounding circumstances.

I have already indicated that in my opinion the typewritten portion of the document if read alone entitled the respondents to present the bill of lading and other documents to the appellants when they did and that the presentation required him to pay then and there for the goods represented by the documents. Reading the typewritten portion in conjunction with the printed portion I am of opinion that there is a direct conflict. The expression "at sight" means on demand, and therefore the words "documents against sight payment" can only mean that the appellant was to pay when the documents were presented to him. The printed portion relied upon by the appellant stipulates that the appellant should only be required to pay after the arrival of the steamer in Madras. Mr. Rajah Iyer has suggested that the two portions can be reconciled by reading them as embodying these conditions : (1) the appellant should not be required to pay until the goods arrived; (2) after arrival the appellant should pay as soon as the shipping documents were presented to him. I cannot accept this construction. In the typewritten portion of the document, which is the governing portion, there is an unqualified statement to the effect that goods must be paid for at sight, that is whenever the shipping documents were presented. The subsequent printed condition is a negation of this condition. The learned Judge has read the contract in this way and I am in full agreement with what he has said. The parties could, of course, have contracted that payment should not be demanded until after the arrival of the goods, but this they have not done, and no doubt the war clouds were responsible for the respondents refusing to do business in these goods on the condition to be found in cl. (3) of their printed form. The appellant having refused to pay the price of the goods comprised in the first consignment when the documents were presented to him and payment demanded means that he broke the contract and therefore can have no claim in respect of that consignment.

It remains to decide whether the appellant had the right of demanding that delivery should be made of the goods consigned in August 1939. In (1934) 1 K B 148[8] Lord Hewart C. J. in delivering the judgment of the Court of Appeal pointed out that in deciding whether there has been a repudiation of the contract, regard must be had first, to the ratio quantitatively which the breach bears to the contract as a whole, and secondly the degree of probability or improbability that the breach will be repeated. In the present case Gentle J. considered that the reasons given by the appellant for refusing the first consignment was a breach which the respondents might well expect to be repeated with regard to the second half of the consignment and I see no reason for dissent from this opinion. The first consideration referred to by Lord Hewart C. J. also applies here. The breach which took place when the appellant refused to pay for the first consignment was a refusal to perform the contract to the extent of one half. When there is a contract for the sale of goods to be delivered in two instalments and the buyer wrongly refuses to take delivery of the first instalment the breach of contract is so extensive that the seller is entitled to cancel the contract and be compensated for any loss suffered by him. In (1882) 50 L J Q B 529[9] the Court of Appeal held that a seller was entitled to cancel a contract when the buyer had refused to take delivery of goods representing one-third of the total sold under the contract. The considerations which applied in (1884) 9 A C 434[10] do not arise here, but (1882) 50 L J Q B 529[9] has direct bearing. I hold that the contract was lawfully cancelled by the respondents and consequently the appellant had no claim to the goods which comprised the second consignment. For these reasons I would dismiss the appeal with costs. I also consider that there should be a certificate for two counsel.

Venkataramana Rao J.—I agree with my Lord the Chief Justice that the view of

WADSWORTH AND PATANJALI SASTRI JJ.

Sri Chitturi Narayanamma—Appellant

v.

Vankina Venkatachalam and another — Respondents.

Appeal No. 71 of 1939, Decided on 2nd September 1941, against decree of Sub-Judge, Ellore, D/- 31st August 1938.

(a) Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of b 1938), Ss. 3 (v), 8 Expl.—Creditor does not include person beneficially entitled to amount lent.

The definition of the word 'creditor' in S. 3 (v) though it expressly includes the creditor's heirs, legal representatives and assigns, does not include the person beneficially entitled to the amount lent. Therefore where a debt in favour of A is discharged by a debt in favour of B, it will not be open to the debtor to let in evidence to show that the money which he owes to B is really the money of A so as to bring into force the explanation to S. 8: ('41) 28 A I R 1941 Mad 321, Ref. [P143*g*; P 144*f*,g,h]

(b) Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), S. 8 Expl. — Promissory notes executed by father — The debts allotted to son on partition and son executing fresh document — Son cannot claim to scale down debts.

c Where certain promissory notes have been executed by a father and the debts thereunder are allotted to the son on partition and the son executes fresh document, the son cannot claim to scale down the debts : ('41) 28 A I R 1941 Mad 663, Rel. on; ('41) 28 A I R 1941 Mad 356, Expl., and Disting. [P 144*c*]

A. Lakshmayya — for Appellant.

V. Govindarajachari — for Respondents.

Wadsworth J. — The plaintiff appeals against the reduction of her claim on the basis of a defence under Madras Act, 4 of 1938. The suit was on a mortgage (Ex. A) dated 10th January 1931 executed by defendant 1 in favour of the plaintiff for the sum of Rupees d 20,000. The mortgage deed recites four previous debts, the discharge of which provided the consideration for the document. They are as follows: (1) Ex. B, a promissory note for Rs. 3000 dated 18th August 1928 executed by defendant 1's father in favour of P. W. 4, the husband of the plaintiff; (2) Ex. D, a promissory note for Rs. 2025 dated 30th September 1929 between the same parties, i. e., defendant 1's father and the plaintiff's husband; (3) Ex. C, a promissory note for Rs. 5429-5-0 executed on 11th February 1930 by defendant 1 himself in favour of the plaintiff's husband. This promissory note recites the discharge of an earlier promissory note debt incurred by defendant 1's father, which debt had been allotted to defendant 1 in the division effected between him and his father; (4) Ex. E, a pro- e missory note for Rs. 6000 executed on 18th August 1928 by defendant 1's father in favour of the plaintiff herself. The learned Subordinate Judge went at some length into the evidence whether the plaintiff was really a benamidar for her husband and whether the monies advanced to defendant 1's father, which debts become consolidated in the suit mortgage, were the monies of the plaintiff herself or those of her husband. At the time when this case was decided, the Courts had not the benefit of the decisions which have helped to elucidate Act 4 of 1938 and it was not realised that in order to claim the bene- f fit of the explanation to S. 8, there must be a substantial identity of both parties to the debt, with the parties to the prior debts of which it is alleged to be a renewal.

We held in I L R (1941) Mad 248[1] that when there was a mortgage debt which was claimed to be a renewal of an antecedent promissory note debt in favour of a different person, it was not open to the petitioner to contend that the creditor under the promissory note was some one other than the promisee whose name appears in the note. That conclusion was based upon the provi- g sions of the Negotiable Instruments Act, but we point out incidentally that the definition of the word 'creditor' in S. 3 (v) of Act 4 of 1938, though it expressly includes the creditor's heirs, legal representatives and assigns, does not include the person beneficially entitled to the amount lent. In (1941) 1 M L J 773[2] we had to deal with the position where a joint family owed a debt and at the partition of the family this debt was allotted to one of the former coparceners who executed a fresh document in favour of the creditor. We held that the contract executed by the individual debtor in substi- tution for the earlier debt owed by the joint h family was not a debt renewed or included in a fresh document in favour of the same creditor, holding the view that there must be a substantial identity of the debtor as well as the creditor. We have, of course, held that where there is a joint family debt for which one coparcener has signed, which is renewed by another joint family debt for which a different coparcener signs, there is a suba stantial identity of the debtor sufficient to satisfy the criterion which we have laid down. In one case, (1941) 1 M L J 39,[3] we had to deal with the rather peculiar circumstances of a debt due by a joint family consisting of four brothers, one of whom executed a release deed and went out of the family whereafter the other three brothers, who continued to form the joint family, renewed the debt in their own names. We held in the special circumstances of the case that there continued to be a debt due by the same family as that which had originally incurred the debt.

b Now, applying these decisions to the facts of the present case, the four debts superseded by EX. A may be classified as follows. Those evidenced by EXS. B and D are debts in which neither of the parties is a party to the suit debt, the debtor being the father of defendant 1 and the creditor being the husband of the plaintiff. In each of the two transactions evidenced by EXS. C and E there is one party common to EX. A though the other party is different. In EX. C the debtor is defendant 1 himself but the creditor is the plaintiff's husband, while in EX. E the debtor is defendant 1's father and the creditor is the plaintiff herself. It seems clear from the c recitals in EX. C that there was a regular partition between defendant 1 and his father, the date of which must have been some time between September 1929 and February 1930 judging from the recitals in EXS. D and C. It follows that there is a different debtor in each of the antecedent debts evidenced by EXS. B, D and E and on the strength of our decisions defendant 1 cannot claim to scale down the suit debt with reference to antecedent debts of the joint family allotted to him at the partition in respect of which he has executed fresh documents.

d With reference to EX. C, the debtor is the same. The promisee under EX. C is the plaintiff's husband, whereas under the later mortgage the creditor in the document is the plaintiff herself. But it was found by the lower Court that the plaintiff took this mortgage as a benamidar for her husband. In the view we take of the law it is unnecessary for us to decide whether the lower Court's decision on the facts is correct or not. We are unable to accept the view that the debtor can scale down the debt under EX. A on the basis that the real creditor under EX. A is the promisee under the earlier note EX. C.

3. ('41) 28 AIR 1941 Mad 356 : (1941) 1 M L J 39, Ramasubbier v. Rama Iyer.

e Our decisions have already gone so far as to make it impossible for the debtor to contend that the promisee under EX. C is a benamidar for the later mortgagee. But we have not so far held in a case where the debt is neither due under a negotiable instrument nor under a decree, that the plea of benami cannot be called in aid in order to establish the identity of the creditor under the later debt with the creditor under the earlier debt. The observation already referred to at p. 254 in I L R (1941) Mad 248[1] does contain an indication of the view which we are now setting forth. When we have to decide whether one creditor is the same person as another creditor, we f are entitled to look to the definition in the Act and when that definition expressly includes heirs, legal representatives and assigns, there is much to be said for the view that the non-mention of beneficiaries must justify an inference that they are not included in the definition of "creditor." Ordinarily speaking, when we speak of a creditor, we mean the person with whom the debtor has contracted and to whom he looks for his discharge; we do not mean the person to whom the money will eventually go after it has been collected. In order to justify the interpretation of the term "creditor" as including a beneficiary who will eventually be g entitled to the proceeds of the debt, there ought to be some express indication in the enactment which we do not find.

On the other hand, the explanation to S. 8 seems clearly to indicate that we must look to the document ordinarily to find out who is the creditor. The words "where a debt has been renewed or included in a fresh document in favour of the same creditor" do seem to indicate that in order to ascertain whether the latter creditor is the same as the earlier creditor, we must look to the writing. No doubt in the special case of one creditor who can be shown to be an assign h or a legal representative or a heir of the previous creditor, the Act comes to the debtor's aid and, provided he can prove that this relationship exists between the two, the identity of the creditors will be established. But ordinarily speaking, when we have a debt in favour of A discharged by a debt in favour of B, it will not in our opinion be open to the debtor to let in evidence to show that the money which he owes to B is really the money of A so as to bring into force the explanation to S. 8. It follows therefore that the lower Court was wrong in scaling down the debt under EX. A on the basis that it was a renewal of previous debts between the same parties. The debt under EX. A was contracted in January 1931. It therefore falls under cl. (1) of S. 8 and the plaintiff will be entitled to a decree for the principal sum of Rs. 20,000, with interest at 6¼ per cent. per annum from 1st October 1937 till the date fixed for redemption, which will be three months hence, and subsequent interest at 6 per cent. The plaintiff will have full costs in the trial Court and also the costs in the appeal.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 199 of 1941, Decided on 28th August 1941, to revise decree of Dist. Munsif, Periyakulam, D/- 17th September 1940.

 Contract Act (1872), Ss. 128, 134 — Discharge of principal debtor by operation of law does not discharge surety — Surety cannot take advantage of partial discharge which principal debtor gets by Madras Agriculturists Relief Act.

A discharge of the principal debtor by operation of law does not discharge the surety : (1875) 10 Ch A 211; (1905) 1 K B 462 and ('21) 8 AIR 1921 Mad 236, Rel. on. [P 146*b*]

Therefore when a new statutory provision (like the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act) has had the effect of granting a partial discharge to the principal debtor and the creditor has taken no part in releasing the principal debtor from his liability, the remedy of the creditor against the guarantor will not be affected. Hence his relief against the guarantor should not be restricted to the amount of the debt as scaled down in the Act. [P 146*c*]

T. P. Gopalakrishna Ayyar — for Petitioner.

C. A. Mohamed Ibrahim and T. S. Santhanam — for Respondents.

Wadsworth J.—This civil revision petition arises out of a small cause suit on a promissory note executed by defendant 1, an agriculturist and guaranteed by defendant 2, a non-agriculturist. The letter of guarantee is in the following terms :

Please get a pronote from S. Chinnamuthu Batcha Rowther, the bearer of this letter and give Rs. 300. In the event of his not discharging it by paying principal and interest, I also shall be liable and pay the amount.

The debt of defendant 1 was only partially discharged and the suit was filed. Against defendant 1, the plaintiff gave effect to the defences open to him as an agriculturist and claimed only Rs. 95-9-0. Against defendant 2 the plaintiff claimed Rs. 157-14-4, the full amount due under the contract. In the lower Court defendant 2 successfully claimed that he was entitled to the benefit of the reduction of the principal debtor's liability by reason of the terms of S. 128, Contract Act. It is contended in the revision petition that this decision is wrong. Section 128, Contract Act, provides that the liability of the surety is co-extensive with that of the principal debtor unless it is otherwise provided by the contract. It cannot be contended that there is any special provision in the present contract making the liability of the guarantor different from the liability of the principal debtor. It is, however, argued that S. 128, Contract Act, lays down only the general principle governing the interpretation of contracts of guarantee and does not purport to govern the relations between the parties as a result of subsequent events after the contract has been entered into. Those, it is contended, are governed by the later sections such as Ss. 133, 134 and 135 and so on. It is also contended that though the release of the principal debtor by the act or omission of the creditor has the legal consequence of discharging the surety under S. 134, Contract Act, no such result follows when the discharge of the principal debtor is by operation of law. In support of this proposition reliance is placed on the leading case in (1875) 10 Ch A 211[1] where it was held that where the acceptor of a bill of exchange presents a petition for liquidation or composition under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and the creditors pass a resolution for liquidation or composition, the acceptor must be considered as discharged by operation of law, and the drawer is not thereby discharged from his liability. The rule enunciated in this decision has been set forth very clearly in another case in (1905) 1 K B 462,[2] where Bigham J., says :

I think in this case that the creditor is entitled to prove for the value of the guarantee that the debtor has given. It is said that because the principal debt is gone, therefore the liability under the guarantee to pay the interest on the debenture is also gone. I do not agree with that view. The principal debt is gone no doubt, but not by any act of the creditor. It is gone by operation of law. The principal debt will never be repaid, but in my opinion the obligation of the debtor to pay interest under his guarantee remains.

The same principle is laid down in Rowlett on Principal and Surety at p. 272. That the rule enunciated in (1875) 10 Ch A 211[1] applies to India has been recognized by a Bench of this Court in 44 Mad 381,[3] and it may be said that the principle underlying that rule is recognized in the two Insolvency Acts. Section 44, Provincial Insolvency Act, which is similar in its terms on this point to S. 45, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, enacts that :

> An order of discharge shall not release any person who at the date of the presentation of the petition was a partner or co-trustee with the insolvent, or was jointly bound or had made any joint contract with him or any person who was surety for him.

This provision seems to involve the assumption that notwithstanding the disappearance of the debt of the principal debtor, the liability of the surety continues and consequently it seems in effect to recognize the principle that a discharge of the principal debtor by operation of law does not discharge the surety. It is unnecessary to quote cases relating to guarantors of minor's debts and cases relating to debts barred as against the principal debtor but alive as against the surety. Though these cases may serve as indications that S. 128, Contract Act, is not intended to govern all future changes in the liabilities of the parties, yet the continuance of the guarantor's liability in such cases may be justified on special grounds. It is sufficient for the purpose of this case to hold that, when a new statutory provision has had the effect of granting a partial discharge to the principal debtor and the creditor has taken no part in releasing the principal debtor from his liability, the remedy of the creditor against the guarantor will not be affected.

It follows that the lower Court was wrong in restricting the relief as against defendant 2 to the amount of the debt as scaled down in the Act. The lower Court has also found that even if the view taken on the effect of S. 128, Contract Act, is wrong, defendant 2 can be made liable only for interest at 15 per cent. by reason of the terms of the Madras Debtors Protection Act. This finding is not questioned before us. In the result the revision petition is allowed with costs and the plaintiff will get a decree as against defendant 2 for the principal sum due with interest at 15 per cent. upto the date of the plaint and proportionate costs, with subsequent interest at six per cent., till realization. The decree as against defendant 1 stands.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 146 of 1941, Decided on 30th September 1941, to revise decree of Dist. Munsif, Repalle, in S. C. S. No. 340 of 1939.

Limitation Act (1908), Ss. 19 and 20— Pronote —Endorsement on—Amount paid towards pronote — Endorsement not valid under S. 20 but sufficient acknowledgment under S. 19.

Where a debtor pays a sum as a part payment of an interest bearing debt, without indicating whether the payment is towards interest or principal, in order to obtain a fresh period of limitation under S. 20, it is incumbent upon the creditor to appropriate the sum paid towards the principal before the expiration of the prescribed period of limitation. An unappropriated payment cannot avail the creditor under S. 20 as a payment towards interest as such or towards principal saving limitation. But when there is a part payment endorsed in such terms as to make it ineffective for the purposes of S. 20, it may by implication amount to an acknowledgment so as to save limitation under S. 19 : Case-law discussed. [P 147*a*, b]

The endorsement on a pronote was in the following words : "Paid on 15-9-1938 towards this promissory note Rs. 2":

Held that the endorsement though not valid under S. 20, saved limitation under S. 19. [P 147*c*; P 148*b*]

S. Sitaraman and V. Rangachari — for Petitioner.

M. S. Ramachandra Rao and Y. G. Krishnamurti — for Respondent.

Wadsworth J. — This civil revision petition is preferred by the defendant against a decree in a small cause suit based on a promissory note. Two questions were raised in revision, one relating to the scaling down of the decree under Madras Act, 4 of 1938 and the other relating to limitation. On the first point, it seems to us clear that the two earlier payments amounting to Rs. 125 must be treated as unappropriated payments available in reduction of principal as on 1st October 1937, so that the decree should have been one for Rs. 75 with interest at 6¼ per cent. from 1st October 1937, credit being given as on 15th September 1938 to the payment of Rs. 2.

Turning to the more difficult question relating to limitation, it is common ground that the suit filed on 11th November 1939 would have been barred by limitation unless limitation was saved by the endorsement of Rs. 2 on 15th September 1938. The promissory note was for a sum of Rs. 271-8-6 and the previously endorsed payments were for an amount of Rs. 125. Quite clearly therefore at the time when this payment of Rs. 2 was made a very considerable balance was due on the note. It is argued that the decision of the Privy Council in 21 Lah 470[1] governs the present case. The endorsement was in the following words: "Paid on 15-9-1938 towards this promissory note Rs. 2." The original Telugu word translated as 'towards' is 'kintha' which literally means 'under.' Now, the Privy Council decided in the case just referred to that where a debtor pays a sum as a part payment of an interest bearing debt, without indicating whether the payment is towards interest or principal, in order to obtain a fresh period of limitation under S. 20, Limitation Act, it is incumbent upon the creditor to appropriate the sum paid towards the principal before the expiration of the prescribed period of limitation. This decision is clearly authority for the view that an unappropriated payment, such as the payment of Rs. 2 in the present case, cannot avail the creditor under S. 20, Limitation Act, as a payment towards interest as such or towards principal saving limitation and all previous decisions which took a contrary view must be deemed to have been overruled.

It is, however, contended for the respondent that though this endorsement may not save limitation under S. 20, it can be deemed to be a sufficient acknowledgment of the debt so as to save limitation under S. 19. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case just quoted, though they referred to S. 19 in order to discuss its relation to S. 20, were not dealing with a case in which there was any pleading that the writing would be a sufficient acknowledgment under S. 19, even though the payment was not a payment falling under S. 20, and their Lordships do not consider whether such an alternative plea would have been open to the creditor in the case before them, had it been taken. We are therefore of opinion that the decision in 21 Lah 470[1] is authority neither for nor against the view that when there is a part payment endorsed in such terms as to make it ineffective for the purpose of S. 20, Limitation Act, it may by implication amount to such an acknowledgment as would save limitation under S. 19.

Now, there is a clear line of authority of this High Court for the view that when, as in the present case, there is a bond under which it can be seen by the words and the tenor of the document and the endorsements of payment that a considerable sum is due and when the debtor makes towards that bond a payment which is clearly less than the balance due, accompanying that payment with an endorsement to the effect that it is towards the debt in the bond or towards the note, it is legitimate to read the words of that endorsement together with the substance of the document upon which the endorsement was made and infer from the circumstances the fact that the writing of this endorsement is an acknowledgment of the subsistence of the debt after the payment endorsed. No doubt, a contrary view was taken in the very early case in 5 M H C R 90.[2] That decision was followed upon by the first Court in a case which came on appeal before a Bench, vide 17 M L T 80.[3] The learned Judges, who had to deal with a simple endorsement that a certain sum was paid in respect of the promissory note, held, following the decision at p. 78 of the same Vol. 17 M L T 78[4] that the endorsement signed by the promisor contained a sufficient acknowledgment of liability under the promissory note. This decision was followed by a single Judge in 17 M L T 139[5] and it has been followed more recently in 40 Mad 698.[6] It is true that in the last case there was an additional circumstance that the debtor endorsed two successive payments on the same day, the first of which must necessarily have been made with a knowledge that a balance was due, but the learned Judges expressly approved the earlier decisions and purported to follow the same principle. The decision in 40 Mad 698[6] has also been followed in Bombay in A I R 1939 Bom 252.[7] Against this line of authority, the only Madras decision to the contrary quoted before us, besides the early case in 5 M H C R 90[2] already referred to, is a very brief judgment in 9 M L T 216[8] which does not set forth the precise nature of the endorsement and does not contain any detailed discussion of the question.

No doubt where the matter is res integra, it might be contended that the endorsement of payment towards the promissory note on which according to the tenor of the document much more than the amount paid was outstanding at the time of payment would not necessarily imply an acknowledgment that the debt continued to subsist after the payment. It might be argued that the payment was made without a calculation of the balance due or it might be argued that the document might have been otherwise discharged by unendorsed payments. But it does not seem to us, in view of the authorities just cited, that these general arguments are now open to us. We are bound by the previous decisions and we must hold that the suit in the present case was not barred by limitation, having regard to the endorsement of 15th September 1938, which was expressly pleaded in the plaint as an acknowledgment saving limitation. The result, therefore, is that the civil revision petition is allowed to the extent that the decree will be modified as already indicated. The petitioner is entitled to half his costs in revision.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 1209 of 1939, Decided on 19th November 1940, to revise decree of Sub-Judge, Amalapuram, in S. C. S. No. 124 of 1936.

Madras Estates Land Act (1 of 1908, as amended by Act 8 of 1934), Ss. 124, 163 and 163A — Landlord purchasing ryoti holding at rent sale and subsequently obtaining possession — Suit for mesne profits against person in occupation between sale and delivery of possession—Procedure under S. 163 alone is available — Civil suit for different remedy with enhanced period of limitation is not maintainable — Nor is separate suit merely for mesne profits tenable.

Section 163 is intended to cover the usual case in which a person cultivates ryoti land on the implied understanding that he will, when asked to do so, pay the rent for it. Section 163A does not provide a machinery for collecting mesne profits from unauthorized occupants except as an incident of their eviction by suit. [P 149*a*,b]

Where the landlord purchases a ryoti holding at a revenue sale he can get delivery without suit by proceedings under S. 124. If he refrains from taking those proceedings, he must be taken to be prepared to accept the rent and damages which can be claimed under S. 163 from the actual occupant during the interval between the sale and delivery. A special remedy having been provided by the Act, whereby the landlord can recover compensation for unauthorized occupation of ryoti lands in cases where a suit for eviction is unnecessary, it is not possible to claim in the ordinary civil Courts a different remedy with an enhanced period of limitation for the same wrong or to bring a separate suit merely for mesne profits after having got possession without a suit. Order.—This revision petition arises out of the dismissal of a suit filed for mesne profits alleged to be due on land admittedly ryoti, situated within an estate under the Madras Estates Land Act, forming part of a holding which has been sold for arrears of rent. The facts are not very clear, but from the plaint it appears that defendants 1 to 8 in the suit were the pattadars and that there was a default and the plaintiff applied for sale and bought the land in revenue Court auction in two sales, one on 12th September 1931 and the other on 3rd June 1932. From the date of the sales defendants 9 to 17 were alleged to be cultivating the land and it is stated that this cultivation was without permission from the plaintiff. The landlord got possession of part of the land on 25th April 1933 and of the rest on 20th June 1933. Having got possession, the plaintiff waited for approximately three years and then filed the present suit in the civil Court claiming mesne profits from all the defendants for the period intervening between the sales and the deliveries. When objection was taken to the jurisdiction of the Court, the plaintiff appears to have given up the suit against all the other defendants and asked leave to confine his suit to the claim against defendant 17, whose legal representatives are the respondents here. Apparently, the idea was that this plaint, which clearly is based on the termination of a tenancy and a demand for mesne profits from the tenants and other persons in occupation, should be treated as having been ab initio based on the assertion of an unauthorized entry at some unknown date by one only of the defendants in circumstances entirely unconnected with the tenancy, so as to enable the plaintiff to treat him as a person whose occupation had never been either recognized or acquiesced in. Section 163, Madras Estates Land Act, provides the ordinary machinery whereby a landlord can recover rent and damages for unauthorized occupation of ryoti land. This section, though not very explicit, appears to be intended to cover the usual case in which a person cultivates ryoti land on the implied understanding that he will, when asked to do so, pay the rent for it. In the vast majority of cases, on such cultivation, the landlord's officials collect the usual rent and unless action is taken with reference to Expln. 3 to S. 6 (1), the occupant in time acquires occupancy rights. If, however, the landlord does not desire that the occupant should continue in occupation of this land, he may treat him as a trespasser, in which case, a machinery is provided under S. 163 (A) whereby a suit may be filed and the landlord may claim mesne profits and also damages which are to be assessed on the basis given in S. 163 and, therefore, must not exceed one year's rent, subject to the proviso that in respect of any year for which rent has actually been paid damages would not be payable.

As I read S. 163 (A), it is not intended to provide a machinery for collecting mesne profits from unauthorized occupants except as an incident of their eviction by suit. When, as in the present case, the landlord has bought in the property at a revenue sale either himself or through his agent, a machinery is provided whereby he can get delivery without suit, namely, by proceedings under S. 124. If he refrains from taking those proceedings, it is a reasonable inference that he is prepared to accept the rent and damages which can be claimed under S. 163 from the actual occupant during the interval between the sale and the delivery. I doubt very much whether he can abstain from taking action either under S. 124 or under S. 163 and file a suit under S. 163 (A), after possession has been surrendered, for, this section only relates to the eviction of persons who have not been admitted as ryots whereas, the ordinary case of a sale under the Estates Land Act would relate to a person who has been admitted as a ryot. Still less is it clear that the landlord, instead of recovering the rent and damages as laid down under S. 163, can treat S. 163 (A) as if it were split into two parts and having got possession without a suit can bring a separate suit merely for mesne profits. As I understand these sections, the underlying idea is that a person who has unauthorizedly occupied ryoti land and has not been evicted by a suit shall be liable to pay such sums as can be claimed under S. 163. A special remedy having been provided by the Act, whereby the landlord can recover compensation for unauthorized occupation of ryoti lands in cases where a suit for eviction is unnecessary, it is not to my mind possible to claim in the ordinary civil Courts a different remedy with an enhanced period of limitation for the same wrong. In any case, the present plaint, based as it is on an allegation of a terminated tenancy and a joint trespass by a large number of people, including the former tenants, does not contain such averments as would suffice to establish a claim of separate trespass by one only of these people under such circumstances as to take him out of the provisions of S. 163. The civil revision petition is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 2318 of 1939, Decided on 25th September 1941, to revise order of District Munsif, Gooty, D/- 21st August 1939.

 Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), Ss. 19, 9 — Agriculturist surety is entitled to benefit of procedure under S. 19 with reference to date on which his liability was incurred.

Since the surety is, for the purposes of execution, in the position of a judgment-debtor, there is no reason why he should not be given the benefit of the procedure laid down in S. 19 for agriculturist judgment-debtors to the limited extent of the reduction or scaling down of interest under the decree with reference to the appropriate section of the Act having regard to the date on which the liability of the surety himself was incurred: C. R. P. No. 1869 of 1939, Disting.; C. R. P. No. 1965 of 1939, Expl., and commented upon. [P 150*g*,h]

T. R. Arunachalam — for Petitioner.

K. S. Jayaram — for Respondents.

Wadsworth J. — The question in this civil revision petition is whether the petitioner, who gave a surety bond undertaking to satisfy any decree which might be passed against respondents 2 and 3, can be deemed to be a judgment-debtor entitled to scale down the decree which was ultimately passed, by the procedure laid down in S. 19, Madras Act, 4 of 1938. The matter arises out of a suit brought by respondent 1 against respondents 2 and 3 on two promissory notes, one dated 31st July 1929 and the other dated 27th June 1931. A decree was passed ex parte and subsequently there was an application to set aside the ex parte decree. The defendants were required to give security as a condition precedent to the setting aside of the decree and the present petitioner gave a bond on 4th July 1934 in which he undertook to satisfy any decree which might be passed against respondents 2 and 3. The ex parte decree was therefore set aside and the suit reopened and on 10th September 1934 a compromise decree was passed in favour of respondent 1 against respondents 2 and 3 for a sum of Rs. 603-10-0 with interest at 12 per cent. on Rs. 500 from the date of the plaint to the date of the decree and Rs. 83 costs and subsequent interest at 6 per cent. After this compromise decree was obtained, the decree-holder proceeded to execute the decree against the surety. The surety contended that he was not bound to satisfy the decree because it was based on a compromise. This contention was overruled both in the executing Court and in two appellate Courts. After the appeals had failed, the surety filed applications under Ss. 19 and 20 of Act 4 of 1938. The application under S. 19 was dismissed in limine on the ground that the surety was not a judgment-debtor entitled to maintain the application. Against this order the civil revision petition is preferred.

It is contended that by reason of S. 145, Civil P. C., the decree becomes executable against the surety and for purposes of execution he is in fact in exactly the same position as a judgment-debtor and that there is no reason why to the extent to which he is an agriculturist entitled to relief under Act 4 of 1938, he should not claim that relief by asking that the decree be scaled down under S. 19. Now it seems to us quite manifest that the surety, assuming that he is entitled to take proceedings under S. 19, must be limited to the relief which he can get with reference to the actual decree debt. But he cannot treat that decree as a renewal or inclusion in a fresh document of a previous debt due from himself and therefore there is no occasion for going into the origin of the two promissory notes upon which the decree was passed. The surety executed his bond in 1934 and it was in 1934 that the liability against him first became crystallised in the form of the decree which he had undertaken to satisfy. The liability of the surety therefore falls under S. 9 of Act 4 of 1938 and the proviso to that section has no bearing on the case.

Under S. 7, all debts payable by an agriculturist at the commencement of the Act must be scaled down in accordance with the provisions of the chapter, notwithstanding any law, custom, contract or decree of Court to the contrary. From this it follows that on the admission that the surety is an agriculturist, he is entitled to a remission of interest on the decree debt to the extent laid down in part 1 of S. 9. The only question is, what is the procedure by which the relief shall be given. Two courses might be open. It might be possible for the surety to plead in bar of execution the statutory relief to which he has become entitled; or it might be open to the surety to claim to be treated as a judgment-debtor and to get the decree amended under S. 19 by the Court which passed the decree, by the reduction of interest in accordance with S. 9. The respondents here have relied upon two judgments of a single Judge which seem to suggest that the proper procedure is by pleading the Act in bar of execution. The two cases are C. R. Ps. Nos. 1965 of 1939 and 1869 of 1939. We think the latter case has no bearing because it was a case in which the surety was a non-agriculturist. The former case does contain an observation that the surety cannot apply to have the decree amended under S. 19 though he might have a right to a reduction of interest on the amount treating it as a debt under S. 9. But the question really agitated in that case was not the procedure whereby the surety could get the decree for interest reduced, but the right of the surety to apply under S. 19 to get the substantive liability scaled down on the basis of the antecedent debt. To the extent to which the observations in C. R. P. No. 1965 of 1939 appear to indicate that the procedure under S. 19 is not available to an agriculturist-surety, against whom a decree is being executed, to get the interest embodied in the decree reduced, we are of opinion that they are misleading. Since the surety is, for the purposes of execution, in the position of a judgment-debtor, we see no reason why he should not be given the benefit of the procedure laid down in S. 19 for agriculturist judgment-debtors to the limited extent of the reduction or scaling down of interest under the decree with reference to the appropriate section of the Act having regard to the date on which the liability of the surety himself was incurred. In the present case, the matter is simple. Both the bond and the decree came into being in the course of 1934. It follows that the surety is entitled to the benefit of part 1 of S. 9; that is to say, the amount of the debt both for costs and for the substantive portion of the decree will bear interest not at the rate of 6 per cent. as laid down in the decree but at a the rate of 5 per cent. with effect from the date of the decree to 22nd March 1938, subsequent interest being at the decree rate of 6 per cent.

The decree will be amended accordingly. As the petitioner has failed in his attempt to go behind the decree and scale down his liability with reference to the original notes, we think it proper to order that each party should bear his own costs.

Judgment. — This second appeal arises out of an application made by a mortgagee-decree-holder for a personal decree under O. 34, R. 6, Civil P. C., against defendant 2. The relevant facts are these. The appellant who is the mortgagee obtained a preliminary decree for sale of the property mortgaged to him on 16th August 1929. A final decree was d also passed on 10th December 1930. The mortgaged property was brought to sale on 27th August 1934 and the sale was confirmed on 29th September 1934. But defendant 2 who was adjudicated insolvent on 21st July 1933 after the final decree was passed obtained an order of absolute discharge on 10th August 1934. This application for a personal decree against defendant 2 was made on 28th September 1937. Both the lower Courts have taken the view that the order of absolute discharge precludes any relief being granted to the appellant. The question is whether this view is sound. On this point there is a conflict between Lahore and Nagpur High Courts on the one hand and Allahabad High Court on the other. In A I R 1938 Lah 217[1] e it was held that the personal liability under a mortgage is a debt provable in insolvency within the meaning of S. 44 (2), Provincial Insolvency Act, and therefore by the order of absolute discharge this liability has been discharged. This view has been followed by the Nagpur High Court in I L R (1940) Nag 512.[2] But the Allahabad High Court has taken a different view. In 54 ALL 428[3] the reason for the view is thus stated :

> The order of discharge has no more effect upon the right of the secured creditor than the order of adjudication. Under S. 45 (2) (of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 3 of 1909 corresponding to S. 44 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act) an order of discharge shall release the insolvent from all f debts provable in insolvency. The debt due to a secured creditor is not a debt provable in insolvency. The order of adjudication and the subsequent order of discharge cannot affect the rights of the secured creditor which flow from the mortgage contract.

This view has been again followed in I L R (1939) ALL 492.[4] With due respect to the learned Judges, I am not able to agree with this view. Under S. 34 (2), Provincial Insolvency Act, all debts and liabilities, present or future, certain or contingent, to which the debtor is subject when he is adjudged an insolvent or to which he may become subject before his discharge by reason of any obligation incurred before the date g of such adjudication, shall be deemed to be debts provable under this Act. Therefore, the liability to pay the deficit arising after the sale of the property mortgaged in virtue of the personal covenant or obligation which the mortgagor enters into under the deed of mortgage will be a debt provable within the meaning of S. 34 (2). It was a liability to which defendant 2 will become subject by reason of the obligation incurred before the date of his adjudication. That such a liability is a debt provable in insolvency is clear from S. 47 of the Act. Under that section, it is open to a secured creditor to adopt any of the three courses specified therein, namely, h (1) he can realise the security and prove for the balance due to him; (2) he can relinquish the security and prove for the whole debt; and (3) he can value the security at a particular amount and then prove for the balance.

This therefore clearly indicates that the liability of a mortgagor under a deed of mortgage is a debt which the mortgagee can prove in insolvency. It is open to him, as S. 47 (1) provides, to wait until the security is realised and prove for the balance when it is ascertained, but he takes the risk of not getting any dividend if the insolvent obtains an order of discharge by that date, by reason of the liability being extinguished under S. 44 (2). If he wants to avoid this risk he ought to take advantage of cls. (2) and (3). I am therefore inclined to follow the view of the Lahore and Nagpur High Courts in preference to that of the Allahabad High Court.

Mr. Venkatarama Ayyar contends that by virtue of S. 28 (6) the rights of the secured creditor are not affected by the order of adjudication and one of such rights is to get a personal decree for the balance due under a personal covenant in the deed of security and therefore his right to get such a decree remains unaffected by the order of discharge. All that S. 28 (6) says is that the right of a secured creditor to realise the moneys due to him from and out of the security is not affected. But the liability due under the deed of mortgage is nevertheless a debt in respect whereof the secured creditor has to adopt the procedure in insolvency before he can get any dividend and in respect whereof he is subject to the other provisions of the Insolvency Act. Stone C. J. in I L R (1940) Nag 512[2] at p. 516 after mentioning the three courses open to secured creditors under S. 47 observed thus :

> If instead of taking one or the other of these courses he simply ignores the insolvency, then, as above observed, he is limited to his security, the reason being that a mortgagee with a mortgage containing a personal covenant is a secured creditor so far as the mortgage transaction is concerned and an ordinary creditor so far as the personal covenant is concerned.

I respectfully agree with this observation. In the result the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Leave to appeal refused.

Order. — This is a reference made to me on the correct court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal presented against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Devakottai in O. S. No. 69 of 1939 on his file. The plaintiff sued to recover a sum of Rupees 18,897-0-9 from the defendant as a first charge from and out of the properties possessed by him namely the separate properties inherited by his father and the joint family properties which he and his father possessed and which on the death of his father he got by survivorship. The defendant is the minor son of the plaintiff. Her case was that her stridhanam property was entrusted by her father to her husband, the defendant's father, on trust, that he agreed to hold such property in trust for her, to improve it and return it to her when she was in need of it, that he mixed it with his own assets both separate and joint family and that therefore the defendant was bound to return her money from and out of the said assets and that she has got a first charge on them. The learned Subordinate Judge gave a decree for the amount claimed but declined to give a first charge as prayed for. The plaintiff has preferred this memorandum of appeal against the decree disallowing her prayer in respect of the first charge and seeks in this appeal to get a charge on the said assets which she has valued in the memorandum of appeal at Rs. 9500.

The appellant has paid a court-fee of Rs. 100 on the memorandum of appeal on the ground that the relief is incapable of valuation. The Office and the Taxing Master felt a doubt as to whether the relief can be said to be incapable of valuation and accordingly referred the matter to me. Before the Taxing Master reliance was placed on a decision of mine in 1937 M W N 672 (same as A I R 1937 Mad 840)[1] and Mr. Rajah Iyer who appeared for the appellant relied on the same decision before me. The contention of Mr. Rajah Iyer is that under S. 23, Trusts Act, his client is entitled to get a charge on the assets, both separate and joint family property of the father which had come into the hands of the defendant, that the decree that has been given by the lower Court is admittedly executable against the said assets, that there is no dispute as to the amount payable to the plaintiff nor as to the liability of the said assets in the hands of the defendant but that the plaintiff is only seeking to establish her preferential right to be paid out of the said assets and that that right is incapable of valuation. After listening to his arguments I am of opinion that his contention is not sound. It cannot be said that the relief is incapable of valuation. The plaintiff is seeking to make all the said assets liable to the extent of Rs. 18,897 odd and therefore there is no question about the extent of the liability sought to be imposed on the said assets. Again, so far as the assets are concerned, it cannot be said that they are incapable of valuation. The assets have got a money value and are capable of valuation. In I L R (1937) Mad 980[2] following 13 C W N 815[3] it was pointed out that the word 'estimate' in Art. 17 (b) Court-fees Act, involves the idea of approximation and all that is necessary is that the subject-matter should be capable of being approximately and by no means accurately valued. The plaintiff has valued the assets approximately in the sum of Rs. 9500. This case in my opinion is governed by the principle of the Full Bench decision in 30 Mad 96.[4] It was a case which arose out of a suit upon a mortgage and the decree which was granted by the trial Court exonerated certain properties from the decree on the ground that the mortgage was not binding on the said properties. The appellant by his memorandum of appeal sought to make the said properties also liable. The decree that was granted by the Court in favour of the plaintiff was for a sum of Rs. 9420 but he valued the properties sought to be charged at Rs. 4000. The question that arose was, what is the court-fee payable? The learned Judges held that primarily court-fee should be paid upon the amount of the decree but inasmuch as the properties were worth only Rs. 4000 it would be enough if he paid court-fee on Rs. 4000. The reasons for their conclusion were given thus :

> The amount of the decree is not in dispute. The liability of the lands other than the lands claimed by defendants 6 to 9 is not in dispute. The question in dispute is the liability of the lands claimed by defendants 6 to 9 to be proceeded against for the debt. If the plaintiff succeeds in the appeal he will no doubt be entitled to proceed against the lands claimed by defendants 6 to 9 for the satisfaction of the whole debt but he can only recover the sale proceeds of these lands. The lands have been valued at Rs. 4000 and unless this valuation is successfully impeached by the respondents it must .... be taken as the value of the subject-matter in dispute in this appeal.

I would follow this decision and hold in this case that court-fee is payable on the sum of Rs. 9500 the value which the plaintiff-appellant has placed on the assets. My decision in 1937 M W N 672[1] on which reliance was placed is not applicable to the facts of this case. As pointed out by me in that case there were two mortgages on the property and the question was one of priority. The amount of the decree in that case was not disputed and the liability of the property in respect of both the mortgages was not disputed and there was an order for sale. The decree directed that the amount payable in respect of one mortgage should be paid first and that the amount due under the other mortgage should be paid later. The question of priority was the only question in dispute and I held that the relief for declaration was enough and can be valued as such. I also pointed out that even if I was not correct in the view I took, having regard to the form of the decree in that case it could be said that the relief was one which was incapable of valuation. This decision is therefore distinguishable. In the result I direct the appellant to pay the deficit court-fee as required by the office note, i. e., the court-fee payable on Rs. 9500 the value fixed by her less the sum of Rs. 100 already paid by her. Time for payment is four weeks. In the course of the argument I suggested that it would be better to have a specification of the assets both from the point of view of valuation and from the point of view of the Court being able to define the charge with reference to specific property at the time of the passing of the decree. No statement has been filed but I give leave to the appellant to do so at the time of payment of the additional court-fee ordered here. I fix the Government Pleader's costs at Rs. 35 which he is entitled to realise from Government.

Second Appeal No. 167 of 1939, Decided on 19th September 1941, against decree of Sub-Judge, Tuticorin, in A. S. No. 113 of 1937.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 66—Applicability — Decree for arrears of rent — Sale in execution of by revenue Court under Madras Estates Land Act — S. 66 does not apply.

Section 66 only applies to purchases made and sale certificates issued under the rules contained in Sch. 1, Civil P. C., which makes provision for sales b in execution of decrees and issue of sale certificates for purchases made at those sales. A person who is not claiming title under a purchase certified by the Court under any of the rules framed under the Code would not be protected under S. 66 : ('37) 24 A I R 1937 All 176, Rel. on; 14 M I A 496 (P C), Ref. [P 155*a*]

The Madras Estates Land Act itself provides the procedure for the sale of immovable property in execution of decrees for rent and therefore that procedure has to be followed and not the procedure prescribed in the Civil Procedure Code. Therefore, the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code so far as they relate to the sale of immovable property and the issue of sale certificate to a purchaser at such a sale must be deemed to be inconsistent with the provisions of the Madras Estates Land Act within the meaning of S. 192 of that Act as amended by c Act 8 of 1934 : ('27) 14 A I R 1927 Mad 1035, Rel. on. [P 155*h*]

Consequently S. 66, Civil P. C., cannot apply to sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent by a revenue Court under the provisions of the Madras Estates Land Act : ('28) 15 A I R 1928 P C 75, Disting. [P 156*b*]

A. Swaminatha Iyer and S. Thyagarajan — for Appellants.

C. S. Rajappa — for Respondent.

Judgment.—The question for decision in this appeal is whether the plaintiffs are precluded by S. 66, Civil P. C., from praying for a declaration that defendant 4 has no right to item 1 of the property in the schedule to the plaint in the suit out of which d this appeal arises. The relevant facts are few and may be briefly stated. Defendants 1 and 2 executed a deed of mortgage dated 18th July 1924 in favour of the plaintiffs' undivided father, one Ramasami Maniagarar. Five items of property were mortgaged thereunder and they are items 1 to 5 of the schedule to the plaint. Item 1 was brought to sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent by the revenue Court and purchased by defendant 4 on 4th July 1934. The present suit has been filed by the plaintiffs, sons of the said Ramasami Maniagarar, to recover a sum of Rs. 150 as being the balance due under the said mortgage. In the plaint they allege that item 1 though purchased by de- e fendant 4, was really for their (plaintiffs') benefit, that at the time of the purchase defendant 4 was acting as kariasthan or manager of their property, that the property was purchased with their funds for a sum of Rs. 300, that ever since the date of the purchase they have been in possession of the property and enjoying the profits thereof and paying kist on the same, that they have given credit in the suit for the value of the said item and only prayed for a decree for the balance and that since defendant 4 is setting up title thereto they have impleaded him and prayed for a declaration in regard to that item and for a sale of the remaining f items of the hypotheca, namely, items 2 to 5 of the plaint schedule. Defendant 4 denied that the purchase was on their behalf but asserted it was only for his benefit and that in any event under S. 66, Civil P. C., the plaintiffs are not entitled to the declaration prayed for. So far as the mortgage was concerned, there is no defence by defendants 1 to 3 and there was a decree as prayed for. But the learned District Munsif dismissed the suit against defendant 4 on the ground that S. 66 precludes the plaintiffs from asking for a declaration of right in respect of item 1. On appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge g confirmed his judgment taking the same view. The question therefore is whether this view is tenable.

Two contentions were raised by Mr. Thyagarajan Ayyar on behalf of the plaintiffs. (1) The property having been purchased in a sale in execution of a rent decree, S. 66, Civil P. C., is not applicable and it would not prevent the plaintiffs from pleading that the purchase was for their benefit. (2) Assuming that S. 66 applied, defendant 4 having been the kariasthan for the plaintiffs who were on the date of the purchase, and are still, minors, with their funds, under cl. (2) h of that section, the purchase must be deemed to have been made fraudulently or without their consent and therefore they are entitled to the declaration prayed for. I shall now deal with the first contention, viz., the applicability of S. 66 to sales in execution of decrees for rent by a revenue Court. Section 66 (1) runs thus :

> No suit shall be maintained against any person claiming title under a purchase certified by the Court in such manner as may be prescribed on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff or on behalf of some one through whom the plaintiff claims.

The section deals with a purchase certified by the Court in such manner as may be prescribed. Prescribed has been defined in the Civil Procedure Code as "prescribed by the rules." Rules are defined as meaning "rules and forms contained in Sch. 1 or made under S. 122 or S. 125, Civil P. C." Prima facie, therefore, the section only applies to purchases made and sale certificates issued under the rules contained in Sch. 1, Civil P. C., which make provision for sales in execution of decrees and issue of sale certificates for purchases made at those sales. As pointed out by Sulaiman C. J. in I L R (1937) ALL 113[1] at page 121 :

> A person who is not claiming title under a purchase certified by the Court under any of the rules framed under the Code would not be protected under S. 66, Civil P. C.

The section has been construed strictly and their Lordships of the Judicial Committee very early indicated the policy underlying the said section in construing a corresponding provision (S. 260) in Act 8 of 1859 (14 M I A 496[2] at p. 522).

> It is well known that benami purchases are common in India, and that effect is given to them by the Courts according to the real intention of the parties. The Legislature has not, by any general measure, declared such transactions to be illegal; and, therefore they must still be recognized, and effect given to them by the Courts, except so far as positive enactment stands in the way, and directs a contrary course. The enactments relied on by the plaintiffs are found in a Code professing to deal, not with rights, but with remedies, and procedure to enforce rights. The only express enactment on the subject occurs in S. 260. . . . . This enactment is clear and definite; there is nothing from which it can be inferred that more is meant than is expressed. (The italics are mine).

The question, therefore, is whether the purchase by defendant 4 can be said to be one certified by the Court under any of the rules framed under the Civil Procedure Code. If it is not, the section will not apply. The provisions which are applicable to sale of property in execution of decrees passed by a revenue Court for rent are to be found in Chap. 6, Madras Estates Land Act, because it is admitted that the decree was passed by a revenue Court under the provisions of that Act. Section 132 of the Act provides that the provisions of the said chapter shall be applicable as far as may be, to the execution by a revenue Court of any decree for arrears of rent and Ss. 111 to 131 deal with the procedure for sale of holdings. Section 124 provides for the issue of a sale certificate. Section 124 (2) provides that on the expiration of 45 days from the date of sale as specified in the notification under sub-s. (3) of S. 123, the Collector shall grant a certificate of sale to the purchaser if no application has been made to set aside the sale under S. 131 of the Act. Therefore the sale certificate in the present case must be deemed to have been issued under the provisions of that section. Thus it is clear that the procedure followed in a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent is that provided by the said Act and the sale certificate is issued under that Act and prima facie, therefore, in this case neither the sale was made nor the certificate issued under the rules in Sch. 1, Civil P. C. There. fore S. 66 would have no application to the sale in question. But the view taken by both the lower Courts and which is pressed before me by the learned counsel for the respondent is that under S. 192, Madras Estates Land Act, S. 66 must be deemed to have been made applicable to such sales and therefore that section operates as a bar to the plaintiffs getting the relief they claim. The material portions in Sec. 192 are as follows:

> (1) The (Provincial Government) may from time to time make rules consistent with this Act declaring that any provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, shall not apply to suits, applications, appeals, or other proceedings under this Act in any civil or revenue Court or to any specified classes of such suits, applications, appeals or proceedings . . . or shall apply to them subject to modifications and additions specified in the rules. (2) Subject to any rules so made and subject also to the other provisions of this Act and the following modifications and additions, the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, shall apply to all such suits.

The contention is that the local Government has not made any rules declaring that S. 66 does not apply and, therefore, under cl. (2) of that section, it must be taken that S. 66 is made applicable to a sale in execution of a decree of a revenue Court. But the contention omits to take notice of the fact that the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code are only made applicable subject to the provisions of the Act and so far as the provisions of the Code are not inconsistent therewith. Where the Act itself provides the procedure for the sale of immovable property in execution of decrees for rent that procedure has to be followed and not the procedure prescribed in the Civil Procedure Code. Therefore, the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code so far as they relate to the sale of immovable property and the issue of sale certificate to a purchaser at such a sale must be deemed to be inconsistent with the provisions of the Act. This is the view taken by a Division Bench of this Court in 51 Mad 76[3]: vide the observations of Jackson J. at p. 82. Reliance is placed on the decision of the Privy Council reported in 54 M L J 462,[4] where S. 66 was held, by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, to be applicable to a sale held in execution of a decree for arrears of revenue by a Collector. The sale was held under the provisions of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act (18 of 1881). On a reference to the provisions of that Act, it will be seen that S. 109 distinctly provides that where immovable property is sold under that Act, the rules prescribed in Ss. 287, 288, 293 and 306 to 316, Civil P. C., 1882, corresponding to O. 21, Rr. 66, 71, 84 to 94 in Sch. 1, Civil P. C. of 1908 should be followed. Therefore as the sale was held and certificate issued in pursuance of the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code their Lordships applied S. 66 of that Code.

It seems to me therefore that S. 66 is not applicable to sales in execution of a decree for arrears of rent by a revenue Court under the provisions of the Madras Estates Land Act. In regard to the second contention both the Courts hold that as there was no allegation in the plaint that the name of defendant 4 was inserted in the certificate fraudulently or without the consent of the real purchaser the application of S. 66(2) does not arise. On a reference to the plaint I find the only allegation is that the property was purchased by defendant 4 for the benefit of the plaintiffs. In the view I have taken in regard to the first contention relating to the applicability of S. 66, Civil P. C., I think it unnecessary to deal with this point. In the result I set aside the decrees of both the lower Courts so far as item 1 is concerned and remand the suit for hearing to the District Munsif of Koilpatti on issue 4. In the circumstances of this case I direct each party to bear his own costs throughout. The appellants will be entitled to the refund of court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal both here and in the lower appellate Court. Leave to appeal is refused.

LEACH C. J. AND HORWILL J.

M. Ethirajulu Naidu — Appellant

v.

A. Ranganatham Chetty and others — Respondents.

Appeal No. 57 of 1938, Decided on 18th September 1940, from judgment and decree of Venkataramana Rao J., in C. S. No. 41 of 1933, D/- 11th May 1938.

(a) Lessor and Lessee — Lessee to construct building on land leased —Lessor to pay market value of building at time of resuming possession — Method of valuation — Value of building must be taken to be constructional value — No special value can be placed by reason of building being cinema hall.

Where the contract between the parties stipulates that the price to be paid by the lessor for the building erected by the lessee on the leased land should be according to the market value of the building at the time the lessor resumed possession, the proper method in valuing the building is to find out the cost of reproducing the building and then to allow for depreciation and cost of repairs in the absence of a stipulation to the contrary. No special value can be placed upon the building by reason of its being a cinema hall : ('39) 26 A I R 1939 P C 235, Rel. on. [P 158 c,d,e]

(b) Mesne profits — Lease of land — Lessor to be entitled to building erected by lessee on payment of market value at time of resuming possession — Landlord not to resume possession until value paid —Amount offered reasonable — Lessee must be treated as trespasser — Landlord is entitled to mesne profits—Amount offered ridiculously inadequate —Lessee cannot be treated as trespasser and is not liable for mesne profits — Court allowing lessor rent for occupation and ordering him to pay value of building fixed by it to lessee within fixed time — Court cannot allow interest in default.

Where on the expiry of the lease the lessor is to be entitled to the building erected by the lessee on the leased land on payment of the market value of the building but is not to resume possession until the value is paid, the lessee must be treated as a trespasser if he had refused a reasonable offer for the building at the expiration of the lease and therefore is liable for mesne profits. [P 157*f*; P 158*h*]

But if the amount offered by the lessor was ridiculously inadequate the lessee cannot be treated as a trespasser liable for mesne profits and his occupation must be deemed to have continued on the basis of the rent fixed by the contract between the parties. In such a case where the Court allows the lessor rent for occupation on the basis fixed by the contract between the parties and orders him to pay a certain sum fixed by it as the value of the building to the lessee within a fixed time, the Court is not entitled to direct that the sum should carry interest in the event of default in payment as ordered. A. Viswanatha Ayyar and T. S. Muthuswami — for Appellant.

K. Rajah Ayyar and A. Subramaniam — for Respondents.

Leach C. J.—The appellant is the owner of a plot of land in Thatha Muthiappan Street, George Town, Madras. On 18th October 1912 the appellant leased this land to the respondents for a period of ten years. The respondents acquired the lease for the purpose of building thereon a hall which was intended to be used for dramatic performances. At the time the lease was entered into, there was a building on the land, but this the respondents demolished and erected in its stead a new building, which was used for dramatic performances and for cenematograph entertainments. On the expiration of this lease the appellant granted to the respondents a new lease for another period of ten years from 1st October 1922. Clause 4 of the second lease reads as follows :

> The lessee shall always and in any event be entitled to be paid the price of the superstructure built on the said plot of land before he surrenders possession of the land either on the expiry of the lease hereby granted or any other future lease or at any time. The price shall be fixed according to the market value of the buildings as at the time of ascertainment and payment.

Therefore, when the respondents' right to occupy the land expired, the appellant was to be entitled to the building on it, provided he paid to the respondents the market value. This had to be paid before the respondents surrendered possession. This factor has an important bearing on one of the questions raised in this appeal. The second lease was not renewed and the appellant became entitled to the possession of the property on payment to the respondents of the value of the building which now stands upon the land. He tendered to the respondents the sum of Rs. 3000 as representing its market value. This was not accepted and on 25th January 1933 the appellant filed on the original side of this Court the suit out of which this appeal arises. He prayed for a decree for possession, for payment to him of Rupees 2900 (the amount which he claimed to be due as mesne profits upto the date of the filing of the suit) ; and for payment of future mesne profits at the rate of Rs. 725 per mensem. The respondents contested the appellant's right to possession of the land. They contended that by virtue of the Madras City Tenants Protection Act of 1921, which came into force on 21st February 1922 they were entitled to a conveyance of the land on payment to the appellant of a sum representing the value of the building. The respondents also contended that the appellant could not in any event obtain a decree for possession until he had paid Rs. 100,000, which the respondents alleged was the true value of the building. The suit was tried by Wadsworth J. who held that the Madras City Tenants Protection Act did not apply and that the appellant was entitled to a decree for possession. Having decided this question, the learned Judge directed the Official Referee to hold an inquiry into the value of the superstructure. A preliminary decree was passed in accordance with this judgment and an appeal was then filed. The appellate Court concurred in the opinion expressed by Wadsworth J., that the Madras City Tenants Protection Act did not apply. The respondents then appealed to the Privy Council, but there also failed. The judgment of the Judicial Committee was delivered on the 10th October 1939.

With regard to the appellant's contention that he was entitled to recover mesne profits from the respondents, Wadsworth J. said that this question depended on whether the respondents were in wrongful possession of the property and he considered that they could not be held to be in wrongful possession if the amount of compensation offered by the appellant, namely, Rs. 3000, was "ridiculously inadequate." If, on the other hand, the amount offered approximated to the true value of the superstructure the respondents would be wrong in refusing to deliver possession to the appellant, and consequently they would render themselves liable for mesne profits. With these observations the learned Judge left the question of liability to mesne profits to be decided after the property had been valued. The inquiry conducted by the Official Referee proved to be a lengthy one and his order was not passed until 4th March 1938. The Official Referee found that the value of the superstructure was Rs. 18,000. This findings was challenged by both sides. The appellant said it was far too much and the respondents said it was far too little. The objections to the Official Referee's report were heard by Venkataramana Rao J. who, on 11th May 1938, held that the value was Rs. 20,400. The learned Judge directed the appellant within three months to deposit the amount into Court or to pay it to the respondents. In default of payment, the amount was to carry interest at six per cent. per annum from the date of default. The learned Judge also held that the appellant was entitled to set off against this sum, Rs. 100 per mensem from 1st October 1932 upto the date of payment as "the rent due and payable" for the occupation of the premises. On 10th October 1938 the appellant paid into Court Rs. 20,400, but pending the decision of the Privy Council the respondents obtained a stay of that part of the decree requiring them to give possession the appellant. It was made a condition of the stay that the respondents should pay into Court a sum of Rs. 900 every month as security for the mesne profits which the appellant might be entitled to. The appellant obtained possession of the property on 1st August 1940.

The present appeal is from the decision of Venkataramana Rao J. In the first place the appellant says that the learned Judge should not have valued the building at more than Rs. 14,000. In the second place, he says that he is entitled to mesne profits from the date of the expiry of the lease, namely 1st October 1932 to 1st August 1940 when possession was obtained. He also advances the contention that the learned Judge should not have awarded any interest on the Rs. 20,400. The respondents have filed a memorandum of cross-objections. They contend that the learned Judge should have valued the building at the sum of Rs. 50,000. In holding that the value of the building was Rs. 20,400 that is Rs. 2400 more than the value placed upon it by the Official Referee, Venkataramana Rao J. said that if the landlord were to erect a pucca building on the site, some time would be taken to construct it and he would during the interval be deprived of the present user and the income derived therefrom. Therefore the learned Judge was not inclined to allow any sum for depreciation. We find ourselves unable to agree that this is a valid reason for refusing to allow for depreciation. The contract between the parties stipulated that the price to be paid should be according to the market value of the building at the time the landlord resumed possession. In valuing the building at rupees 18,000, the Official Referee had regard to the cost of reproducing the building and then allowed for depreciation and cost of repairs, a method of which the Privy Council approved in (1939) 2 M L J 722.[1] No authority has been cited which lends support to the decision of the learned Judge that there ought to be no deduction for depreciation.

While accepting the applicability of the principle referred to in (1939) 2 M L J 722[1] Mr. Rajah Ayyar on behalf of the respondents, has contended that regard should also be had to the fact that this building can be let out as a cinema hall at a monthly rent of Rs. 800. In our opinion that was never in the contemplation of the parties and is not a factor which should be taken into consideration in a case where a person is allowed to build on another's land on the understanding that when his right of occupation to that land has expired the building shall become the property of the landowner on payment of its value as a building. Unless there is some stipualtion to the contrary, it seems to us that value must be the constructional value of the building. Any figure in excess of that value must be attributable to the site, not to the building. A building which is favourably situated will fetch more in rent than a similar building which is not well situated. Mr. Rajah Ayyar has conceded that if a special value is not to be placed on the building by reason of its being a cinema hall he cannot object to the finding of the Official Referee that its value is Rs. 18,000. With regard to the value of the building, it only remains to consider whether the Official Referee was right in his conclusion that Rs. 18,000 was the fair price to be paid. After a a careful examination of the evidence the Official Referee considered that the cost of the erection would be Rs. 20,000, but it would be proper to allow a deduction of ten per cent. for depreciation. Mr. Viswanatha Ayyar does not object to the finding that the constructional value was Rs. 20,000, but he says that there should be a greater amount allowed for depreciation. He asks that a third of the amount should be deducted on this ground. We consider that this is far too much and that the Official Referee was right in allowing a deduction of ten per cent.

The next point to be considered is whether the learned Judge was right in allowing the appellant a sum of Rs. 100 per mensem by way of rent instead of an amount for mesne profits. If the appellant is entitled to mesne profits he would certainly be entitled to more than Rs. 100 per mensem, because for many years the building was let at a rent of Rs. 700 per mensem and later at Rs. 800 per mensem. The appellant can only claim mesne profits if the respondents are to be regarded as trespassers. As did Venkataramana Rao J., we agree with Wadsworth J. that the respondents could only be treated as being in wrongful possession if they had refused a reasonable offer for the building at the expiration of the lease. No reasonable offer was made. The offer of Rs. 3000 was "ridiculously inadequate." The appellant should have made an offer in the neighbourhood of Rs. 18,000. As I have already pointed out the contract contemplated that the respondents should remain in possession until the market value of the building had been paid. It was not paid until 10th October 1938 and as no reasonable offer was made in the meantime the respondents cannot be regarded as trespassers and in the circumstances that the respondents' occupation must be deemed to have continued on the basis fixed by the contract, namely on payment of Rs. 100 per mensem. This, of course, does not apply after the stay was granted. The position since then will be governed by the conditions of the stay. The only other question for consideration is whether Venkataramana Rao J. was right in holding that the sum of Rs. 20,400, which he regarded as the value of the building, should carry interest at 6 per cent. in the event of default in payment within three months of his order. Inasmuch as the learned Judge directed the respondents to pay Rs. 100 a month for their occupation of the land he was not entitled to direct that the Rs. 20,400 should carry interest. This objection must be upheld. The decree on the original side will be modified to the extent indicated. As the appellant has failed in the main and as the respondents have failed entirely, we make no order as to costs in this Court.

Nargesh Kikishru Chinoy Nee Nargesh Dorabji Tarapore — Respondent.

Matrimonial Suit No. 3 of 1941 (Application No. 1360 of 1941), Decided on 25th July 1941; application for revocation of order in Appln. No. 65 of 1941, D/- 6th February 1941.

(a) Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act (1936), Ss. 29 (3) and 47—Leave granted under S. 29 (3) —Remedy of aggrieved party is to appeal under S. 47 and not to apply for revocation under O. 13, R. 14 (a), Madras High Court Original Side Rules.

The appellate provision in S. 47 (b) of the 1936 Act is a new provision which expressly gives a remedy by appeal in regard to the grant by the Court of leave to present proceedings under S. 29 (3). This provision is in conflict with the provisions in O. 13, R. 14 (a) of the Original Side Rules of the High Court which provides a remedy for revocation of leave to sue by means of an application to the Judge and in consequence the statutory provision in S. 47 (b) must prevail. Therefore the remedy open to a party aggrieved by an order granting leave under S. 29 (3) is to avail of the provisions of S. 47 (b) and not to apply under the rule of the original side which has no application to the Matrimonial Court. [P 160*e*,f]

(b) Practice — Written statement — No steps taken for long time after notice of suit—Extension of time for filing written statement not to be granted.

The respondent took no steps at all until more than two months had elapsed after he was informed of the filing of the suit when he initiated some other proceeding which went against him. Subsequently he applied for extension of time for filing his written statement :

Held that he could not be granted extension of time. [P 160*g*,h]

Order. — This is an application by the respondent in a petition presented pursuant to the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act 3 of 1936. In the application the applicant seeks to obtain revocation of the order giving leave to the petitioner to present her proceedings in this Court, the grounds being that the balance of convenience will be met by the proceeding being presented in a Court nearer to the Punjab where the respondent says he is residing. This Court is not the High Court sitting in its original jurisdiction. It is the Parsi Chief Matrimonial Court which is constituted under the provisions of Ss. 18 and 19, Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act, 1936. The application on the face of it purports to have been issued under O. 13, R. 14 (f) of the Rules of the Original Side of the High Court. This rule provides that the Judge sitting on the original side of the High Court shall deal with applications for revocation of orders granting leave to sue.

The petitioner applied to the Parsi Chief Matrimonial Court under S. 29, sub-s. (3) of the Act for leave to present her proceedings in the Matrimonial Court in Madras and on 6th February 1941, this Court granted the leave which the petitioner sought. Learned counsel on behalf of the respondent, the applicant in the application before me, has with great frankness, conceded that his client was served with the proceedings in the suit brought against him by his wife by the end of February 1941. Early in the month of March, this Court fixed the date to hear the suit between the petitioner and the respondent to take place on 5th August 1941 and again learned counsel on behalf of the respondent has conceded that his client was aware of the date of trial by end of March 1941. No step was taken by him until 7th May 1941 when the present application was issued to revoke the leave granted to the petitioning wife to bring her proceedings in Madras. This application was not served until on or about 20th July. Learned counsel on behalf of the wife takes the preliminary objection that the wrong procedure has been adopted and he relies upon the provisions of S. 47, Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act, which, so far as is material, provides as follows :

> An appeal shall lie to the High Court from . . . . (b) the granting of leave by any such Court under sub-s. (3) of S. 29 provided that such appeal shall be instituted within three calendar months after the decision appealed from shall have been pronounced.

The words above "such Court" clearly refer to the Chief Parsi Matrimonial Court within the jurisdiction of the High Court. It is contended that the husband should have presented an appeal to the High Court from the decision of the Matrimonial Court granting leave to sue and the machinery which has been adopted pursuant to the provisions of the original side rules of the High Court is wrong and consequently this application must fail. Prior to 1936 the statutory enactment in force was the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act of 1865 which contains some similar provisions to the Act of 1936 but by S. 51 of the earlier Act the High Court of the area in which the Parsi Matrimonial Court is established was empowered to make such rules and regulations concerning the practice and procedure in the Matrimonial Court as it might consider expedient. Under the provision of the section, to which I just referred, the High Court provided in O. 35, R. 18 of its original side rules that the rules of the High Court should apply to all suits under the Matrimonial Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act of 1865. Counsel on behalf of the husband thereupon contends that the original side rules are still applicable to the Parsi Matrimonial Court and he is entitled to present this application. Section 53 of the Act of 1936 repealed the whole of the Act of 1865. It has therefore repealed S. 51 to which I have referred. By the Repealing and Amending Act of 1937, S. 53 of the 1936 Act was itself repealed. Section 24, General Clauses Act, provides that :

> Where any Act . . . . . is . . . . . repealed and re-enacted with or without modification, then, unless it is otherwise expressly provided, any order, scheme, rule, form or by-law, made or issued under the repealed Act . . . . . shall, so far as it is not inconsistent with the provisions re-enacted, continue in force, and be deemed to have been issued under the provisions so re-enacted.

The important words to emphasise are "so far as it is not inconsistent with the provisions re-enacted." Under the Act of 1865 there was no provision by which the potential petitioner in a matrimonial suit in a Parsi Court could obtain leave to present the proceedings and there was no comparable provision in the earlier Act to that contained in S. 29 (3) of the 1936 Act. The appellate provision in S. 47 (b) of the 1936 Act is also a new provision which expressly gives a remedy by appeal in regard to the grant by the Court of leave to present proceedings under S. 29 (3). This provision is in conflict with the provisions in O. 13, R. 14 (a) of the Original Side Rules of the High Court which provides a remedy for revocation of leave to sue by means of an application to the Judge and which is therefore inconsistent with the statutory provision in S. 47 (b) of the Act of 1936. It is not necessary for me to decide whether or not all the original side rules of the High Court still have application to the Matrimonial Court for this reason. Assuming that they do, then, the provision by which an application can be made to the Judge to revoke the leave to sue is inconsistent with the statutory provision and in consequence the statutory provision must prevail. It is quite clear that the remedy open to the respondent husband in the proceedings was to have availed himself of the appellate provisions S. 47 (b) of the Act of 1936. He has not done so but has taken proceedings under a rule of the original side of the High Court which, in my view, has no application to the Matrimonial Court. The consequence is that the present application cannot be entertained and must be dismissed with costs.

Learned counsel on behalf of the husband (respondent) applied for an extension of time to be given to his client for filing the written statement and he stated the reason why it had not already been filed or prepared was because of the pendency of the present application. The respondent took no steps at all until more than two months had elapsed after he was informed of the filing of the suit in this Court and not until about six weeks following his being apprised of the date of trial and although the application was issued on 7th May 1941 service was not effected on the wife's learned advocate until about 20th July. True it is that the vacation of this Court was then taking place, but I see nothing to have prevented initiation of the proceedings long before the present application was filed. I see no ground to extend the time. I refuse to do so.

T. V. Ramiah — for Appellant.

R. Sundaralingam — for Respondents.

Mockett J.—This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of the learned Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam in O. S. No. 32 of 1935. In that suit the plaintiff (the present f appellant) prayed for a decree declaring in substance that his (plaintiff's) half share in a house was not liable to be attached in execution of a decree passed in O. S. No. 33 of 1932 in the East Tanjore District Court. He also prayed for an injunction restraining defendant 1 from executing the said decree against his half share. O. S. No. 33 of 1932 was a suit by one Muthuraman Naidu against R. M. M. S. T. Vairavan Chettiar for money due on a promissory note. Vairavan Chettiar is the natural father of the appellant (the plaintiff in O. S. No. 32 of 1935). The promissory note was executed on 6th October g 1929 by Vairavan Chettiar to Thambuswami Naidu and this note was endorsed by the payee to Muthuraman Naidu, the plaintiff in O. S. No. 33 of 1932. The promissory note is marked Ex. 6. The judgment in O. S. No. 33 of 1932 is marked as Ex. 8B and the decree based thereon as Ex. B. As the arguments in this case have been directed to one aspect only it is unnecessary to set out at any great length the details of this suit. It will be enough to state that the plaintiff alleged that he was adopted by the widow of Chidambaram Chettiar, the brother of Vairavan Chettiar in 1924 and that in 1926 there was a division in status and an actual h division of one house in that family. The lower Court found the allegation of adoption to be proved and no arguments have been addressed to us attacking that finding. The lower Court also found that the allegation regarding the division in status was not proved and that finding has not been attacked before us. The decree in O. S. No. 33 of 1932 was assigned to defendant 3, respondent 2 in this case. The essential facts in this case, and it is upon these facts that the arguments have been based, can therefore be summarised as follows :

The appellant's natural father executed a a promissory note to Thambuswami Naidu who endorsed it to defendant 1 Muthuraman Naidu and on the basis of the decree passed in the suit on that promissory note, O. S. No. 33 of 1932, in which Muthuraman was plaintiff, execution was sought to be levied on the appellant's share in the joint family property at the instance of defendant 3 the assignee of the decree from Muthuraman. The effect of the finding of the learned trial Judge with regard to the adoption in 1924 is that in 1929, the date of the execution of the promissory note, the plaintiff (appellant) was no longer the son of Vairavan Chettiar, the maker of the promissory note, having t been adopted by the widow of Vairavan Chettiar's brother Chidambaram Chettiar. This is said to have an important bearing on this case. The learned trial Judge has dismissed the appellant's suit. The appellant contends that his property is not liable in execution because no liability of any sort can attach to him in view of the fact that the original decree against his father Vairavan Chettiar was based on a promissory note to which he (the appellant) was not a party and that (Vairavan Chettiar) was sued not by the payee but an endorsee from the payee. There has been no contest on the facts as I c have indicated. The learned Judge has investigated the status of the appellant's family. There is no doubt about who they are. They are an old-established Nattukottai Chetty firm whose hereditary business is money lending and rice trade and their style and vilasam is R. M. M. S. T. Such families and such businesses are well-known in South India and Burma. The appellant has contended in the first place that the learned Judge was wrong in his finding with regard to the form of the promissory note and the form of the suit. In para. 53 of his judgment there appears the following :

d It is clear on a reading of Ex. 6 that it was executed by Vairavan Chettiar not merely in his individual behalf but as representing his firm and trading business. The promissory note was in fact executed by the firm and the endorsee thereof has the same rights on the negotiable instrument as the endorser to sue the firm which is the executant of the promissory note. The suit was also against the firm represented by the manager who had executed the note on behalf of the firm.

On an examination of the promissory note and the pleadings and the decree I am unable to agree with this finding. The promissory note is signed by R. M. M. S. T. Vairavan Chettiar. It is in renewal of a former promissory note which is stated to have been executed by Subbayya Chettiar "who was the agent of our firm at Velipalayam." It is not signed on behalf of the firm. e It is true that the words "we shall pay" are used, but it is not possible in view of the practice of Nattukottai Chetty agents who frequently use the word 'we' as meaning 'I', to attach any great importance to this. I observe that the translations of Exs. 6 and A vary. Exhibit A says, "On demand I shall pay you" whereas Ex. 6 has the words "we shall pay." We have had therefore recourse to the Tamil Interpretor of this Court who informs us that actually the word 'we' is not present in the original, nor is the word 'I', but the subsequent 'shall' denotes the plural. But whether the suit could have been filed against the firm, vide 5 M.L.W. 721,[1] f is of no great importance in this case. It may well be, that the plaint could have been so framed. The plaint in fact is not in my view, framed against the firm. The defendant is R. M. M. S. T. Vairavan Chettiar and he is described as "R. M. M. S. T. Vairavan Chettiar, father's name not known." Paragraph 1 alleges that the defendant is carrying on money-lending, etc., business under the vilasam (name and style) of R. M. M. S. T. at Velipalayam. That is a personal allegation that he himself is a firm or the proprietor of a firm. Paragraph 2 states that the money was borrowed in connexion with g and for the benefit of the defendant's ancestral family business and the prayer is for a decree against "the defendant personally and out of the properties of the defendant's business vilasam."

It must be observed that the plaint is not filed as against the R. M. M. S. T. firm in which case particulars could have been demanded as to its members under O. 30, Civil P. C., but appears to allege that the defendant owns the business. The decree describes the defendant as "R. M. M. S. T. Vairavan Chettiar, father's name not given" and the decree is that the defendant do pay to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 22,341-14-0. It may h be, as the learned counsel for the respondents has argued, that this firm was so well-known, that the draftsman of the plaint overlooked the necessity for a careful pleading. The allegation in para. 2 is very clear that the money was borrowed for the benefit of the defendant's ancestral family business and there is no shadow of doubt on the record, nor is it suggested before us that that is not so and that the present appellant was not a member of the trading family of

1. ('18) 5 A.I.R. 1918 Mad. 524: 40 I. C. 347: 5 M.L.W.721, Ghulamsa Ravuthar v. Viswanathan Chettiar.

R. M. M. S. T. The conclusion I therefore arrive at is that, although the plaint is directed against the defendant personally and there is no allegation that the appellant is in any way concerned with the R. M. M. S. T. firm there is no doubt that this money was borrowed for purposes of the joint family trade and that the appellant was a member of the joint family. In 46 Cal. 663,[2] the Privy Council have made it abundantly clear that the name of a person or firm to be charged upon a negotiable instrument should be clearly stated on the face or on the back of the document so that the responsibility is made plain and can be easily recognized as the document passes from hand to hand. Their Lordships observe :

> In this case the preliminary words mention no more than that Mohan Lal has been directed to execute the hundis, and they do not necessarily imply that he has been clothed with authority to execute them in any other form than that in which they were actually prepared — a form which it has already been shown constituted nothing more than a personal liability on behalf of Mohan Lal.

In Abdul Majid Khan v. Saraswati Bai, cited to us from 66 M L J 65,[3] their Lordships have laid down that :

> Where the karta of a Hindu trading family borrows money on promissory notes executed in his own name and not in the name of the firm, there is no presumption that the borrowing was for the purposes of the joint family business, and the lender must prove that the money was required for the family business.

The first of these decisions supports, I think, my construction of the promissory note and with regard to the second decision, I concur with the learned Judge's finding, which has not been attacked, that the money was borrowed by Vairavan Chettiar for the benefit of the R. M. M. S. T. Firm. But Mr. A. V. Viswanatha Sastri has argued that notwithstanding this view of the pleadings, which we indicated to him appealed to us, the decree was still executable against the share of the appellant. Mr. T V. Muthukrishna Iyer has argued that the findings in this case that at the time of the making of the promissory note the appellant had been adopted by the widow of Chidambaram Chettiar, combined with the view we take that the suit and the decree were prima facie against Vairavan Chettiar personally are fatal to the decision of the lower Court that this decree could be executed against the appellant. Mr. Muthukrishma Iyer has argued that since the decision of the lower Court a decision of a Full Bench of this High Court has concluded the matter in his favour. That case is I.L.R. (1938) Mad. 568.[4] In that case, the facts were that a Hindu father executed a promissory note which was endorsed by the payee to the plaintiff. A suit was brought based on the promissory note and by the indorsee making the sons of the maker defendants. The decision of the Full Bench was that the sons were not liable on a negotiable instrument on which their names did not appear. Reference was made to the decision in 46 Cal 663[2] to which we have also referred, and the statement of the law by Lord Buckmaster cited. Leach C. J in the course of his judgment, with which the other members of the Bench concur, after reviewing the case law, stated :

> From these decisions, it will be observed that there are two principles to be borne in mind. The first is the principle which I have already stated, namely that no one whose name does not appear on a negotiable instrument can be sued on it. The second is that there is no privity of contract between an indorsee and the maker or acceptor.

The reference to the Full Bench was :

> Whether an indorsee of the promissory note executed by the managing member is entitled to recover the debt from the property of the non-executant coparceners on the ground of their liability under the Hindu law or whether he is limited to the remedy available on the note.

And the answer of the Full Bench was :

> The indorsee of a promissory note executed by the managing member of a joint Hindu family is limited to his remedy on the note, unless the endorsement is so worded as to transfer the debt as well and the Stamp law is complied with, and therefore in the case of an ordinary endorsement the indorsee cannot sue the non-executant coparceners on the ground of their liability under the Hindu law.

At page 576, the learned Chief Justice observes :

> The maker alone can be sued on the note and the fact that under Hindu law sons are liable in respect of debts incurred on behalf of the family or by the father for his own purposes, provided they are not incurred for illegal or immoral purpose, does not affect the principle involved.

It seems to me that the decision of the Full Bench was concerned only with the question of an action on a promissory note. At no time was any question of rights of execution under Hindu law discussed. On the contrary the remarks and the observations in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice make it clear that this case was decided on the basis of a right of suit and that the discussion of any other right under Hindu law was expressly excluded. But the latter question is raised in this appeal. This Full Bench decision related to a promissory note made by a father and the liability under discussion was the liability of the son to an indorsee in a suit. We have to consider here the liability of a member of a trading family not in a suit but in execution for debts incurred by the manager for the purpose of the trading family. It is clear from the decision of the Full Bench that in a suit it matters not what the relationship between the maker and the person sought to be made liable is, if the latter's name is not upon the promissory note. There is a further decision of this High Court which is instructive. In I.L.R.(1940) Mad. 815,[5] Leach C. J. and Krishnaswami Ayyangar J., had before them an appeal in which a question of execution came up for consideration. The appellants obtained a money decree against respondent 3 making respondent 3's sons parties to the suit. The suit was on a promissory note executed by the father alone and the decree was passed against the father alone, the plaintiff deciding not to ask for a decree against the sons, who were dismissed from the suit. Notwithstanding this dismissal, the Bench held that execution can be levied against the sons' share in the joint family property on the basis that under Hindu law the sons were liable to pay their father's debts. There was of course no question of endorsement of a promissory note in that case, but it is a clear case of execution being levied on a person in respect of the debt due under a promissory note by the maker of that promissory note, although the name of the person on whose property execution was sought to be levied was not upon the promissory note. The Bench was largely concerned with the consideration of principles of res judicata, but the facts are of interest for the reason I have indicated. I derive this from that decision, that although under the law relating to negotiable instruments and the framing of suits thereon the sons would not be liable in a suit by the payee against the father the sole maker, nevertheless the result will ultimately be in circumstances of that case, that, although not liable in the suit, they were nevertheless liable in execution under a totally different system of law, namely, the Hindu law.

But, to return to the arguments of the learned counsel for the appellant, does the fact that in the case now before us the promissory note was endorsed alter the position? In I.L.R. (1938) Mad. 568[4] a distinction is made between the indorsee's remedy on a mere endorsement of the note and his remedy on an endorsement transferring the debt as well and complying with the Stamp law. It has been naturally a matter for careful consideration as to whether that affects the question before us; it seems to me that it does. The absence of such a formal assignment of the debt is no doubt fatal to a suit by the indorsee purported to be based on the debt and with which the Hindu law is concerned. It seems to me that for the appellant to escape liability we must hold that there is no debt due by the manager (he happens to be their natural father) to the decree-holder which they are under an obligation to pay. In so far as a father and son are concerned, a decree passed against a father creates a debt prima facie dischargeable by the sons: 27 Mad. 243.[6] See also Mayne's Hindu law, Edn. 10, page 420. It seems to be established that the judgment against the father having created a debt which the son is liable to discharge, the consequent proceedings against the son will not be upon the judgment but upon the debt created by the decree. But to create a debt payable by the son, I think it reasonable to suppose that the decree itself must relate to a debt for which he is liable. Whether the decree now sought to be executed not against the son but against a member of a joint trading family did relate to a debt will be a matter for consideration. So far the relationship of a father and son has been discussed. So far as the powers of a manager to contract debts for family purposes are concerned, it seems clear that the manager of a joint family business has an implied authority to contract debts for the ordinary purpose of the family business, and, where such debts have been incurred, the other coparceners are liable, but only to the extent of their interest in the joint family: vide Mayne, Edn. 10, pp. 449 and 450 for a summary of the law. In I.L.R. (1937) Mad. 880,[7] Venkatasubba Rao J., points out that > there is a legal duty cast upon the son, as upon any other junior coparcener, to discharge a liability incurred by the father in his capacity of manager for family purposes, and it is therefore unnecessary on the facts here to invoke the doctrine of pious obligation.

It will be seen that the learned Judge emphasizes that, although the manager may also be the father, all the junior coparceners are under a duty to discharge liabilities properly incurred by him because of his position as manager. I have already indicated that the circumstances of this case show that, although the suit is not framed as against the firm, there is no doubt that it is against the manager for money advanced for the firm. The Full Bench decision in I.L.R.(1937) Mad. 880[7] also held that the principle of representation by the managing member was not confined to immovable property but to other transactions as well, for instance, loans. I have been unable to understand why there should ever have been such a distinction. This decision of the Full Bench is, I consider, important in this case because it is an authority binding on me for the proposition that a Hindu father, by virtue of his position as manager, can represent the entire family in all transactions, not only with regard to immovable property but with regard to other transactions as well; that the decree need not be specifically passed against him as such; and that, once a liability is declared to be a family liability, every item of the joint family property is bound to satisfy that liability.

Our attention has been drawn to the decision of this High Court in 68 M.L.J. 104,[8] which was not cited to the Full Bench in I.L.R. (1937) Mad. 880.[7] It appears from the facts of that case that the money borrowed was a personal debt and did not concern a trading family or an endorsed promissory note but it is evident that the learned Judges were reluctant to allow investigations in proceedings in execution to be made against persons who are not sons or descendants of the judgment-debtor. Where a suit is brought by an original payee against an original maker there appears to be no difficulty about the legal position of the members of the maker's family in execution proceedings; it is argued that the fact that the decree on which execution is sought to be levied against the appellant's property is based upon an endorsed promissory note materially affects his liability as a member of his family. Except for the decision in I.L.R.(1938) Mad. 568[4] and the cases therein cited, no case relating to an endorsed promissory note has been brought to our notice and no case relating to execution on a decree on an endorsed promissory note. As in I.L.R. (1938) Mad. 568,[4] so in this appeal, the following facts are in my view of vital importance: (1) The promissory note was endorsed to Muthuraman Chettiar, and (2) the debt was not assigned to Muthuraman Chettiar. There is the further fact that the element of pious obligation between a father and son is absent. There is a wealth of authority, that a decree obtained against a managing member for a debt binding on the family can be executed against the shares of the other members.

Vide 15 Cal 70[9] and the numerous cases cited by Mayne, 10th Edn., at p. 450. The question in this appeal, therefore, seems to be whether there is a debt in the hands of defendant 3 which the plaintiff is bound to pay. In my view, there is not. I consider that the general principle laid down in I.L.R. (1938) Mad. 568[4] is applicable to this case. No debt was ever assigned to Muthuraman Naidu by Thambuswami Naidu, the promisor under Ex. 6. It could have been assigned, but it was not. By his endorsement and delivery, Thambuswami Naidu transferred the property in the note to Muthuraman Chettiar: S. 50, Negotiable Instruments Act. The subsequent decree therefore can only have been on the note, and not on the debt. There is not, therefore, in existence any decree based on a debt. Any decree against the maker of the note will be as Varadachariar J. points out in I.L.R.(1938)Mad. 568[4] at p. 569, for compensation and not for debt: S. 117, Negotiable Instruments Act. It seems to me therefore that the present decree-holder cannot on the principle that the members of this trading family are liable to pay debts properly incurred by the manager make their property liable in execution in respect of a decree against the manager not for a debt but for a remedy under the provisions of a statute. I see no reason to stretch the principles of Hindu law in so far as they relate to the liability of persons not parties to suits, nor to extend the meaning of the word "debt". I again emphasise that the element of pious obligation by a son which seems to have given a somewhat comprehensive meaning to the word "debt" is absent in this appeal. That the payee might, had the plaint been correctly framed or the debt correctly assigned, have been entitled to recover from the plaintiff is no reason for taking another view; nor is the possibility that, had there been no endorsement, no difficulty would have arisen for Thambuswami Naidu to recover. Indeed I consider that the fact that the plaintiff in the suit on the note preferred other methods is a reason for a holder of the decree therein being confined rigidly to his rights as they work out logically.

For the above reasons this appeal must be allowed with costs here and below. It must follow also that Appeal No. 256 of 1939 will also be allowed with costs, which will be limited to the stamp duty paid, printing charges and other out of pocket expenses.

Kunhi Raman J. — I have had the advantage of perusing the judgment just delivered by my learned brother. In stating that I concur in the views expressed in it, I wish to add a few words. There is no doubt at all that the decree in O. S. No. 33 of 1932 was not against a firm represented by Vairavan Chettiar as manager, but that it was against the individual Vairavan Chettiar. The decree cannot, therefore, be executed against other members of the firm or their properties. It is clear from the decision of a Full Bench of this Court reported in I.L.R. (1938) Mad. 568[4] which is binding on us, that the payee of a promissory note executed by the manager of a joint Hindu family may, if he wishes to sue, base his suit on the note, in which case, only the maker of the note can be made liable, or on the debt, in which event, he may seek to make the sons or the other undivided members of the family of the maker also liable. When, however, the payee endorses the note to a third party, without assigning the debt also to the indorsee, the latter can sue only on the note and not on the debt. In the present case, the suit was by such an indorsee who did not therefore acquire any wider rights in respect of the debt under the Hindu law. The decree he obtained was only against the maker of the note, the cause of action being based purely on the negotiable instrument. Such a decree cannot obviously be executed against any other undivided member of the family of the maker of the note. Seeing that the appellant who is the natural son of the maker of the note was given away in adoption to his paternal uncle, no question of pious obligation to discharge the debt created by the decree in this case can also arise. In the circumstances, I agree that the appeals must be allowed as indicated in the judgment of my learned brother.

Leach C. J. — In 1931 the appellant obtained a decree against the respondent in the Court of the District Munsif of Peddapur for the payment of Rs. 2948-15-8. The respondent appealed to the Subordinate Judge of Cocanada and was successful, the appellant's suit being dismissed with costs. While the appeal was pending the appellant applied for the execution of the decree which he had obtained, but as the result of an arrangement with the respondent the application was dismissed on payment of costs. Apparently fearing that the appellant might institute further proceedings in execution, the respondent applied for a stay of execution. A stay was ordered on the condition that the respondent furnished security to the Court for the amount of the decree. It was not convenient for the respondent to furnish security in the form of immovable property and instead he deposited the sum of Rupees 2948-15-8 in cash. On paying the money in, he asked the Court to direct that the decree-holder should only withdraw it on furnishing security and this the Court directed. When the appeal was allowed, the respondent withdrew his money from the Court and at the same time applied for an order against the appellant directing him to pay interest thereon. The District Munsif refused to do so, but on appeal the Subordinate Judge reversed his decision and awarded the respondent interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum. The appellant then appealed to this Court. The appeal was heard by Wadsworth J. who with some hesitation agreed with the Subordinate Judge. Wadsworth J. considered that the general principle embodied in S. 144, Civil P. C., applied and on this footing the respondent was entitled to recover any loss he might have suffered as the result of the first Court's decree.

We are unable to concur in the opinion of the learned Judge that S. 144 applies here. Although there was no application for execution pending, the respondent applied for stay and he got the stay on certain terms. The terms did not include the payment of the money into Court. If he had furnished security in the form of immovable property, there would have been no question of payment of interest. He could also have guarded himself against loss by converting the money into Government promissory notes, but he did not choose to do this and was content to leave the money lying in Court. If the respondent has suffered any loss, the blame must rest with him. The appellant is clearly not liable to pay interest in the circumstances. The appeal is allowed with costs throughout.

Second Appeal No. 236 of 1939, Decided on 18th August 1941, against decree of Dist. Court, Trichinopoly, in A. S. No. 346 of 1937.

 Limitation Act (1908), S. 19, Arts. 111 and 132 — Person having two separate and distinct remedies arising out of one and same transaction—Acknowledgment to save one of remedies will not save other also — Vendor taking promissory note from vendee for unpaid sale price — Acknowledgment of liability under promissory note cannot be treated as acknowledgment in respect of vendor's lien.

Where two remedies flow either by operation of law or by agreement between the parties out of one and the same transaction and the remedies are separate and distinct in their scope and in their essential features, anything said or done to save one of the remedies from the bar of limitation cannot operate by itself to save the other also.

Where the vendor has taken a promissory note for the unpaid sale price from the vendee, he has two remedies open to him for recovery of the unpaid sale price viz., one by way of enforcement of the personal liability under the note and the second by way of enforcement of the statutory charge by sale of immovable properties which is not extinguished by the execution of the note. The remedies in respect of the statutory charge and the promissory note are certainly not similar or co-extensive and the periods of limitation are different for the two causes of action. Hence an acknowledgment of liability evidenced by endorsements on the promissory note cannot be treated as acknowledgments of liability in respect of the vendor's lien : ('24) 11 A.I.R. 1924 Mad 854; 7 Mad. 392; ('17) 4 A.I.R. 1917 Mad. 460 and 25 Cal. 844 (P.C.), Disting. [P 168*g*,h]

Judgment. — A point of limitation arises in this second appeal preferred by the plaintiffs. The facts are these. The plaintiff sold certain immovable property to one Mohamed Ghouse on 15th January 1920 for a sum of Rs. 1750. A sum of Rs. 600 out of the sale price was not paid by Mohamed Ghouse who therefore executed a promissory note in favour of the plaintiff for the said amount on the same date. Payments were made towards the amount due under the promissory note and endorsements were made on the note evidencing those payments. On 15th August 1927, a sum of Rs. 187-7-0 remained due to the plaintiff under the note and he obtained a decree for the said amount in O. S. No. 302 of 1927. The present suit to enforce the vendor's lien was filed by the plaintiff against the defendant who purchased the properties in execution of a mortgage decree for sale obtained by a Fund against the owner, Ghouse Sahib, for the recovery of the balance due to him; and plaintiff's case is that he was not aware of the mortgage in favour of the fund and that the defendant purchased the properties with notice of his charge or lien.

As the suit was filed by the plaintiff on 4th July 1936, that is more than 12 years after the date of the sale to Ghouse Sahib, both the lower Courts held that it was barred by limitation under Art. 132. The plaintiff tried to save himself from the bar of limitation by relying on the endorsements on the promissory note, contending that they amounted to an acknowledgment of liability not merely in respect of the promissory note, but as regards the statutory charge as well. The same argument is now advanced for the appellant in the second appeal by Mr. K. V. Sesha Ayyangar. He contended that the original debt was one and the same and that acknowledgments of liability on the promissory note enured to keep the debt alive and that the statutory charge was consequently not barred. He also pointed out that the decision relied on by the lower Courts reported in 1924 M.W.N. 755[1] was reversed in L. P. A. No. 150 of 1924. The decision of Devadoss J. in the Weekly Notes case has little to do with the point now under consideration. His Lordship took the extreme view that as the charge was a statutory one, the time limited for its enforcement by statute could never be extended by agreement of parties and that even though the sale deed gave a particular period for payment of the price, still the charge would be extinguished on the expiry of 12 years from the date of the sale deed. This view was overruled as incorrect by Wallace and Madhavan Nair JJ. in the Letters Patent Appeal.

We have to consider whether acknowledgments of liability evidenced by endorsements on the promissory note can be treated as acknowledgments of liability in respect of the vendor's lien. Three cases were cited in support of this position, namely, 7 Mad. 392,[2] 34 I.C. 417,[3] 25 Cal. 844.[4] But in all the three cases, not merely was the debt the same but the remedies were identical also. In 7 Mad. 392[2] the point was whether the acknowledgment of liability in respect of a hundi on Penang in favour of the plaintiff's agent for a debt due by defendant to the plaintiff, requesting the drawee of the hundi to pay the amount to the plaintiff still due on the hundi constituted a sufficient acknowledgment of the debt due in respect of which the hundi was drawn. In 34 I.C. 417,[3] Coutts-Trotter and Srinivasa Ayyangar JJ. had to consider a payment endorsed on a chit and purporting to be for the chit. The chit was inadmissible as a promissory note and their Lordships held that the acknowledgments on the chit were nevertheless available as an acknowledgment of the liability of the original debt. In 25 Cal. 844,[4] the Privy Council held that a petition by three co-owners giving direction to the manager to pay the surplus income towards the payment of certain debts due by them specified in the petition amounted not merely to an acknowledgment of joint liability in favour of the creditor who had obtained decrees for arrears of rent, but also amounted to an acknowledgment of liability inter se as between the co-owners themselves for any claim or contribution that might arise. Their Lordships say at p. 851 that it was not necessary that the defendants should admit liability to the defendant nor promise to pay him anything. They observe:

> It is not required that an acknowledgment within the statute shall specify every legal consequence of the thing acknowledged. The defendant acknowledged a joint debt. From that follow the legal incidents of her position as joint debtor with the plaintiff, one of which is that he may sue her for contribution.

The case before us is in my opinion different from the cases cited for the appellant. Though the debt is identical, two distinct remedies became available for its recovery, one by way of enforcement of the personal liability under the promissory note, and the second by way of enforcement of the statutory charge by sale of immovable properties. Where the note is executed by the vendee to the vendor, as in this case, there is no extinguishment of the lien or the charge; but there may be cases where such extinguishment takes place and some of them have been dealt with in 50 Mad. 548[5] by Ramesam and Reilly JJ. The remedies in respect of the statutory charge and the promissory note are certainly not similar or co-extensive. In the one, we are concerned with the immovable properties and in the other with the personal liability of the executor of the note. The periods of limitation are different for the two causes of action.

If the promissory note had been taken in the name of a third party instead of by the plaintiff it could not at all be said that payments made by the vendee towards the amount due under the note can be treated as acknowledgments of liability in respect of the statutory charge. A similar difficulty would arise in the case of negotiation of the promissory note by the payee under the Law Merchant. Could it be contended that an acknowledgment of liability on the promissory note would serve as a good acknowledgment to extend the period of limitation for the enforcement of the charge, when the charge-holder had assigned it to a third party? These considerations show that in the case where two remedies flow either by operation of law or by agreement between the parties out of one and the same transaction and the remedies are separate and distinct in their scope and in their essential features, anything said or done to save one of the remedies from the bar of limitation cannot operate by itself to save the other also. As has already been pointed out, the three cases cited for the appellant are all cases of a single debt and a single remedy for the debt. Holding for the reasons given above that the lower Courts have taken the correct view on the point as to limitation, I dismiss this second appeal with costs. As the question involved is of some importance I grant leave to prefer an appeal.

Wadsworth J. — This appeal arises out of a suit on a promissory note. The note in question was executed by the appellant in favour of one Aiyasami Naicken on 30th July 1931 for a sum of Rs. 1000 of which Rs. 500 was advanced in cash at the time of the execution, the balance represented a payment towards interest on an earlier mortgage, Ex. 3 in favour of one Rangasami Naicken. In February 1936 the note was assigned to the plaintiff by an endorsement. The trial Court held that the defendant was entitled to plead Act 4 of 1938 and that, to the extent to which the note was in discharge of interest on the prior mortgage, the principal was liable to be reduced to the sum actually advanced in cash. He gave credit for a payment of Rs. 100 made towards principal, passed a decree for Rs. 400, scaling down the interest under the Act. The lower appellate Court, without going into the question whether to the extent of the payment towards the prior mortgage, the promissory note was a renewal, came to the conclusion that the endorsee of the promissory note was not a creditor under Act 4 of 1938 and that the debtor was barred by S. 120, Negotiable Instruments Act, from pleading the defects in the note or the transaction. It seems to us that on both these points the learned District Judge is clearly in error. Section 120, Negotiable Instruments Act, only prevents the maker of the note from denying the validity of the instrument as originally made or drawn. It does not bar any defence which is independent of a plea that the instrument as originally made or drawn was invalid. Section 3 of Act 4 of 1938 defines a creditor as including his assigns and there can be no doubt that the endorsee of a promissory note is the assign of the original promisee even though he has greater rights than an assign by deed in that he is a holder in due course. It has been suggested on behalf of the respondent, relying on observations in the judgment of the Federal Court, 1940 F.C.R. 188,[1] that Act 4 of 1938 must be deemed to be invalid in so far as it affects the rights of holders in due course of negotiable instruments; or, alternatively, that it must be deemed that this Act does not affect such rights. It seems to us that these are questions which, so far as we are concerned, are governed by the decision of the Full Bench in I. L. R. (1939) Mad. 151[2] which went fully into the effect of Act 4 upon negotiable instruments and decided that the provisions of Act 4 were not invalid even though they may affect the rights of parties under the Negotiable Instruments Act. In this Court, therefore, the contention of the respondent cannot succeed. But we certify with reference to S. 205, Government of India Act, 1935, that the case involves a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Government of India Act.

The Courts below have not considered the question whether the portion of the principal of the promissory note which consists of interest due on the earlier mortgage can be deemed to be interest under the explanation to S. 8, having regard to the fact that the mortgagee under Ex. 3 was one Rangaswami Naicken whereas the promisee under the promissory note was Aiyaswami Naidu. It may be that there are facts which would enable the defendant to plead that the interest under the mortgage was due to the same creditor as the creditor under the promissory note. That is a matter which will have to be gone into in the lower appellate Court. We therefore allow the appeal and remand the case to the lower appellate Court for fresh disposal in the light of this judgment. The costs of the second appeal will abide by the result. Court fee on the second appeal will be refunded.

Civil Misc. Petn. No. 4426 of 1940, Decided on 13th August 1941, praying to excuse delay in filing review petition against order of Venkatasubba Rao and Abdur Rahman JJ., in A. S. No. 343 of 1931, D/- 4th March 1938.

Limitation Act (1908), S. 5—Words "sufficient cause" must be liberally construed — Existence of circumstances mentioned in S. 14 constitutes "sufficient cause" within S. 5.

The words "sufficient cause" in S. 5 must be liberally construed so as to advance substantial justice particularly when "no negligence, nor inaction nor want of bona fides is imputable to the applicant" : 13 Mad. 269, Rel. on. [P 170*g*]

In considering the words "sufficient cause" under S. 5, the equities on which S. 14 is based may be taken into account though that section may not in terms be applicable. The existence of circumstances mentioned in S. 14 therefore constitutes a sufficient ground for excusing the delay under S. 5 caused by wrong proceedings : ('37) 24 A.I.R. 1937 P. Order.—This is an application to excuse the delay in presenting a petition for review against the orders passed by Venkatasubba Rao J., and myself in A. S. No. 343 of 1931 on 4th March 1938. I have not, up till now, decided to issue any notice in regard to the petition for review and nothing in this order shall be taken to refer to the application for review which I shall consider separately. Since the existence of sufficient cause is a condition precedent without which the discretion given to a Court under this section (S. 5, Limitation Act) cannot be exercised, the question whether the delay should be excused depends for its answer on the fact whether the petitioner has succeeded in making out the same. According to the well-known decision in 13 Mad 269[1] cited by learned counsel for the appellant, the words 'sufficient cause' have to be liberally construed so as to advance substantial justice particularly when "no negligence, nor inaction, nor want of bona fides is imputable to the appellant." In defining the general rules of guidance for the exercise of discretion, Lord Dunedin observed in 45 Cal 94[2] :

We think the true guide for a Court in the exercise of this discretion is whether the appellant has acted with reasonable diligence in prosecuting his appeal.

Learned counsel for the Court of Wards has, on the other hand, naturally laid great stress on the fact that once the time for making an application is past, a very valuable right has accrued to the successful party of which he should not be lightly deprived. Section 14, Lim. Act, provides that in computing the period of limitation for any suit or application, the time during which the applicant has been prosecuting in good faith and with due diligence another civil proceeding in another Court, which from defect of jurisdiction or other causes of a like nature, is unable to entertain it, shall be excluded. It has been contended by learned counsel for the appellant that in considering the words "sufficient cause" under S. 5, Limitation Act, the equities on which S. 14, Limitation Act is based may be taken into account, it being a common case of the parties that S. 14 as such has no application to the present case. The contention has, in my opinion, considerable force. As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in A.I.R. 1937 P. C. 276[3] at p. 278 that in applying S. 5 to cases where delay has been caused by taking a wrong proceeding, "analogy of S. 14 is an argument of considerable weight." The existence of circumstances mentioned in the section has been, therefore, regarded in decided cases as a sufficient ground for excusing the delay caused by wrong proceedings. In order to decide therefore whether the plaintiff would be entitled to exemption, I must see whether he had been during the time that has elapsed in excess of what is allowed to him by law, prosecuting in good faith and with due diligence other proceeding or proceedings for substantially the same relief in another Court which was, for defect of jurisdiction or for other causes of a like nature unable to entertain the same and grant the relief to the petitioner.

There is no doubt, as a reference to the petitioner's affidavit would show, that he has been prosecuting certain Letters Patent appeals and other civil miscellaneous applications between 17th March 1938 and 18th April 1939. So far as the time spent for the disposal of these appeals and applications is concerned, there cannot be much of a doubt that these proceedings must be regarded as having been taken in good faith and prosecuted diligently. Had the time to pay court-fee and to give security been extended either by the Court on 18th February 1938 or had Letters Patent appeals, against those orders been allowed on 18th April 1939 the appeal would not have been dismissed on 4th March 1938 and even if dismissed, the order of dismissal would have had to be vacated. No reasons for the dismissal of these appeals have been given by the Division Bench disposing of them but it seems to be obvious that they were dismissed as the prayer to extend the time or to excuse the delay in the Letters Patent appeal filed against the order in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 5204 of 1934 which was five days beyond time had not been granted. The applicant cannot be regarded to have been guilty of negligence or inaction or want of bona fides so far as this delay is concerned. This time must, therefore, be taken into account in his favour and he should get a credit for the same in computing the period of limitation. This is, however, not enough for the petitioner. He says that the Courts were closed on 5th May 1939 and re-opened on 17th July 1939 on which date applications were made on his behalf, S. R. 18426 of 1939 (C.M.P.), for accepting the court fee and security and re-hearing the appeal and C. M. P. No. 3582 to excuse the delay in making this application. That these applications, if made on 5th May 1939 would have been taken into consideration in computing the period of limitation on the same basis as the proceedings under the Letters Patent appeals, does not seem to be open to question. Nor is there any doubt that if these applications had been granted, the petitioner would have achieved his object and the present petition for review would have been unnecessary. The only question then is whether the time during which the Court was closed, when these applications could not have been presented, should be taken into consideration in calculating the period of limitation. If the words 'sufficient cause' have to be construed liberally and if the test to be kept in view, as laid down in 13 Mad 269[1] is whether negligence, inaction or want of bona fides can be imputed to the plaintiff, my reply must be in his favour. It is true that this is to a certain extent detrimental to the respondent, although the application for review has not been taken up for consideration so far, and interferes with the valuable right that has accrued to the respondent; but this question has to be approached, in my opinion, from the point of view of the petitioner's conduct rather than of the advantage gained by the respondent. I would, for the above reasons, excuse the delay and ask the learned counsel for the petitioner to satisfy me whether any notice on the petition for review should be issued to the other side. No costs.

Appeal No. 340 of 1939, Decided on 18th September 1941, against order of District Court, Anantapur, D/- 3rd July 1939.

 Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), Ss. 16, 9 —Object of S. 16 explained — Creditor who has filed petition subsequently found to be not qualified to do so — Subsequent creditor is not prevented from taking advantage of its date and continuing the petition — He cannot be compelled to prove qualification of original creditor.

The object of S. 16 is to prevent other creditors from being injured by the action of one creditor who by reason of collusion or otherwise may not b diligently prosecute the petition and gives the second creditor the benefit of the date of the original petition, no matter how much later may be the date of his own introduction into the case; and there is no reason on principle why a second creditor should not have the benefit of that date not only in regard to the question of whether his own debt is barred by limitation, but in regard to the question of the act of insolvency of the insolvent himself. And the mere accident of the fact that the creditor who has filed the petition should turn out not to have been qualified to do so will not prevent a subsequent creditor, who but for that petition might well have filed one himself, from taking advantage of its date. And the creditor substituted under S. 16 cannot be compelled to prove the qualification of the original creditor to file a petition : ('28) 15 A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 608, Rel. on; ('38) 25 A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 884, Disting.; c (1895) 1 Q.B. 194, Expl., and Disting. [P 173c, d, e]

Judgment. — The question at issue in this appeal is whether a certain Sathrasala Appayya has or has not been rightly adjudicated an insolvent. The petition upon which the order of adjudication has been passed was originally filed by one of his creditors on 25th August 1934 and stated that the act of insolvency was the execution of a mortgage deed by the debtor on 17th August of that year. In 1937 petitioner 2 was allowed to d continue the insolvency under the provisions of S. 16, Provincial Insolvency Act, as the Court was satisfied that the original petitioner was not proceeding with due diligence. At the enquiry into the petition, it was held that petitioner 2's debt entitled him to ask for the adjudication of the insolvent as such and on the question of the nature of the mortgage executed by the insolvent there was no contest. His adjudication accordingly followed.

One of the arguments taken against the adjudication was by the present appellant who is another creditor of the insolvent and was proceeding in execution against him at the time of the insolvency petition. His point e was that petitioner 1 was not in fact a creditor of the insolvent at all, and therefore under S. 9 of the Act was not entitled to present this petition in August 1934, and that when petitioner 2 was allowed to continue the petition in 1937 it was incumbent upon him not to prove his own status as a creditor for more than Rs. 500 but to prove the status of petitioner 1 as such a creditor, and that as he has failed to do this, the order of adjudication must be set aside and the matter remanded for further enquiry. The appellant in the lower Court relied in support of this argument upon a case reported in (1938) 2 M L J 390.[1] This case has not been dis- f cussed by the learned District Judge and we cannot see in what way any such discussion would be material to the solution of the present issue. On the other hand, the respondents relied upon a case reported in 51 Mad 594.[2] That is also a case of the substitution of one creditor for another creditor under the provisions of S. 16. That substitution took place at the time when the second creditor's debt had become barred by limitation. It was held by this Court that in spite of that fact, substitution might be allowed and the second creditor might continue the petition, taking advantage of the date on which it was ori- g ginally presented. This ruling also does not deal directly with the point now in issue but as will be shown presently, it seems to us to proceed upon principles which may fairly be applied to the facts of the present case also. In the argument in appeal, learned counsel for the appellant has referred us to an English case in (1895) 1 Q.B. 194.[3] That was a case in which a petition in bankruptcy was filed by three creditors, who had occasion to fear that the Court would find that the amount of their debts did not entitle them to file the petition. They then sought to amend their petition by joining with themselves h two other creditors, so that the total indebtedness of the five might qualify them for taking action. At that time more than three months had elapsed from the date of the alleged act of bankruptcy. It was held by the Court that such amendment could not be allowed and it is stated in p. 197 :

1. ('38) 25 A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 884 : 182 I.C. 660 : I.L.R. (1939) Mad. 144 : (1938) 2 M.L.J. 390, Chockalinga Chettiar v. Muthiah Chettiar.
2. ('28) 15 A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 608 : 110 I.C. 611: 51 Mad. 594: 55 M.L.J. 168, Venkata Hanumantharao v. Gangayya.
3. (1895) 1 Q.B. 194 : 64 L.J.Q.B. 183 : 15 R 159: 72 L.T. 58 : 43 W.R. 207, In re Maund; Ex parte Maund.

It is perfectly clear that the Court ought not to allow, after three months have elapsed from the date of the committal of the act of bankruptcy, the introduction of creditors, as petitioning creditors, who could not themselves present a petition, and the introduction of a debt which, after the same period has elapsed, would not be a debt upon which a petition could be founded.

This case is to some extent analogous with the case which is now before us, but we are not prepared to follow it, where the facts are so dissimilar. In the English case, as has been stated, the three creditors who originally presented the petition were continuing to prosecute it, and merely wanted to strengthen their position by joining two other creditors with themselves. In the present case an order under S. 16 presumes the fact that the original petitioner does not proceed with due diligence on his petition. The English decision was not therefore upon any provisions in the English Bankruptcy Act which correspond to S. 16. In those circumstances, we do not feel ourselves called upon to consider whether the principles upon which the English decision was given could be applied to the facts of this case. On the other hand, 51 Mad. 594[2] deals directly with the question of S. 16, and it points out that the object of the section is to prevent other creditors from being injured by the action of one creditor who by reason of collusion or otherwise may not diligently prosecute the petition. 51 Mad. 594[2] gives the second creditor in a case of this kind the benefit of the date of the original petition, no matter how much later may be the date of his own introduction into this case; and we see no reason on principle why a second creditor, as in the present case, should not have the benefit of that date not only in regard to the question of whether his own debt is barred by limitation, but in regard to the question of the act of insolvency of the insolvent himself. If it once be conceded that the purpose of S. 16 is that the general body of creditors should be benefited, and, if it also be remembered that other creditors will very probably hold their hand and decline to file unnecessary insolvency petitions themselves when they know that one creditor has already done so, we do not think that the mere accident of the fact that the creditor who has filed the petition should turn out not to have been qualified to do so should prevent a subsequent creditor, who but for that petition might well have filed one himself, from taking advantage of its date.

One further point of practical importance appears to us to support the view that the Legislature can hardly have expected a creditor substituted under S. 16 to be compelled to prove the qualification of the original creditor to file a petition, and that is, that in the circumstances of the case, it would inevitably be difficult for one creditor to prove the existence of another creditor's debt. The original creditor who ex hypothesi has no further interest in the case would naturally be in possession of the necessary documents and have knowledge of the necessary evidence. On these grounds we see no good reason to interfere with the decision of the learned District Judge and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Second Appeal No. 789 of 1939, Decided on 19th August 1941, against decree of Sub-Judge, Bezwada, in A. S. No. 108 of 1938.

(a) Contract Act (1872), S. 23 — Undertaking not to prosecute part of consideration — Entire agreement is illegal.

Stifling prosecution is a recognized head of public policy and even if part of the consideration was the undertaking not to proceed with the prosecution, the entire agreement would be illegal : ('30) 17 A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 100, Rel. on. [P 174*h*; P175*d*]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 345—Agreement compounding offence compoundable without Court's leave is lawful — Such agreement in case of non-compoundable offence is unlawful.

An agreement to compound an offence compoundable without the permission of the Court is lawful, there being no law or public policy violated in such a case. [P 176*a*]

But in the case of a non-compoundable offence the agreement is unlawful : ('30) 17 A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 100, Rel. on. [P 176*b*]

(c) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 345 (2)—Offences specified in S. 345 (2), Criminal P. C., can be lawfully compounded before they go to Court — Prosecution launched—Agreement to compound it without Court's leave is void under S. 23, Contract Act—Agreement compounding offence of cheating before launching prosecution by execution of pronote held valid.

There is no rule of public policy preventing the parties from compounding offences specified in S. 345 (2), Criminal P. C., before the matter has reached the criminal Court. But once matter has reached the criminal Court, an agreement to compound it without the leave of the Court would, if permitted, defeat the provisions of S. 345 (2), Criminal P. C., and hence would be void under para. 2 of S. 23, Contract Act : ('36) 23 A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 656, Approved; ('39) 26 A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 98, Not approved. [P 176*g*, h]

A borrowed money from B by pledging a security which was found to be worthless and thus committed the offence of cheating. Subsequently through the mediation of C and D the matter was settled and on B agreeing to accept a smaller sum than was advanced by him and also to give time for the payment of that sum A, C and D executed a pronote in favour of B for the sum agreed. C and D were not under any pre-existing liability but were asked to join the execution of the pronote for the purpose of saving A from criminal prosecution :

Held that the agreement was valid and A, C and D were liable on the pronote : (1890) 45 Ch D 351 and (1875) 10 Ch A 297, Ref. [P 174*g*; P 176*h*]

Judgment.—The plaintiff appeals against the decrees of the lower Courts dismissing his suit against defendants 2 and 3. The suit was filed to recover Rs. 2086-14-6 being the amount due under a promissory note (EX. A) executed by defendants 1 to 3 in favour of the plaintiff. The defence which found acceptance in the lower Courts is that the consideration so far as defendants 2 and 3 are concerned was the stifling of a criminal prosecution against defendant 1 and therefore illegal under S. 23, Contract Act. Both the Courts found against the plaintiff. Defendant 1 pledged certain packages of goods representing that they contained bottles of condensed milk and "jeevamrutham" bottles and borrowed money from the plaintiff. The money was not paid and the pledgee took steps to have the goods sold. When the packages were opened for the purpose of sale, it was found that they contained stones, husk, saw dust, waste paper, etc. This was clearly a case of cheating. The discovery was made on 19th September 1935. That evening defendant 3 who is a pleader practising at Masulipatam came to Bezwada and that night there were talks between the plaintiff and the defendants. Defendant 2 is the brother of defendant 1 and defendant 3 is his son-in-law. All three took part in the discussion. There was a mediation. P. W. 3 and D. W. 4 are admittedly two of the mediators, who took part in the mediation. The result was that at about 6 o'clock next morning, i. e., the 20th, EX. A the suit promissory note, came into existence, which was executed by all the three defendants for Rs. 2050. The promissory note recites that a sum of Rs. 2800 was settled by the mediators to be paid in full settlement of all the claims of the plaintiff and that a sum of Rs. 750 was paid that day. For the balance of Rs. 2050, the three defendants executed the promissory note. It appears that a larger sum than Rs. 2800 was in fact due. The mediators settled that the plaintiff should give up a portion and be content with Rs. 2800. It also appears that the defendants wanted time to pay; thus acceptance of a smaller sum than what was due and giving time for the payment of the sum settled were, at any rate, part of the consideration for defendants 2 and 3 joining in the execution of the promissory note. But the question is, was it also a part of the bargain that the consideration for defendants 2 and 3 joining in the promissory note was that the plaintiff should refrain from prosecuting defendant 1 and if so, whether it vitiates the promissory note altogether as one opposed to public policy. One of the plaintiffs went into the box and swore :

> We believed defendant 1 committed an offence and cheated us... We contemplated criminal action against defendant 1 but did not take any steps in that direction. . . . It was known in the town that the defendant played mischief. There was talk in the night that defendant 1 should be saved from prosecution by settling the matter that night. We did not take any action thereafter as the matter was settled. We said we would give up takingaction if defendants 2 and 3 joined in the execution of the promissory note. They had nothing to do with the business of defendant 1. We would have taken action if defendants 2 and 3 had not joined in the execution of the promissory note. We sought the advice of Mr. C. Venkatapayya at that time . . . . . We never saw defendant 3 before.

The evidence of P. W. 3 makes it further clear that defendants 2 and 3 were asked to join the execution of the promissory note partly, at any rate, for the purpose of saving defendant 1 from criminal prosecution. They were not under any pre-existing liability. On the evidence therefore the consideration for defendants 2 and 3 joining in EX. A is partly, at any rate, abstention on the part of the plaintiff from prosecuting defendant 1. The question is whether in such a case the consideration or object of the agreement is unlawful within the meaning of S. 23, Contract Act. The section runs thus :

> The consideration or object of an agreement is lawful, unless—it is forbidden by law; or is of such a nature that, if permitted, it would defeat the provisions of any law; or is fraudulent; or involves or implies injury to the person or property of another; or the Court regards it as immoral, or opposed to public policy.
> In each of these cases, the consideration or object of an agreement is said to be unlawful. Every agreement of which the object or consideration is unlawful is void.

Stifling prosecution is a recognized head of public policy. The law is clearly laid down by the Judicial Committee in 57 Cal. 1302.[1] There a prosecution for forgery was launched and during the pendency of the criminal proceedings, an agreement was entered into, the validity of which came up for consideration. The complaint in that case was in respect of offences under Ss. 465, 567, 193 and 194, Penal Code, which are all non-compoundable. The matters were referred to arbitration and the arbitrators delivered an award. Subsequent to the award, the parties entered into an ekrarnama or agreement embodying the result of the decision of the arbitrators. The criminal proceedings were subsequently dropped. The Subordinate Judge held that the object of the arbitration proceedings and of the agreement was the securing of the withdrawal of the criminal proceedings and that the consideration was unlawful and void. The High Court differed from the Subordinate Judge and held that the reference to arbitration was a bona fide one for the settlement of the disputes as to title. The High Court further held that as the Magistrate dismissed the complaint under S. 203, Criminal P. C., it could not be said that the prosecution was dropped, implying thereby that the stage at which the prosecution could be said to have commenced had not been reached within the meaning of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The High Court also held that there was no tampering with the administration of justice by the complainant and gave a decree on the basis of the agreement. On appeal to the Judicial Committee it was held that it was immaterial whether the stage of prosecution had been reached within the meaning of the Criminal Procedure Code or not :

1. ('30) 17 A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 100 : 123 I.C. 187 : 57 Cal. 1302: 57 I.A. 117 (P.C.), Kaminikumar Basu v. Birendranath Basu.

If it was an implied term of the reference or the ekrarnama that the complaint would not be proceeded with, then in their Lordships' opinion the consideration of the reference or the ekrarnama, as the case may be, is unlawful (see (1892) 1 Ch 173[2]) and the award or ekrarnama was invalid, quite irrespective of the fact whether any prosecution in law had been started. . . . In a case of this description it is unlikely that it would be expressly stated in the ekrarnama that a part of its consideration was an agreement to settle the criminal proceedings. It is enough for the defendants to give evidence from which the inference necessarily arises that part of the consideration is unlawful . . . . . Their Lordships have no hesitation in holding that, prior to the execution of the ekrarnama, it was an implied though not an expressed term, that in consideration of the executant admitting the shares of the plaintiffs they would not proceed with the charges laid by them against the accused.

It is clear from this decision that even if part of the consideration was the undertaking not to proceed with the prosecution, the entire agreement would be illegal. It is urged by Mr. Rajah Ayyar the learned advocate for the appellant that the offence complained of in the case before the Judicial Committee was a non-compoundable one and that in this case the offence is not of that nature but is compoundable, though if a prosecution has been started, it cannot be compounded without the leave of the Court. He points out that it is well-established that the compounding of a purely private complaint in which the public is not interested at all, e. g., the case of assault is perfectly valid and that an agreement to pay a sum of money in consideration of the prosecution not being started or the dropping of the prosecution already started would not vitiate the contract. Public policy requires that in cases where public interests are involved, the parties should not compound the offence. In (1890) 45 Ch. D. 351,[3] Cotton L. J. says :

I do not intend to enter at all into the question whether an agreement to stifle any prosecution is illegal or not. That does not arise here, because this was merely a prosecution on a public matter—a matter which concerned the public. It was an interference with the public highway in a very serious manner.

Fry L. J. observed :

Now, I confess it appears to me that the law upon this point is determined by the case in (1814) 6 Q B 308.[4] That lays down this principle, which I take to be one of general application, that where the matters of indictment are matters of public concern, they are not the subject of compromise. To use the language of the learned Judge who delivered the judgment in the Court of Queen's Bench (6 Q B 322) 'These are matters of public concern, and therefore not legally the subject of a compromise'.

Lopes L. J. observed :

As a general principle, it may be stated that it is the duty of every prosecutor where the public are interested to prosecute either to conviction or to acquittal . . . . . If the offence is of a public nature, no agreement can be valid that is founded on the consideration of stifling a prosecution for it. Now, there can be no doubt that in the present case the offence was of a public nature.

In a case where a trade mark was alleged to be infringed, the Court of Appeal held in (1875) 10 Ch. Ap. 297,[5] that it is not illegal to compound it. James L. J. observed :

This is one of those misdemeanours where the person injured has the choice between a civil and criminal remedy. It was no more a violation of the law to accept an apology in such a case than it would be to compromise an indictment for a nuisance or for not repairing a highway on the terms of the defendants agreeing to remove the nuisance or repair the highway. Offences of this kind are indictable, but it is not against the policy of our law to allow the injured person to enter into a compromise with regard to them.

The decisions of the English Courts do not further elucidate the matter. In each case the Court will have to decide on which side of the line the case falls. In India, the Criminal Procedure Code lays down what offences can be compounded; some are compoundable without the permission of the Court; some others are compoundable only with the leave of the Court before which a prosecution for the offence is pending. Others are not compoundable at all. In the first class of cases, there is no difficulty in saying that an agreement to compound such an offence is lawful, there being no law or public policy violated in such a case. In the case of a non-compoundable offence, as pointed out by the Judicial Committee in 57 Cal 1302,[1] the agreement is unlawful. The difficulty arises in cases where the offences are compoundable with the leave of the Court. Clause (2) of S. 345 obviously refers to a stage where a prosecution is already launched and provides that the offences specified therein are compoundable only with the leave of the Court before which the prosecution is pending. What is the principle to be applied to a case where the offence is one falling under S. 345 (2) but the matter has not yet reached the Court? That is the case which arises for decision here. In I.L.R. (1937) Mad. 471[6] a charge was laid for an offence under S. 420, Penal Code. After the prosecution was launched an agreement was entered into, part of the consideration being the dropping of the criminal proceedings and leave of the Court was not obtained for compounding the offence. Venkataramana Rao J. after discussing the question whether the object of the transaction was or was not the dropping of the prosecution says this on page 478:

> There can be no doubt that in this case the offence must be deemed to be non-compoundable as the permission of the Court to compound was not obtained.

It will be noticed that the prosecution had already been launched and the case was exactly covered by S. 345 (2) and so the offence could not be compounded except with the leave of the Court. In the present case, the matter did not reach the Court and therefore S. 345 (2) does not in terms apply. In A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 98[7] a Bench of the Lahore High Court held that where the offence is compoundable with the leave of the Court, a compromise during the pendency of a case is perfectly lawful. This of course is in direct conflict with the decision of Venkataramana Rao J. in the case just cited.

The question therefore reduces itself to this. Where the matter has not reached the criminal Court, is there any rule of public policy preventing the parties from compounding offences specified in S. 345 (2), Criminal P. C.? The fact that after the matter has reached the Court, leave of the Court is necessary does not, in my opinion, solve the difficulty. Is the offence of cheating of such a nature that an agreement to compound it before the matter reaches the Court is illegal and void? Suppose the parties desire to compound an offence of cheating involving a few rupees. Is it necessary for them to file a complaint, place the agreement before the Court and then alone compound it? That means that a complainant who is no longer desirous of prosecuting must file a complaint; else the agreement which he enters into by which he secures reparation for the pecuniary loss sustained by him will be invalid. Both parties agree that there should be no prosecution; yet the complainant must launch the prosecution and then seek the permission of the Court; thus breaking the agreement. The whole thing is reduced to a farce. In a case where a man is cheated of a few rupees, how are the public interests so much involved as to prevent the parties from adjusting the matter. Extreme cases on both sides of the line may be put. But after giving the matter my best consideration, I hold that in the case of offences specified in S. 345 (2), Criminal P. C., the matter may be lawfully compounded before it goes to Court. After a prosecution is launched, S. 345 (2) expressly provides that these offences are compoundable only with the leave of the Court. In such a case, an agreement to compound it without the leave of the Court would if permitted defeat the provisions of S. 345 (2), Criminal P. C., and hence void under para. 2 of S. 23, Contract Act. I therefore reverse the decision of both the lower Courts and decree the suit as prayed for with costs throughout. Leave to appeal is granted.

Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras — Petitioner

v.

Firm N. V. Abdulla Sahib — Respondents.

O. P. No. 101 of 1941; Decided on 25th September 1941; reference by Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras.

Income-tax Act (1922), S. 26A — Individual shares of partners not clearly stated — S. 26A does not apply — Share of widow 2 annas and of children collectively 4 annas recovered as 6 annas in the name of widow in application for registration under S. 26A — Application held rightly rejected as children as a body could not be taxable unit.

Section 26A only contemplates the registration of a firm which is constituted under an instrument of partnership which with clearness states what the individual shares of the partners are to be.

[P 178c]

The assessees constituted a firm trading in timber. Before the year 1939-40 the firm had been registered under S. 26A, Income-tax Act. In the first week of November 1939, the senior partner died and his death resulted in the reconstitution of the firm. His widow was taken in as a partner and his three sons and three daughters who were minors, were admitted to the benefits of the partnership. In the application for the registration of the new firm under S. 26A the shares of the partners were stated, the share of the widow of the deceased senior partner being shown as 6 annas. Her share really was 2 annas, the remaining 4 annas being intended for the benefit of the minors, who were admitted to the benefits of the partnership as a body and not as individuals. The intention was that the minors were not to take a vested share in the fund, but that their rights should be governed by the law of survivorship when the fund was distributed :

Held that the individual shares of the minors who were admitted to the benefits of partnership could not be said to have been specified in the deed presented for registration under S. 26A of the Act. The minors as a body could not be regarded as a taxable unit.

K. V. Sesha Ayyangar — for Petitioner.

B. Pocker — for Respondents.

Leach C. J. — The assessees constitute a firm trading in timber under the style of N. V. Mammaly & Sons. Before the year 1939-40 the firm had been registered under S. 26A, Income-tax Act, and on 10th October 1939, an application for a renewal of the registration was made. Three weeks later N. V. Abdulla Sahib, the senior partner, died and his death resulted in the reconstitution of the firm. His widow was taken in as a partner and his three sons and three daughters, all of whom are minors, were admitted to the benefits of the partnership. In the application for the registration of the new firm under S. 26A the shares of the partners were stated to be : N. V. Ummarkutty, 6 annas; N. V. Kayumma, 2 annas; N. V. Mariyumma, 2 annas; and K. Bibi (the widow of N. V. Abdulla Sahib) 6 annas. K. Bibi had not in fact a 6 annas share in the partnership. Her share was 2 annas, the remaining 4 annas being intended for the benefit of the minors, who were admitted to the benefits of the partnership as a body and not as individuals. Clause 5 of the partnership deed states :

That the said six minor children, viz., three sons and three daughters of said late N. V. Abdulla are hereby agreed and declared to be admitted to the benefits of the said partnership. They shall as a body be jointly entitled to two-eighth share of the net profits of the business, if any, and the said body shall for the purposes of the partnership be regarded as a unit or a single individual so that the benefits of the partnership hereinbefore agreed and declared shall enure and accrue to them and the survivors of them at the time when the accounts of the partnership are taken from time to time.

Clause 16 of the deed reads as follows :

That in the event of any of the children of said late N. V. Abdulla attaining the age of majority, as and when each child of his should attain such majority, he or she shall be called upon by the firm or its managing partner to elect to become a partner in the business or not to do so, and if he or she should elect to become a partner, then his or her share of profits shall be as may be agreed to between the parties hereto and him or her as the case may be. But if he or she should elect not to become a partner then he or she shall be entitled, in the manner hereinafter provided, to the payment of what may stand to his or her credit in the separate account and also to his or her proper share in the share of profits standing on such date to the credit of the body of minor children of said late N. V. Abdulla. The total amount of profits standing at any time to the credit of the minor children of said late N. V. Abdulla as a body as hereinbefore provided shall at the time of division or whenever required be divisible equally among all the children alive at the time without reference to the sex of the children or shares under Mahomedan law. And it is also hereby expressly declared and provided that if at any time the amount due to any of the children of late N. V. Abdulla under his or her separate account, or as his or her proper share in the profit account, the same shall be payable by the firm only on the expiry of one year from the date of demand or intimation.

This clause is reproduced from the statement of the case, but it would appear that the words "be demanded" or similar words have been omitted after the words "in the profit account." Throughout, the drafting of this clause is faulty, but reading the deed as a whole it is clear that the intention is that the minors are not to take a vested share in the fund, but that their rights shall be governed by the law of survivorship when the fund is distributed. Mr. Sesha Ayyangar on behalf of the Commissioner of Income-tax has, however, expressed the opinion that a duly constituted guardian of a minor would at any time be entitled to withdraw his ward's share. Section 26A, Income-tax Act, reads as follows:

(1) Application may be made to the Income-tax Officer on behalf of any firm, constituted under an instrument of partnership specifying the individual shares of the partners, for registration for the purposes of this Act and of any other enactment for the time being in force relating to income-tax or super-tax.

(2) The application shall be made by such person or persons, and at such times and shall contain such particulars and shall be in such form, and be verified in such manner, as may be prescribed; and it shall be dealt with by the Income-tax Officer in such manner as may be prescribed.

Section 2 (6-B) states that the expression "partners" includes any person who being a minor has been admitted to the benefits of partnership. The application which was made for the registration of the new partnership clearly did not comply with the requirements of S. 26A. The individual shares of the partners were not correctly specified. The widow was credited with a 6 annas share, whereas she was only entitled to a 2 annas share and nothing was said about the admission of the minors to the benefits of the partnership. The Income-tax Officer rejected the application on these grounds and there can be no doubt that in doing so he was acting in accordance with the law. The appellate Assistant Commissioner of Coimbatore having upheld the Income-tax Officer's refusal to register the firm the assessees applied to Commissioner of Income-tax to state a case to this Court and in accordance with their request the Commissioner, acting under S. 66 (2), has referred the following question:

Whether the individual shares of the minors who were admitted to the benefits of partnership can be said to have been specified in the deed presented for registration under S. 26A of the Act.

It will be observed that in framing the question in this way the Commissioner raises the wider issue whether the deed itself, not the application, specifies the individual shares of the minors in the benefits of the partnership. We have no hesitation in answering the question in the negative. No doubt the deed contemplates the admission of the minors to the benefits of the partnership, but it does not specify with certainty what their shares are to be. As the deed stands, should one of the minors die before the fund is distributed, his or her estate will not participate in the fund. The dead minor's share will go to the survivors. The Act requires the tax in a particular year to be levied on the income of the previous year. Now, supposing a minor died in the year of assessment he or she would have no right whatever in the profits made during the year of account, and unless the partnership deed specifically indicates what each partner shall receive out of the profits in the year of account it is not possible for the firm to comply with requirements of S. 26A. The section only contemplates the registration of a firm which is constituted under an instrument of partnership which with clearness states what the individual shares of the partners are to be, and that is certainly not the case here. The minors as a body cannot be regarded as a taxable unit. As the question referred is answered in the negative, the Commissioner of Income-tax is entitled to his costs, which we fix at Rs. 250.

In re T. V. Venkatarama Chetti Accused — Petitioner.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 685 and Petn. No. 643 of 1941, Decided on 23rd October 1941, to revise order of Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kollegal, D/- 17th February 1941.

Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 526 (8) and 344 — Intimation by party of his intention to move for transfer — Case adjourned — Party cannot be ordered to pay costs of the day.

When the Court grants an adjournment on intimation by a party under S. 526 (8) about his intention to move High Court for transfer, he does not grant an adjournment under S. 344, which permits the imposing of terms, but under S. 526 (8), which leaves no option to the Court to adjourn when once it has been intimated to the Court that the applicant intends to move the High Court for a transfer. The Magistrate has therefore no power to order the accused to pay the costs of the day to the prosecution. [P 179*b*,c]

S. Rajaraman and K. K. Gangadhara Ayyar — for Accused.

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

Order. — The petitioner was desirous of moving this Court to transfer a case from the file of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Kollegal; and in compliance with the provisions of S. 526 (8), Criminal P. C., he intimated the fact to the Court. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate thereupon passed an order under S. 526 (8) adjourning the case to 3rd March 1941, requiring the accused to execute a bond for Rs. 200, and fixing 3rd March 1941 as the date within which the High Court should be moved for transfer. He further directed that the petitioner should pay Rs. 39-8-0 as the costs of the day to the prosecution; because the petitioner had from time to time procured unnecessary adjournments and had delayed the application for transfer. The question that arises for consideration in this petition is whether the Magistrate was competent to pass an order directing the petitioner to pay the costs of the day to the prosecution.

Under S. 344, Criminal P. C., the Court has power to grant an adjournment at the request of a party upon such terms as it thinks fit and "such terms" would, of course, include payment of costs to the other side. Where however a party to a proceeding is desirous of moving the High Court for transfer, it is not necessary for him to ask for an adjournment. All he has to do is to intimate to the Court that he intends moving the High Court for a transfer. The Court then has to fix a day within which the applicant has to move the High Court and the security which the applicant has to furnish. If he executes the bond, then the Court is bound to grant an adjournment. In doing so, he does not grant an adjournment under S. 344, which permits the imposing of terms, but under S. 526 (8), which leaves no option to the Court to adjourn when once it has been intimated to the Court that the applicant intends to move the High Court for a transfer. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate had therefore no power to order the petitioner to pay the costs of the day to the prosecution. That being so, the order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on 17th February 1941 has to be set aside. The money paid by the petitioner will be refunded to him.

City Civil Court Appeal No. 74 of 1939, Decided on 30th April 1941, against decree of Addl. Judge, City Civil Court, Madras, D/- 2nd October 1939.

* Trade Mark — Infringement of — Particular name becoming associated with goods manufactured or sold by plaintiff — Another person using that name on goods so similar to plaintiff's that purchaser might infer common origin—Plaintiff is entitled to protection of his name—Fact that plaintiff did not deal in article which defendant put upon market in plaintiff's name is no defence.

Where a particular name has become associated with goods manufactured or sold by the plaintiff, he is entitled to the protection of its name against persons who use that name on goods which are so similar to that of the plaintiff that the purchaser might infer a common origin. The fact that the plaintiff does not deal in the articles which the defendant was putting upon the market in the plaintiff's name and therefore he did not infringe the trade name of the plaintiff is not a valid defence at law. The plaintiff mill had been using the word "diamond" for 15 years on cotton twill shirting manufactured and sold by it and it was not until 1937 the defendant mill conceived the idea of putting the word "diamond" on their goods with the deliberate object of inducing the public to believe that the goods they were selling were connected with the goods of the plaintiff's company :

Held that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction restraining the defendant from using the "diamond" trade name and the fact that the plaintiff mill had used the name "diamond" only in relation to white twill shirtings whereas the goods on which the defendant mill imprinted the word "diamond" were coloured striped shirtings was not a valid defence at law: (1898) 16 Reports of Patent & Trade Mark Cases 12 ; (1898) 15 Reports of Patent & Trade Mark Cases 105 and (1910) 1 Ch 248, Rel. on. [P 179*h*]

C. Srinivasachari — for Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit filed by the plaintiff for restraining the defendants from using the trade name "diamond" or any other colourable imitation of that word in relation to cotton shirtings manufactured and sold by defendant 2. The learned City Civil Judge decreed the suit in favour of the plaintiff and it is against this decision defendant 2 has preferred this appeal. The finding of the lower Court is that the word "diamond" has become associated in the public mind with the cotton twill shirtings which the plaintiff was dealing in since the last 13 years. This finding has been canvassed by Mr. Ramakrishna Iyer on behalf of the appellant but the evidence justifies the finding. The evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses was believed by the learned Judge and I see no reason to differ from his estimate of it. The main defence is that the plaintiff has no doubt been using the word "diamond" with reference to twill shirtings but is only with reference to plain white mul; whereas the goods on which defendant 2 imprinted the word "diamond" are coloured striped shirtings and therefore he does not infringe the trade name of the plaintiff. It seems to me that this defence is not a valid defence at law. Where a particular name has become associated with goods manufactured or sold by the plaintiff, he is entitled to the protection of its name against persons who use that name on goods which are so similar to that of the plaintiff that the purchaser might infer a common origin. There can be no doubt in this case that the goods sold by the defendant are so similar to that of the plaintiff that the purchaser might infer a common origin. The goods sold by defendant 2 are certainly twill shirtings; only he says that his goods are coloured and striped. I would refer in this connexion to the case in (1898) 16 Rep. of Patent & Trade Mark Cases 12.[1] In that case the Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co. used the word "Dunlop" in connexion with the goods manufactured by them which goods consisted of pneumatic tyres for cycles and other accessories such as pumps, inflators, etc., but they never sold burning oil or lubricants. The defendants started a company as the Dunlop Lubricant Company and used the word "Dunlop" in connexion with the oils and lubricants sold by them. Romer J. remarked that though the plaintiff did not sell the same class of goods as the defendant, it would be wrong to allow the defendant company to use the word "Dunlop" because that would induce the public to believe that the goods are that of the plaintiff company. In meeting the argument that the goods were of a different description the learned Judge remarked as follows:

> They (the plaintiff company) themselves are sellers of cycle accessories, though as a matter of fact upto the present time they have not sold burning oil or lubricants. But they may do so, and in the meantime it appears to me that they are entitled to come into Court and say that a name substantially identical with theirs ought not to be allowed to be used by the defendant in the way in which he is using it.

The same learned Judge gave an injunction in a similar case reported in (1898) 15 Rep. of Patent & Trade Mark Cases 105,[2] where the plaintiff company invented the word "Kodak" and applied it to certain of its cameras sold by them and the Kodak cameras were especially available for use on cycles and they were much used by cyclists. The defendant company began to use the word Kodak in connexion with the sale of their cycles. It was found by the learned Judge that the word "Kodak" had become associated in the public mind as the goods manufactured by the plaintiff company in connexion with the cycle trade though the plaintiff company were not selling cycles. In the course of the judgment the learned Judge observed thus:

> Many shops sell and deal in both bicycles and photographic cameras and materials. To a certain extent the plaintiff company is identified with the name "Kodak" as connected with cycles, and so great is the connexion between the two classes of business, that in all probability, I may say, the plaintiff company may wish hereafter to manufacture and sell cycles specially adapted to carry their kodaks. That was the position of affairs when the defendant began to do what I am going to call attention to. In my opinion, it (the defendant company) wanted to use the word "kodak" and acquire a monopoly of it, as applied to cycles, in the hope and intention of, in some shape or other, identifying their company with the plaintiff company whose 'kodaks' were so well known in the market —to cause the public to suppose either that the defendant company, under its own name or under the name of the "Kodak Cycle Company Ltd., was plaintiff company, or was, at any rate, connected with the plaintiff company, or to lead the public to suppose that the goods which the defendant company was going to sell were the goods of the plaintiff company, and so to obtain the benefit of the large reputation, and the benefit also of the expenditure of the plaintiff company.

He also remarked that "no intelligible reason has been or can be suggested why the defendants took the term 'Kodak' to be applied to their cycles." The facts in this case are similar. The plaintiff has been using the word "diamond" for the last 15 years and it was not until 1937, defendant 2 mill conceived the idea of putting the word 'diamond' on their goods and from the evidence given by defendant 2's witness it is clear that they chose the word 'diamond' with the deliberate object of inducing the public to believe that the goods they were selling were connected with the goods of the plaintiff's company. I am giving here an extract of his deposition which clearly shows what the object of the defendant company was in using the word "diamond."

> Q. Did you make any enquiry in the markets what trade names or trade marks have a good reputation in?
> A. I made no enquiry.
>
> Q. Is there any reason for your using the word "diamond"?
>
> A. No. I say I never saw the diamond trade name or trade mark of the plaintiff. I say also I never heard about it.
>
> Q. If you remove "diamond" from the words "diamond standard" imprinted on your goods, your goods would not find a good market?
>
> A. I cannot tell—how do I know.

He is unable to give any intelligible reason why he used the word "diamond" and the inference is irresistible that he has done it for the purpose of connecting himself with the plaintiff and his business. In (1910) 1

1. (1898) 16 Rep. of Patent & Trade Mark Cases 12, Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co. Ltd. v. The Dunlop Lubricant Co.
2. (1898) 15 Rep. of Patent & Trade Mark Cases 105, Eastman Photographic Materials Co. Ltd. v. John Griffiths Cycle Corporation Ltd. and Kodak Cycle Co. Ltd.

Ch. 248,[3] the same principle was applied by Neville J. In that case the plaintiffs manufactured and sold tyres for cycles and motor-cycles under the name of "Warwick". They never used that name in connexion with motor tyres. The defendant company began to advertise the sale of motor tyres under the name of "Warwick." The plaintiffs sought to restrain the defendant company from doing so. Held that they were entitled to the injunction. The learned Judge found that > having regard to the name 'Warwick' upon the market, a motor tyre introduced as a Warwick motor tyre would lead to the supposition that the persons who were dealing with it were the same persons as those who had for many years past been dealing with the Warwick cycle tyre.

In dealing with the argument that the plaintiff company never sold motor tyres, the learned Judge remarked as follows:

> It is also said that since the plaintiffs are not dealing in the article which the defendants are putting upon the market in their name there can be no damage for the loss of the sale of the goods, and therefore this action will not lie. Now I do not think that that argument is tenable. It seems to me the question is, are the defendants putting their goods upon the market in such a way as to lead to the supposition that they are the goods of the plaintiffs? If so I think the plaintiffs are entitled to an injunction restraining the defendants from so acting .... As I understand it, practically the sole asset possessed by the plaintiffs is the goodwill which attaches to the name "Warwick" in the tyre market.

In my view the learned City Civil Judge has approached the decision of the case from a correct standpoint and it has not been shown that his application of the principles of law to the facts of the case is in any way wrong. I therefore confirm the decree of the learned City Civil Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 741 and Petn. No. 696 of 1941, Decided on 15th October 1941, to revise judgment of Sub divisional Magistrate, Bellary, D/- 7th May 1941.

Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 480, 486 (1) and 407 (2)—Sentence under S. 480 by second class Magistrate — Appeal lies under S. 486 (1) only and to District Magistrate — S. 407 (2) does not apply—District Magistrate cannot transfer appeal to other Magistrate of first class.

An appeal lies against a sentence imposed under S. 480 only under S. 486 (1). Such appeal lies to the Court to which decrees or orders made in such Court are ordinarily appealable, i. e., to the District Magistrate in the case of the sentence passed by the second or third class Magistrate. The District Magistrate cannot direct such an appeal to be heard by any Magistrate of the first class subordinate to him. Sub-section (2) of S. 407 cannot be properly applied to an appeal under S. 486 (1).

K. S. Jayarama Ayyar and C. K. Venkatanarasimham — for Accused.

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

Order. — The petitioner was alleged to have committed contempt of Court; and the Sub-Magistrate who was presiding over that Court took summary action under S. 480, Criminal P. C., and sentenced the petitioner to a fine of Rs. 15. He preferred an appeal under S. 486, Criminal P. C. In the first instance, he preferred it to the Sub-divisional Magistrate. On an objection taken by the Prosecuting Sub-Inspector, the Sub-divisional Magistrate held that he had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal. The petitioner then approached the District Magistrate, who held that the Sub-divisional Magistrate had power. When the matter came back to the Sub-divisional Magistrate, the Prosecuting Sub-Inspector again raised the objection, but the Sub-divisional Magistrate felt that his hands had been tied by the District Magistrate and so overruled the objection. The Prosecuting Sub-Inspector then went again to the District Magistrate, who passed an order which is not on the record, but which presumably was to the effect that the Sub-divisional Magistrate had power to hear the appeal. The short point that arises here is whether the Sub-divisional Magistrate had jurisdiction or no.

An appeal lies against a sentence imposed under S. 480 only under S. 486 (1); for S. 407, which is the general section granting a right of appeal from second class Magistrates, applies only to persons convicted on a trial held by a Magistrate. As the petitioner was not convicted on a trial, he would have had no right of appeal at all were it not for S. 486 (1). The appeal against the sentence under S. 480 lies—in the words of S. 486(1)—"to the Court to which decrees or orders made in such Court are ordinarily appealable." Section 407 (1) makes an appeal ordinarily lie to the District Magistrate; for he has to hear all appeals from second or third class Magistrates if they are not transferred under S. 407 (2): vide 26 Mad. 656[1] which was followed by Jackson J. in 1931 M.W.N.Cr. 262.[2]

1. ('03) 26 Mad. 656 : 2 Weir 202 (F. B.), Eroma Variar v. Emperor.

The remaining question that has to be considered is whether the District Magistrate has a right to direct such an appeal to be heard by any Magistrate of the first class subordinate to him. It is argued by the learned Public Prosecutor that S. 486(2) gives such a power; for that sub-section says, "The provisions of Chap. 31 shall, so far as they are applicable, apply to appeals under this section. . . . ." Most of the provisions of Chap. 31 could properly be applied to appeals under S. 486; but this particular sub-s. (2) of S. 407 says that, "The District Magistrate may direct that any appeal under this section . . . . shall be heard by any Magistrate of the first class subordinate to him . . . ;" so that the District Magistrate has power to direct the transfer from his file to that of the first class Magistrate only appeals under S. 407 (2), i. e., appeals from convictions on a trial. That sub-section could not therefore be properly applied to an appeal under S. 486(1). The Sub-divisional Magistrate having acted without jurisdiction, this petition is allowed and the District Magistrate ordered to take the appeal on his file and to dispose of it according to law.

Appropriation of money with a dishonest intention attracts S. 407. [P]

V a German Director of a German Company, on the eve of the declaration of war between Britain and Germany, attempted to realise as much money as he could and therefore sold the enamels that he had in stock to D for Rs. 7643. D came with a cheque for that amount on the morning of 2nd September 1939, the day before the war was declared but the accused refused to take a cheque and insisted on being paid in cash. The cash was paid in the afternoon of 2nd September and the accused handed over the money to his wife:

Held that the doing of an act in anticipation of a statute or enactment which would make that act an offence was no offence. At the time when the accused took the money and handed it over to his wife intending to withhold it from the Government of India there was nothing in law prohibiting the accused from screening the money from the Government of India or the custodian of enemy property. Consequently, the acts of the accused done merely to screen the money from the Government of India or the custodian of enemy property without any intention to cause wrongful loss or wrongful gain to any other person or persons, did not constitute an offence. In the absence of evidence that he intended to profit himself at the expense of his firm, of which he was a partner and had appropriated money belonging to a number of persons even though he was entitled to a share of the money, or that he intended to defraud the creditors of the firm, i. e., he acted with the intention of causing wrongful loss to the creditors of the firm, the accused could not be held guilty under S. 407.

V. V. Srinivasa Ayyangar and B. T. Sundararajan—for Appellant.

Crown Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant has been convicted by the Second Presidency Magistrate, Madras, under S. 409, Penal Code, of committing criminal breach of trust with respect to a sum of Rs. 7643, the sale proceeds of certain enamels sold to one Dwarakadoss Narayanadoss; and he has been sentenced to nine months' rigorous imprisonment. The facts of the case are fairly simple. The appellant, a German Director of a German Company, on the eve of the declaration of war between Britain and Germany, attempted to realise as much money as he could; and so asked his clerk to try to find a purchaser for the enamels that he had in stock. He was brought into touch with Dwarakadoss Narayanadoss, who agreed to pay Rs. 7643 for the enamels. He came with a cheque for that amount on the morning of 2nd September 1939, the day before the war was declared; but the accused refused to take a cheque and said that he must be paid in cash. The cash was paid in the afternoon of 2nd September and the accused handed over the money to his wife. The question is whether in doing so he committed a breach of trust.

Mr. V. V. Srinivasa Ayyangar was inclined to argue at first that no breach of trust was committed, even if there had been a dishonest intention; but I think that the wording of S. 407 is wide enough to be attracted by a series of acts of this kind. The argument was not pressed because, as Mr. V. V. Srinivasa Ayyangar points out, it matters very little to the accused whether he is sentenced to nine months' rigorous imprisonment for criminal breach of trust or to some slightly lesser period for an offence under some other section of the Code. The real question is whether the accused acted dishonestly, that is to say, whether he intended to cause wrongful loss or wrongful gain to any person. The accused's explanation was that he received the money after the banks had closed on the second, which was a Saturday, that as he had no safe, he kept the money with him intending to remit it to the bank on the Monday, and that in the meantime he was arrested and interned. This statement is not consistent with the remainder of the accused's statement, from which it seems pretty clear that he was desirous of preventing this money from falling into the hands of the Government of India or whomsoever they might appoint to take charge of the assets of enemy firms. Moreover, the fact that he refused a cheque shows that he was anxious to avoid having the money in the bank. It is not, however, an offence to do an act in anticipation of a statute or enactment which would make that act an offence. At the time when the accused took this money and handed it over to his wife, intending to withhold it from the Government of India, there was nothing in law prohibiting the accused from screening the money from the Government of India or the custodian of enemy property. If, therefore, the acts of the accused were done merely to screen the money from the Government of India or the custodian of enemy property and he had no intention to cause wrongful loss or wrongful gain to any other person or persons, he did not commit an offence.

There are two interpretations of the acts of the accused which would make him guilty of an offence punishable under S. 407, Penal Code. One is that he intended to profit himself at the expense of his firm of which he was a partner. Others have shares in the assets of the company and if he had appropriated money belonging to a number of persons, he would have been guilty of a criminal breach of trust, even though he was entitled to a share of the money. The prosecution has not examined any other partner of the firm: nor is there any evidence, except the fact that he withdrew money from the partnership and kept it in his own custody, to show that he had any intention of defrauding the company. The explanation of the accused that he merely intended to protect the money so that in due course it might reach the hands of the share-holders is not unreasonable. That being so, we must give him the benefit of the doubt in this matter.

The other interpretation of the appellant's act which would make him guilty of the offence with which he was convicted is that even assuming that he acted from patriotic motives and with the intention of helping his firm, he nevertheless intended to defraud the creditors of the firm, i. e., he did these acts with the intention of causing wrongful loss to the creditors of the firm. If he had attempted to save money for his firm at the expense of his creditors, I think, he would have been criminally liable under S. 407, Penal Code. There is, however, no evidence to show that the assets available in India were not sufficient to meet the demands of Indian creditors. The evidence with regard to the amounts due to Indian creditors and the realizable outstandings of the firm is very vague, and it cannot, therefore, be presumed that the accused acted with an intention to cause wrongful loss to Indian creditors. Whatever way one may view the case, therefore, one is forced to the conclusion that the prosecution has not proved that the accused acted with any dishonest intention. The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the conviction and sentence set aside.

* (a) Hindu law — Debt — Father — Son's liability—Pious obligation—Sale by father not for necessity—Sale set aside at instance of sons —Vendee can compel father to refund — This liability of father, which was contingent, becomes present one on happening of contigency —Liability comes within the doctrine of pious obligation — If sale is set aside during father's life time, liability can be enforced against him and if transaction is set aside after father's death, vendee has claim against estate in hands of sons—Whether son pays willingly or not is immaterial: (Remarks in conflict), 44 Mad 801=('21) 8 A I.R. 1921 Mad 447=64 I.C. 698 OVERRULED.

Notwithstanding that in charging the family properties for his own necessity the father has exceeded his powers, the debt incurred by him is one which falls within the purview of the pious obligation rule and can be enforced against the sons to the extent of their interests in the family property. The Hindu law makes no difference between a mortgage and a sale in this connexion and therefore the fact that the father has abused his powers does not taint his obligation to the alienee to an extent which would justify the Court in holding that it is not vyavaharika. [P 186*e*]

When a father sells family property without the needs of the family requiring the transaction to be entered into he becomes liable to return to the vendee a proportionate part of the purchase consideration should the other coparceners insist, as they have the right to do, on the sale being set aside so far as they are concerned. On this event happening the vendee can compel the father to make the refund. The position then is that until the transaction is set aside at the instance of one or more of the other coparceners the father's liability is contingent, but when the event has happened the liability becomes a present one. The basis of the pious obligation rule is the benefit which will accrue to the soul of the father by the discharge of his earthly obligations. This being the case it is difficult to see what difference the nature of the father's liability in the law can make, provided that it is a liability which the law recognizes and is prepared to enforce in terms of money. When an unlawful sale of family property is set aside during the father's life time the vendee has an enforceable claim against the father for the return of a proportionate part of the purchase consideration and a liability of this nature must come within the rule, if it is to be applied in accordance with the wording of the texts and the underlying idea. If the transaction is set aside after his death the vendee has a claim against his estate and the situation is the same. The redemption of the father cannot depend upon the state of mind of the son who pays the debt but on the fact of its discharge whatever the reason behind : ('17) 4 A.I.R. 1917 Mad. 418, Approved; (Remarks in conflict), 44 Mad 801 = ('21) 8 A.I.R. 1921 Mad. 447=64 I. (b) Hindu law—Debt — Father — Duties and functions of father or manager are similar to those of a trustee — Expressions "trust" and "breach of trust" do not properly describe their position (Per Krishnaswami Ayyangar J.).

Legal expressions and legal concepts peculiar to one system of law do not always accurately fit into another system with a different origin and history and founded upon different theories. Hence expressions such as "trust" and "breach of trust" are strictly speaking out of place in describing the position of a father or manager in a joint Hindu family. Neither of them fills the position of an agent with respect to the family property in his charge, though it may be that some of his duties and functions may appear to be similar in character to those of trustees strictly so called : Case law discussed. [P 188*f*,g]

As long as the joint family system lasts with its doctrine of survivorship and the recognition of equal and co-ordinate rights in the sons, so long the theory of pious obligation should be maintained in the interests of the fair name of Hindu law. [P 189*g*]

B. V. Ramanarsu — for Appellants.

K. Umamaheswaran — for Respondents.

Leach C. J. — The rule of Hindu law which makes a son liable for his father's debts, provided they have not been incurred for illegal or immoral purposes has been discussed in innumerable cases in the Courts of India and many of the cases have been carried to the Privy Council. This appeal calls for a further discussion of the rule in order to settle a conflict of opinion in this Court with regard to its application. In 1917 respondents 1 and 2 with their father Lingayya constituted an undivided Hindu family. On 22nd June 1917, Lingayya purporting to act for his sons as well as himself, sold to the appellant for Rs. 1350 land belonging to the family. The area covered by the deed was 6·34 acres. On 19th July 1917 the father died. On 1st December 1924 respondents 1 and 2 filed in the District Munsif's Court a suit for a decree setting aside the sale to the appellant. They pleaded that their father was insane at the time of the transaction, that no consideration had passed and that there was no necessity for the sale. The District Munsif held that the father was sane and that consideration had passed, but that there was no necessity for the sale so far as the family was concerned. Consequently, he declared the transfer to be invalid to the extent of two-thirds. On appeal the Subordinate Judge of Bapatla concurred in the decision of the District Munsif and the land was then partitioned between respondents 1 and 2 and the appellant under the decree of the subordinate Court. On 5th December 1934 the appellant filed the present suit to recover a proportionate part of the purchase price. He claimed that he was entitled to a decree for Rs. 1478, being two-thirds of the Rs. 1350 with interest, on the ground that the pious obligation rule applied and that the vendor's sons were liable to the extent of the family property which had come into their hands. He also claimed that respondents 1 and 2 were in possession of properties belonging to their father personally and were liable as the representatives of his estate. The District Munsif considered that the pious obligation rule did not apply in such circumstances and dismissed the suit. The Subordinate Judge was of the same opinion and the present appeal is from the decree of the Subordinate

Judge dismissing the appeal from the decision of the District Munsif.

The appeal has been placed before a Full Bench because of the conflict of opinion to be found in the judgments of this Court in 31 M.L.J. 502[1] and 44 Mad. 801.[2] In the first of these two cases the facts were very similar to the facts in the case now before the Court. In 1894 the father of the defendants sold certain family properties to the plaintiff. The father died in 1904 and in the following year his sons sued the plaintiff for possession of their shares on the ground that the sale was not binding on them. It was held that the sale was unlawful so far as they were concerned and as their shares amounted to five-sixths of the whole it was set aside to this extent. The vendee then sued the sons to recover five-sixths of the purchase consideration, basing his claim on the pious obligation rule, and Seshagiri Iyer and Napier JJ. held that the claim was well founded. In the second of the two cases a son during the lifetime of his father sued for partition of the family estate and also asked that certain alienations of family property which his father had made should be set aside. The Court was called upon to decide merely whether the son was entitled to a decree for his share in the family properties without being required to refund the consideration paid to his father by the alienees.

It was held by Wallis C. J. and Seshagiri Iyer J. that the son was entitled to recover his share without any obligation to refund being imposed upon him. If the judgments had stopped there the present controversy would probably have not arisen, but both Wallis C. J. and Seshagiri Iyer J. went beyond the immediate question and the Court has now to consider whether their further observations can be accepted. There exists an important distinction between that case and the present one. There the question was whether the sons were entitled in a suit for partition filed by them against their father to have unlawful alienations made by him set aside unconditionally. Here the question is whether the sons can in a suit by the vendee be compelled by reason of their personal law to discharge a liability incurred by their father, namely a liability to refund a proportionate share of the purchase consideration. The liability to the vendee is the father's liability and until the transaction has been set aside the vendee is not in a position to invoke the pious obligation rule and if the father meets the vendee's claim the question of the application of the rule can never arise. Wallis C. J. laid great stress on the judgment of the Privy Council in 39 ALL. 437[3] and after observing that it was there pointed out that the alienation of joint family property by a father where there is neither necessity nor antecedent debt, amounts to a plain breach of trust and that the Mitakshara law does not warrant or legalise any such transaction, he added :

> It follows in my opinion that the Courts are bound to afford the sons adequate relief in the nature of a restitutio in integrum unfettered by any conditions based on the alleged pious obligation of the sons to pay their father's debts. I am moreover not satisfied that any such obligation exists in this case. Any liability which the father may incur to the alienees on such unconditional setting aside of the alienation arises from his own immoral act in making the alienation in the first instance in breach of the duty which he owed to his sons as manager of the joint family property, and I do not think the sons can properly be held to be under any pious obligation to relieve him from the consequences of his unsuccessful attempt to defraud them.

It is true that in delivering the judgment of the Board in 39 ALL. 437,[3] Lord Shaw expressed the opinion that the father, as the manager of the joint family of which he is the head, is in the position of a trustee and to permit him to use the family property for his own purposes would be equivalent to sanctioning a plain, and it might be, a deliberate breach of trust. The judgment delivered by Lord Shaw was the subject of much comment, as at first it was read as laying down the proposition that a loan raised by a father for his own necessity on the security of joint family property could not be regarded as constituting an antecedent debt which would render a subsequent mortgage of family property binding on his sons. The pious obligation rule makes the sons of a Hindu father liable for his debts when they have not been incurred for an illegal or immoral purpose. The important factor is the purpose for which the debt is incurred. Though the father may in abuse of his powers have executed a deed purporting to charge family property this will not make the debt illegal or immoral. Two years after the judgment in 39 ALL. 437[3] was delivered a Full Bench of five Judges of this Court,

1. ('17) 4 A. I. R. 1917 Mad. 418 : 36 I.C. 387 : 31 M. L. J. 502, Raman Pandithan v. Satha Kudumban.

3. ('17) 4 A.I.R. 1917 P.C. 61: 39 I.C. 280: 39 All. 437 : 44 I.A. 126 (P.C.), Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh.

Wallis C. J. presiding, considered its effect in 42 Mad. 711[4] and the conclusion arrived at was that the Privy Council did not intend to depart from what had upto then been accepted as the law and consequently held that a debt contracted by a Hindu father on the security of the joint family estate, provided that it was not contracted for an illegal or immoral purpose, is an antecedent debt and will support a subsequent mortgage which will involve the sons' shares in the property charged.

Shortly after this decision had been given a Bench of this Court in 43 Mad. 421[5] held that in a suit instituted against a Hindu father and his sons on a mortgage bond executed by the father alone the mortgagee was, notwithstanding that the mortgage was not binding on the sons, entitled to a conditional decree against the father personally and against the joint family property of himself and his undivided sons for the recovery of the balance should the proceeds of sale of the father's share of the mortgaged properties prove insufficient. In 46 ALL 95,[6] a Full Board of the Privy Council accepted this Court's interpretation of 39 ALL. 437[3] and there laid down the following propositions of law: (1) The managing coparcener of a joint undivided estate cannot alienate or burden the estate qua manager except for purposes of necessity; but (2) if he is the father and the reversioners are the sons he may, by incurring a debt, so long as it is not for an immoral purpose, lay the estate open to be taken in execution proceeding upon a decree for payment of that debt. (3) If he purports to burden the estate by mortgage, then unless that mortgage is to discharge an antecedent debt, it would not bind the estate. (4) Antecedent debt means antecedent in fact as well as in time, that is to say, that the debt must be truly independent and not part of the transaction impeached. (5) There is no rule that this result is affected by the question whether the father, who contracted the debt or burdens the estate, is alive or dead.

In view of the judgment of the Judicial Committee in 46 ALL. 95,[6] the dicta of Wallis C. J. in 44 Mad. 801[2] cannot be accepted as correctly stating the law. Notwithstanding that in charging the family properties for his own necessity the father has exceeded his powers the debt incurred by him is one which falls within the purview of the pious obligation rule and can be enforced against the sons to the extent of their interests in the family property. The Hindu law makes no difference between a mortgage and a sale in this connexion and therefore the fact that the father has abused his powers does not taint his obligation to the alienee to an extent which would justify the Court in holding that it is not vyavaharika. The observations of Seshagiri Iyer J. in 44 Mad. 801[2] remain to be considered. Seshagiri Iyer J. said in effect that the pious obligation rule only applies to debts of the father which were enforceable when the family was joint. He considered that the liability of the father to refund to the alienee the purchase price when an alienation of family property is set aside is a liability for unliquidated damages and not a debt, but even if it becomes a debt, it is not a debt on the date of the suit for partition. Seshagiri Iyer J. referred to his previous decision and distinguished it on the ground that in that case there had been no severance of the joint family status. In my judgment this distinction is not sufficient and I find myself also unable to accept the opinion which Seshagiri Iyer J. expressed with regard to the nature of the obligations to which the rule applies. I consider that the rule has a much wider application.

In (1939) 1 M.L.J. 352,[7] my learned brother Krishnaswami Ayyangar examined with great care in the light thrown by the ancient texts, with which he is so well acquainted, the nature of the obligation of a Hindu son to discharge his father's debts and his conclusion was that the rule is not confined to a debt known to the English common law, but applies to other financial obligations incurred by the father, unless of course incurred for illegal or immoral purposes. I respectfully agree with all that my learned brother said there. He was not however called upon to express an opinion on the question whether the rule applies in the case where the father's liability is contingent and the contingency arises only after his death. That is the position in the present case and therefore it is necessary to carry the discussion somewhat further.

When a father sells family property without the needs of the family requiring the transaction to be entered into he becomes liable to return to the vendee a proportionate part of the purchase consideration should the other coparceners insist, as they have the right to do, on the sale being set aside so far as they are concerned. On this event happening the vendee can compel the father to make the refund. The position then is that until the transaction is set aside at the instance of one or more of the other coparceners the father's liability is contingent, but when the event has happened the liability becomes a present one. The basis of the pious obligation rule is the benefit which will accrue to the soul of the father by the discharge of his earthly obligations. This being the case it is difficult to see what difference the nature of the father's liability in the law can make, provided that it is a liability which the law recognises and is prepared to enforce in terms of money. When an unlawful sale of family property is set aside during the father's lifetime the vendee has an enforceable claim against the father for the return of a proportionate part of the purchase consideration and, it seems to me that a liability of this nature must come within the rule, if it is to be applied in accordance with the wording of the texts and the underlying idea. If the transaction is set aside after his death the vendee has a claim against his estate and the situation is the same.

In 44 Mad. 801,[2] Seshagiri Iyer J., said that the father can hardly be expected to be rescued from the hell when the son is compelled, very much against his will and with imprecations in his mouth, by a decree of Court to make the payment. In 51 Mad. 361,[3] Coutts-Trotter C. J., described the rule as being an illogical relic of antiquity unsuited to any but a primitive society. Even if the description given by Seshagiri Iyer J., of the attitude of the Hindu son is a true one—it is not for me to express an opinion—I cannot imagine what difference it will make to the father if the son discharges a parental obligation with imprecations on his lips or with a smile on his face. What matters is payment to the father's creditor. The criticism of Coutts-Trotter C. J., is equally irrelevant in view of the fact that the rule still remains a rule of Hindu law and, as I had occasion to point out in (1941) 2 M.L.J. 311,[9] the Court is bound to apply it unless the Legislature steps in and alters the law. For the reasons indicated I consider that 31 M.L.J. 502[1] was rightly decided and that the observations in 44 Mad. 801[2] which are in conflict should be disregarded. It follows that in my opinion the Courts below erred in dismissing the suit and I would remand the case to the trial Court for decision on the other issues. Learned counsel for the respondents has intimated that his clients claim to be entitled to a scaling down of the debt in accordance with the provisions of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act. In the circumstances this claim should be made in the District Munsif's Court. The appellant is entitled to his costs here and in the Subordinate Judge's Court. The decree for costs passed against him by the trial Court should be set aside and a direction given that the costs of that Court should abide the result of the trial. The appellant is also entitled to the refund of court-fees paid on this appeal to the Subordinate Court and on his appeal to this Court.

Happell J.—I agree and have nothing to add.

Krishnaswami Ayyangar J.—While I concur with the judgment just now pronounced by my Lord, I have considered it necessary, in view of the importance of the question at issue, to add a few words of my own by way of criticism of some of the opinions expressed in 44 Mad. 801.[2] The actual decision reached in that case, on the facts such as they were, is not open to question, if I may say so with respect. In arriving at the conclusion, that the alienee is not entitled to relief in the very suit in which the alienation is set aside, Wallis C. J., was only following, as he himself stated, the practice of the Court according to which a condition for the refund of the consideration is not ordinarily attached to the decree. Such a condition can properly be imposed where the alienation is justifiable in part, but not in whole, as in such a case the alienee is obviously entitled to an equity in respect of that part of the consideration which is found good. But where on account of a total absence either of necessity or antecedent debt, the father's sale is declared not binding on the sons to any extent whatever, the alienee can claim no equity as the liability of the sons to refund the consideration arises independently of the sale successfully impeached by them in the suit. It is in fact an extraneous obligation cast upon them by their personal law. On this ground it was that the learned Chief Justice came to the conclusion that the sons were entitled to relief in the nature of restitutio in integrum unfettered by any condition for the refund of the purchase money. This was sufficient to dispose of the case and the further question whether the disappointed alienee has a remedy against the sons by recourse to a separate suit did not arise for determination. But the Chief Justice went on to express the opinion that the father's liability to refund the consideration in the circumstances mentioned, does not constitute such a debt as the sons will be bound to discharge by reason of their pious obligation. Support for this opinion was derived from the observations of the Privy Council in 39 ALL. 437,[3] in which Lord Shaw authoritatively defined an antecedent debt as meaning a debt antecedent in time and dissociated in fact from the alienation in question. The noble Lord proceeded, however, to explain the principle in language which literally taken would tend to displace a long current of Indian authority and upset numberless titles to property. He observed that the joint family estate cannot be effectively sold or charged so as to bind the sons except when it is made, > in order to discharge an obligation not only antecedently incurred but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available for such joint estate.

9. ('41) 28 A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 772 : 197 I.C. 199 : (1941) 2 M.L.J. 311 (F.B.), Murali Mohana Reddi v. Gangaraju.

The words italicised suggest a qualification not therefore known to Hindu law (21 Mad. 28[10]) and for sometime was understood as laying down the proposition that no mortgage for ready money could ever be an antecedent debt the payment of which was capable of supporting a new and later mortgage.

This qualification has since been declared untenable first by a Full Bench of this Court in 42 Mad. 711[4] and later by a Full Board of of the Privy Council in 46 ALL. 95[6] on the ground that the observations of Lord Shaw were in the nature of obiter dicta, and not a decision on the point. It is in the passage thus commented on, there occur the other observations referred to by Wallis C. J., which were obviously made for the purpose of elucidating the theory underlying the doctrine since exploded as mentioned. Lord Shaw said that to permit a father to mortgage the family property for his own purposes would be to enable him to sacrifice those very rights which he was bound to conserve and that this would be "equivalent to sanctioning a plain, and it may be, a deliberate breach of trust." Breaches of trust are of course offences against morality and may even sound in crime; and it may well be that a liability arising out of a breach of trust bears the taint of illegality or immorality. But even apart from authority, it is difficult to accept the proposition, that an alienation by the father, when there was no necessity or antecedent debt, is a breach of trust in this sense. Legal expressions and legal concepts peculiar to one system of law do not always accurately fit into another system with a different origin and history and founded upon different theories. For instance the notion that the property of maths and similar religious institutions is trust property and those charged with its administration are trustees caught the fancy of lawyers and held the field for sometime in this country until the Privy Council set aside this view in 44 Mad. 831[11] explaining away a previous decision of the Board in 43 Cal. 707.[12]

If I may say so with respect, expressions such as "trust" and "breach of trust" are strictly speaking out of place in describing the position of a father or manager in a joint Hindu family. Neither of them fills the position of an agent with respect to the family property in his charge, though it may be that some of his duties and functions may appear to be similar in character to those of trustees strictly so called: see 26 Mad. 544[13] at p. 553. But it is necessary to bear in mind the warning uttered more than once before — the decision of the Privy Council in 44 Mad. 656[14] at p. 663 is an instance in point— that it is a mistake to apply to such persons the strict rules of law applicable to trustees without necessary qualification. Neither a father nor a manager is in law accountable as a trustee. Neither of them is legally bound to keep or render accounts. Neither of them is under a duty to save, economise or invest the funds of the family. They cannot be called upon to account for acts of negligence. In the distribution of the family income they are guided not by the quantum of the share of the individual members but by their actual needs as conceived by them. Such being their position, it will not be incorrect to describe it as one far removed from those duties and restrictions which are associated with trustees strictly so called. It is not perhaps necessary to labour the point in view of the decision of the Board in 46 ALL. 95[6] already referred to, where their Lordships accepted after a critical examination of Lord Shaw's observations in the earlier case, the proposition that an independent debt contracted by a Hindu father on the security of the family property is still an antecedent debt sufficient to support a later mortgage of the sons' share notwithstanding that the debt was incurred simultaneously with the execution of the prior mortgage. The theory of breach of trust must therefore be held to have been laid to rest for good as otherwise the invalid charge created by the father on the family property, invalid for the reason that there was a simultaneous borrowing of ready money, could not have been held to have been a good antecedent debt which was neither illegal nor immoral. There can be no doubt that the Privy Council held a debt to be a good antecedent debt. It is impossible to mistake the meaning of the illustration given by their Lordships at page 102 of the report:

> For after all, if looked at straight in the face, what position can be more anomalous than this. A father who is manager, borrows a like sum from A and B. To A he gives a mortgage on the family estate containing a personal covenant. To B he gives a simple acknowledgment of loan. B sues and gets a decree; on this decree execution can follow and the estate can be taken. A suing upon his mortgage cannot recover. It seems to have been felt that if the debt for which a mortgage is given was in any proper sense, antecedent, then it, so to speak, escaped the direct infringement of the principle that the father manager could not burden the estate except for necessity.

In fact and apart from the dicta to be found in 39 ALL. 437[3] no authority for the proposition can be found either in the texts or the decided cases. Even in that case it is to be observed that the Judicial Committee were not dealing with the nature or incidents of a father's alienation for the purpose of fixing the character of his liability consequent on the alienation being set aside at the instance of the sons; much less for the purpose of determining the scope of the pious obligation of the latter. It would therefore be wrong, in my opinion, to rely on this decision in justification of the view that the liability to refund is an immoral debt which the sons are not bound to discharge; and in my opinion receives support by the decision of this Court in 43 Mad. 421.[5] What has always to be remembered in this connexion is that a father's debt even though incurred for his own personal purposes has still to be discharged by the sons, notwithstanding that it met no necessity or procured no benefit for the joint family. It is therefore difficult to see how the fact that money was obtained for such purposes under a purported sale, so long as the object was neither illegal nor immoral can alter the character of the liability or convert the resulting obligation into an avyavaharika debt. It is the purpose for which the money is obtained which determines the character of the debt and not the means adopted which may vary. It follows from what has been said that the observations of the learned Chief Justice cannot be taken to represent the correct rule of law on the point in question.

Seshagiri Iyer J. delivered a separate judgment though he concurred with the Chief Justice. He took the occasion for expressing the view that the pious obligation of the son to discharge the debts of the father which were neither illegal nor immoral was in the nature of a moral precept which should never have been recognised by Courts of law and indeed he went the length of wishing that the texts on the point had been consigned to the limbo of oblivion as, in his opinion, they involved a theory incongruous with modern conditions. This, however, is an opinion which few, I consider, will share. As long as the joint family system lasts with its doctrine of survivorship and the recognition of equal and co-ordinate rights in the sons, so long it seems to me that the theory of pious obligation should be maintained in the interests of the fair name of Hindu law, and its title to take rank with civilized systems of jurisprudence. Mayne in his well known treatise on Hindu Law (Mayne's Hindu Law, Edn. 9, p. 348) explains the rule underlying the principle thus:

> The notion of a religious as well as a civil obligation to pay debts evidences the introduction of Brahmanical theories into a law which was previously founded merely upon natural justice. The kindred theory that the soul of a deceased debtor could not find repose till his debts were discharged probably grew up still later. The religious theory of obligation could well co-exist with the civil theory, as affording an additional sanction for a liability which was already recognised. The antiquity of the texts which state this religious theory shows that it had sprung up before the family bonds were a relaxed, by allowing the sons to possess a co-ordinate interest in the property and a right to restrain their father in his dealings with it. But even after this later development, natural equity and convenience would continue to attach a specially binding character to debts which were contracted by the official head and representative of the family, while the religious obligation would assume greater prominence in proportion as the secular obligation was weakened.

The italics are mine. The basis of the rule also fell to be explained by the Allahabad High Court in 55 ALL. 283,[15] where Iqbal Ahmed J., as he then was, made the following pertinent observations :

So far as I can see, this rule was introduced as a sort of corrective to the rule that every male memb ber of a joint Hindu family acquires an interest in the joint family property from the moment of his birth, and therefore no member of such family can predicate the extent of his share or can alienate the same. If by the mere fact of his birth the newly born son acquires an interest in the joint family property, and thus automatically reduces the extent of his father's interest in the same, it is but fair and just that he should shoulder along with the father the liabilities of the father. To make provision for the payment of debts due to a creditor far from being "unsuited to any but a primitive and patriarchal society" is in consonance with common honesty and is, I should think, the recognised practice of the civilized world. The liability imposed on a son, to pay the just debts of his father is not a gratuitous obligation thrust on him by Hindu law but is a necessary corollary—if not a c salutary counter-balancing proviso—to the principle that the son from the moment of his birth acquires, along with the father, an interest in joint family property.

It appears to me that the statement of the law contained in the passages extracted above exhibit a truer perception of the fundamentals of the doctrine and there would seem to be little reason either for those who are governed by the Hindu law to feel ashamed of it or for the Courts which are called upon to administer it to feel any compunction in enforcing it. I also regret to say that I find it difficult to follow the d dictum that a father can hardly be expected to be rescued from hell when the son is compelled very much against his will and with imprecations in his mouth by a decree of Court to make the payment. With religious beliefs held or denied, the Court has nothing to do. But even under the ancient texts, it is to be remembered that the liability of the son whether it had its origin in secular or religious considerations, was a rule of law and not a rule of morality binding merely on the conscience. However that may be, it is hard to appreciate the argument ; for,

15. ('33) 20 A.I.R. 1933 All. 235 : 149 I.C. 181 : 55 All. 283 : 1933 A.L.J. 550, Lalta Prasad v. Gajadar Shukul.

surely the redemption of the father cannot e depend upon the state of mind of the son who pays the debt but on the fact of its discharge whatever the reason behind.

The learned Judge has also expressed the veiw that the statement of the Judicial Committee in 39 ALL. 437[3] about the sale by the father amounting to a breach of trust deserved to be strictly enforced in which event, he was of opinion that the decisions in 37 Mad. 458,[16] 4 Pat. L. J. 653,[17] 40 Bom. 126[18] and 43 Bom. 612[19] would stand in need of review as they tried to put a strained construction on the rule of pious obligation. Here again, there is need for caution and a f wholesale denunciation is, if I may say so with respect, scarcely warranted. If the theory that a sale by the father even when made for no justifiable purpose is a breach of trust is negatived, as I think it should be, the learned Judge's criticism of these cases, even if sound, would be found to be of little weight in advancing the argument. But it may be pointed out that the cases decided by this Court bearing on the question whether a son is liable for the debt of the father connected with a breach of trust have been recently considered by this Court in (1940) 2 M. L. J. 179[20] in the light of the decision of the Privy Council in 56 ALL. 548[21] and my g Lord the Chief Justice has, if I may say so with respect, clearly stated the principle in the following words :

This Court has always held that where a father has fully received money the fact that he misappropriates it later will not change the character of the debt and the son is liable under the pious obligation rule. Where a person receives money on behalf of another a civil liability immediately arises and the fact that the person who has received it fails in his duty to pay it over to the person entitled to it does not alter the civil character of the debt.

The question which arises in this class of cases is whether a liability of the father having its origin in a criminal act of his gives rise to a debt falling within the pious obligation rule, and the answer clearly is that it does not. It is certainly not a crime or anything akin to it for a father to raise money for his personal needs by selling family property. The restraint on his powers in this behalf is merely designed to provide some measure of check, albeit temporary in character.

A close examination of the judgment of Seshagiri Iyer J. reveals that it is based upon two grounds, namely, (1) that the claim of the disappointed purchaser for a refund of the consideration on the sale in his favour being set aside at the instance of the sons is really in the nature of a claim for damages against the father which does not materialise into a debt until the sale is set aside; (2) that if on that date the father was already dead or a division in status had been established between him and his sons, the latter would not in either event be liable.

With respect to the first ground, I have little to add to what has fallen from my Lord the Chief Justice. As regard the second ground I may perhaps add that the law on the point which was involved in a certain amount of doubt has since been elucidated by the Full Bench decision in 51 Mad. 361[8] which has firmly established the liability of the sons after partition for a debt of the father incurred before it. After this decision the only point which may require consideration is whether the obligation is one which has been incurred by the father before partition, and whether it is tainted by illegality or immorality. His subsequent death would make no difference; neither would a subsequent severance of status. I respectfully agree with my Lord in holding that the liability of the father, contingent though it be, is still inherent in the sale itself, and not a new liability coming into existence for the first time when the sale is set aside.

Of the decisions referred to by Seshagiri Iyer J. at p. 809, (of 44 Mad.) the case in 9 Mad. 188[22] will be found on examination to have no reference to the question of the liability of the sons for a debt of the father after partition. 22 Mad. 519[23] has been interpreted in the Full Bench decision in 51 Mad. 361[8] and held not to affect the principle laid down in it. The actual decision in 35 M.L.J. 451[24] goes no further than that in the suit by the sons for the recovery of their share in the joint family property sold by their father for purposes not binding on the family, the purchaser is not entitled to any charge on the sons' share for any portion of the consideration paid by him. It expressly left open the question whether or not he was entitled to sue the father and the sons by a separate suit for the refund of the consideration which had failed. The learned Judge's judgment in 31 M.L.J. 502[1] is clearly in point, and there the Court held that the debt of the father arose when he made the invalid sale and that it made no difference to the liability of the sons that the purchaser's claim was in the nature of unliquidated damages against the father. The position here taken is, if I may say so with respect, quite correct, only we must understand the word 'debt' used in this decision as well as in the case in 35 M.L.J. 451[24] in the wider sense in which the word "rina" is used in Hindu law. For the reasons explained I am of opinion that the view of Seshagiri Iyer J., that the death of the father or the disruption of the joint family before the sale is set aside, would deprive the purchaser of his remedies as against the sons cannot be supported either on principle or authority. I may add that for an obligation of the father to be enforceable against the sons, it does not require to be converted into a decree in the first instance.

v.

Maharajah of Pithapuram — Respondent.

O. P. No. 31 of 1941, Decided on 15th September 1941; reference by Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras.

Income-tax Act (1922, as amended by Act 7 of 1939), S. 16 (1) (c) — Settlement in favour of daughter prior to amendment revocable — Income of 1938-39 can be deemed as income from revocable transfers within S. 16 (1) (c).

It is the law in force at the time of assessment which governs the assessment and not the law as it was during the year in which the income was earned: ('41) 28 A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 59 (S.B.), Rel. on. [P 192 g, h]

Hence the income of the year 1938-39 derived from the assets comprised in the revocable instruments of trust and settlements executed by the assessee in favour of his daughters before the commencement of the Income-tax Act, 7 of 1939 can be deemed to be income of the assessee under revocable transfers of the assets as contemplated by cl. (c) of sub-s. (1) of S. 16 as amended by the Income-tax Amendment Act, 7 of 1939. [P 192*c*, h]

K. V. Sesha Ayyangar — for Petitioner.

Ch. Raghava Rao — for Respondent.

Leach C. J.—By four deeds, all dated 5th April 1933 and referred to in these proceedings as "deeds of trust and settlement" the assessee settled immovable properties on each of his four daughters. The properties were to be held by the assessee as trustee during his lifetime. The deeds also provided that after his death his eldest son was to be the trustee. The assessee reserved to himself powers to revoke the settlements or to make fresh dispositions just as he deemed fit. In view of the provisions of S. 16 (1) (c), Income-tax Act, a clause which was inserted by the Amendment Act of 1939, the Income-tax Officer held that the assessee was liable to be taxed in respect of the income received by his daughters from the settled properties during the year of account (1938-39). The assessee objected. He contended that the Income-tax Officer was wrong in giving what he called retrospective effect to the latter part of S. 16 (1) (c). Accordingly he appealed to the Assistant Commissioner who concurred in the order of the Income-tax Officer. On the application of the assessee the Commissioner of Income-tax has referred to this Court under the provisions of S. 66 (2) the following question:

Whether the income of the year 1938-39 derived from the assets comprised in the revocable instruments of trust and settlement executed by the petitioner in favour of his four daughters on 5th April 1933, i.e., before the commencement of the Income-tax Act 7 of 1939 can be deemed to be income of the petitioner under revocable transfers of assets as contemplated by cl. (c) of sub-s. (1) of S. 16, Income-tax Act, 11 of 1922, as amended by the Income-tax Amendment Act, 7 of 1939.

In referring this question the Commissioner has given reasons for supporting the order of the Income-tax Officer and we agree with him. Section 16 (1) (c) says:

All income arising to any person by virtue of a settlement or disposition whether revocable or not, and whether effected before or after the commencement of the Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939, from assets remaining the property of the settlor or disponer, shall be deemed to be income of the settlor or disponer and all income arising to any person by virtue of a revocable transfer of assets shall be deemed to be income of the transferor.

It is admitted, as it must be, that the deeds executed by the assessee operate to transfer the assets, and being revocable, the income arising from the lands transferred must from 1st April 1939 be deemed to be the income of the assessee. But it is said that the income which the Income-tax Officer proposed to tax in respect of the year 1939-40 was income which had accrued before the passing of the Amendment Act and that this makes all the difference. The learned advocate for the assessee has laid stress on the fact that with regard to the deeds falling within the first part of the clause quoted the Legislature has been careful to state that the provision shall have effect whether the deed was executed before or after the commencement of the Amendment Act. The fact that there are no words to this effect in the latter part of the clause indicates, he says, that the Legislature did not intend income arising from properties which are comprised in revocable transfers to be taxed until the amending Act had been in force sufficiently long to cover the year of account.

This argument ignores the plain wording of the clause and the scheme of the Income-tax Act. When there is income accruing to a person by virtue of a revocable transfer of assets that income is to be deemed the income of the transferor. When the Income-tax Officer made the assessment in this case the amending Act had come into force. The Income-tax Act says that an assessee shall pay the tax in respect of the assessment year based on the income received by him in the previous year. The assessee's income which the Income-tax Officer had to assess for the year 1939-40 included the income received from the properties which were covered by these revocable deeds of transfer. The income had actually been received by the daughters, but as the result of the amending Act that income must be deemed to be the income of their father. Therefore we agree with the Commissioner of Income-tax in his opinion that it is the law in force at the time of assessment which governs the assessment in this case and not the law as it was during the year in which the income was earned. The same opinion has been expressed by the Patna High Court: see 9 I. T. R. 137.[1] For the reasons given we answer the reference in the affirmative. The Commissioner of Income-tax is entitled to his costs, which we fix at Rs. 250.

Second Appeal No. 906 of 1938, Decided on 3rd October 1941, against decree of Sub-Judge, Guntur, in A. S. No. 94 of 1937.

(a) Hindu law — Reconversion — Sudras — Hindu convert to Christianity coming back to Hinduism—Expiatory ceremonies.

Among Sudras, no formal expiatory ceremonies are necessary when a Hindu convert to Christianity comes back to Hinduism unless such ceremonies are enjoined by the practice of the community in question : ('40) 27 A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 513, Rel. on. [P 194*g,h*]

(b) Hindu law — Conversion — Hindu father and minor son becoming Christians — Reconversion to Hinduism does not ipso facto bring about coparcenary relationship.

The conversion of a Hindu father and his minor son to Christianity effects a dissolution of the family tie and their reconversion to Hinduism does not ipso facto bring about coparcenary relationship in the absence of subsequent act or transaction pointing to a reunion : ('28) 15 A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 1064, Disting.; ('19) 6 A.I.R. 1919 Mad. 988, Ref. [P 195*h*]

(c) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 41 — Applicability.

Section 41 does not apply to court sales : ('27) 14 A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 368, Rel. on. [P 196*d*]

(d) Estoppel—When arises.

No estoppel can arise when no representation is shown to have been made and acted upon. [P 196*e*]

(e) Hindu law—Alienation — Father — Son's liability — Sale in execution against father — Whether son's interest also passes.

The question whether a son's interest in family property also passes at a sale held in execution proceeding taken against the father alone depends not on whether such proceedings arise out of a decree of a civil Court or an award by the Registrar under the Co-operative Societies Act but on consideration of Hindu law. [P 196*f,g*]

K. Kotayya — for Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal raises questions of some importance as to the status of the members of a Hindu family, who having been converted to Christianity are subsequently reconverted to their old faith. The appellant is the son of respondent 1 and he sued for partition of his half share in the family properties, claiming that a mortgage executed by respondent 1 in favour of respondent 3 and a court sale in favour of respondent 5 in execution proceedings instituted against respondent 1 are not binding on his share in the properties. The Court below has upheld both the transactions in their entirety and this appeal has been preferred challenging the correctness of that decision.

The facts material for the decision of this appeal may be briefly stated. The appellant was born on 1st July 1914. In 1917, respondent 1 and his wife became converts to Christianity and the appellant was also baptised in the same year. In 1930 while the appellant was still a minor, respondent 1 executed the mortgage Ex. X which is one of the transactions now impeached in favour of respondent 3 for Rs. 7000 for discharging antecedent debts due to third parties. The mortgage was assigned to respondent 4 in March 1932 and it is admitted that only a sum of about Rs. 340 remains payable under it. Respondent 1 also borrowed Rs. 800 in November 1930 from the local Co-operative Society, respondent 2 herein, for discharging a debt due to another creditor. As this sum was not duly repaid the society brought claim No. 1793 of 1932 before the Registrar of Co-operative Societies and obtained an award which under the rules framed under the Co-operative Societies Act, 1912, was executable in the civil Courts as if it were a decree of the Court. In such execution proceedings items 1 to 7 and 9 of the plaint A schedule were brought to sale and purchased by respondent 5 on 21st January 1935 for Rs. 2000 subject to the mortgage already referred to which covered all the A schedule properties.

Now, the appellant's contention is that the conversion of his family resulted in a severance of the coparcenary status, that debts incurred by his father after such conversion could not bind the appellant or his share in the properties which were all admittedly ancestral and that neither the mortgage nor the court sale referred to above could affect the appellant's interests in the properties. On the other hand, the alienees contended that the appellant's family had all along been behaving as if they were Hindus of the Kamma caste and were treated as such by other Hindus of the same community in the village, that in such circumstances even if the appellant and his father had at one time become Christians, they must be deemed to have been reconverted to Hinduism and that, in any case, the appellant having held himself out to be an undivided son of respondent 1 and a member of a joint Hindu family, was estopped from pleading the contrary.

The trial Court held that notwithstanding their conversion to Christianity in 1917, the conduct of the parties showed that they must have soon forsaken their new religion and gone back to their old faith, and that even if they continued to be Christians throughout, they must be taken to have elected to abide by the Hindu law notwithstanding their conversion to Christianity. In view of these findings, it upheld the validity of both the transactions applying the rules of Hindu law. In the lower appellate Court, it was urged for the appellant that it was not open to the trial Court to find that the appellant and his father had been reconverted to Hindu ism as no specific issue was raised on the point, that on the footing that the parties remained Christians, no coparcenary as known to the Hindu law could exist between the appellant and his father as they were governed in matters of testamentary and intestate succession by the Succession Act, and that therefore respondent 1 had no power to bind the interests of the appellant in the common properties by his borrowing or alienation. The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the question of reconversion to Hinduism was immaterial as the trial Court had held that even if the parties continued to be Christians, they must be taken to have elected to be governed by the Hindu law and he agreed with that finding. He thought that there was nothing in the Succession Act to preclude persons who have been converted to Christianity being still governed by the Hindu law. He accordingly dismissed the appeal subject to a small modification as to which no question now arises.

Mr. Rangachari, the learned counsel for the appellant, did not attack the finding of the lower Courts that having regard to the long course of unequivocal conduct, the parties must be taken to have adopted the Hindu law even after their conversion to Christianity ; but he urged that it was not legally possible for them, after the passing of the Succession Act, to hold property in coparcenary with the incident of survivorship, that the appellant and his father held the properties only as tenants-in-common and that the principle that a sale of family properties in execution of a decree obtained against a Hindu father for a debt which is neither illegal nor immoral passes the interests of his undivided son also could not be invoked by the auction purchaser as that principle is founded on the existence of coparcenary relationship. Nor was it possible, he submitted, for the same reason for respondent 1 to mortgage the properties so as to affect the appellant's interest. On the other hand, the respondent while maintaining that the view taken by the lower appellate Court was correct, submitted that it was unnecessary to consider the bearing of the provisions of the Succession Act, on the status of the parties subsequent to their conversion to Christianity as the evidence in the case unmistakably showed that the family had re-entered their old faith long before respondent 1 executed the mortgage and incurred the debt which resulted in the court sale. He urged that the case should be dealt with on the footing that the family had been reconverted to Hinduism before the impeached transactions took place and invited this Court in exercise of its powers under S. 103, Civil P. C., to determine this question as it has not been determined by the lower appellate Court. It is true that as already observed, no specific issue was raised on this point in the trial Court although reconversion was expressly relied on in para. 6 of the written statements as one of the grounds on which the validity of the transactions in so far as they affected the appellant's share in the properties was sought to be sustained. But issue 4 which expressly refers to the reasons stated in para. 6 of the written statements raises the question with sufficient clearness and it is also clear that the parties went to trial fully aware that this was one of the questions for determination as evidence has been adduced on the point on both sides without any objection on the ground that no specific issue was framed. In these circumstances, I see no force in the complaint that the question of reconversion was not properly made the subject of enquiry in the trial Court and as the evidence on record is sufficient, this Court can determine the question.

It has been held by this Court that among Sudras, no formal expiatory ceremonies are necessary when a Hindu convert to Christianity comes back to Hinduism unless such ceremonies are enjoined by the practice of the community in question : see I.L.R. (1940) Mad. 653[1] where earlier cases to the same effect are also referred to. There is no suggestion here that any particular expiatory ceremonies are observed on such occasions in the Kamma community to which the parties belong. In the present case, whatever might have been the position prior to 1928, the appellant admitted in his evidence that he was married in that year when he was only 14 years old to a girl belonging to a Hindu family and that the marriage was conducted according to Hindu rites, a Brahmin priest officiating at the ceremony. He further admitted that three of his sisters who had been married so far were all married to Hindus according to Hindu rites and were living with their husbands as Hindus. All these marriages took place before 1933. He also said :

> The other Kammas in the village would be inviting us for feasts and we would be dining with them. For some days in the beginning the other caste people were not inviting us. All Hindu Kammas have been coming to our house for dinner parties.

Exhibit 6 is a sale deed executed by the appellant and his father in September 1932 in which the appellant is described as the undivided son of his father and both are said to be Kammas. Exhibits 3 and 1 are similar documents executed in July 1933 with similar recitals. It is unnecessary to refer in detail to the oral evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses which has been considered by the learned District Munsif in para. 5 of his judgment. I entirely agree with his appreciation of the evidence, and I have no hesitation in holding, with him, that the appellant and his father reverted to their old faith some time before 1928 and were Hindus at all times material for the purposes of this case. In this view, it becomes unnecessary to consider what the position would be on the footing that the appellant and his father remained Christians but continued to be governed by the rules and customs of the Hindu law.

The question next arises as to the legal effect of the reconversion as regards the status of the parties in relation to the properties held by them which were all admittedly ancestral. It was argued by Mr. Rangachari for the appellant that when defendant 1 became a convert to Christianity, there was a dissolution of the family tie and a severance of the coparcenary according to the decision of the Privy Council in 9 M.I.A. 195[2] and that this position was in no way altered by his reconversion to Hinduism. The coparcenary having once been severed could not, it was said, be revived except by a reunion, and as reunion could result only from an agreement amongst the parties and as the appellant was still a minor when respondent 1 executed the mortgage and incurred the debt which ultimately led to the court sale, respondent 1 notwithstanding the reconversion, had no power to bind by his borrowing the appellant's share in the properties. Mr. Rangachari further pointed out that no case of reunion between the appellant and his father was put forward by the respondents in their written statements and no issue was framed raising the question. In these circumstances, it was urged that it was not open to the respondents now to rely upon any reunion as the basis of coparcenary relationship between the appellant and his father.

Mr. Kottaya for the respondents, however, contended that no agreement to reunite was necessary to bring about a coparcenary between defendant 1 and his son after the reconversion and that just as a Hindu father could by his unilateral act bring about a severance of the coparcenary between himself and his minor son, so could he by an act of his own volition such as reconversion restore the coparcenary relationship. This argument, however, overlooks the position of defendant 1 at the time of the reconversion. It is no doubt true as between a Hindu father and his minor son, the former could by his unilateral act effect a division in status. But could a Hindu father by his own volition bring about a reunion between himself and his minor son ? No case actually deciding this point has been brought to my notice. Mr. Kotayya referred to the decision of Venkatasubba Rao J. in 55 M.L.J. 132[3] where that learned Judge has expressed the view that there is nothing inherently illogical in the father possessing the power of converting his son's status of a separated member into that of a reunited member. The case was one where there was no question of reunion between a father and his son, but the question was whether a father in reuniting with his brother could by his act carry his own undivided minor sons into the reunited family. In 1918 M.W.N. 680[4] this Court held that there could be no question of reunion with minors. Assuming however, that a Hindu father has such a power, it can have no application here as defendant 1 was not a Hindu when he reverted to his old religion. I am therefore unable to agree that the reconversion of respondent 1 ipso facto brought about coparcenary relationship between himself and the appellant. No subsequent act or transaction pointing to a reunion with the appellant during the latter's minority was relied on.

Mr. Kotayya next contended that the appellant, should, at any rate, be deemed to have become reunited with his father after he attained majority in July 1932 as shown by Exs. 6, 3 and 1 and that as respondent 5 purchased the properties in January 1935 after such reunion, the appellant's share in the properties must also be deemed to have passed under the sale. These documents already referred to in another connection no doubt refer to the appellant as the undivided son of respondent 1 but they were executed so soon — Ex. 6 about three months and Exs. 3 and 1 about a year—after the appellant became a major, that it would, in my opinion, be unsafe to conclude from these documents alone that the appellant knowing that he was separate in status from his father, intended to agree to reunite with him so as to form a joint family. On the other hand Ex. 5 executed on the next day after Ex. 6, and Ex. 2 executed five days after Exs. 3 and 1 refer to the appellant merely as the son of defendant 1 which rather shows that the parties did not attach much significance to these descriptions. It must also be remembered in this connection that no reunion between the appellant and his father was specifically pleaded and no issue was framed on the point ; nor have the Courts below considered the question and expressed any opinion thereon. In these circumstances, I am not prepared to agree with Mr. Kotayya's contention that the appellant has been shown to have become reunited with defendant 1 after he attained majority and before the properties were brought to sale in court auction in January 1935. It follows that the appellant's share of the properties sold cannot be held to be bound by the court sale to respondent 5.

Mr. Kotayya next argued on the strength of the three documents referred to above that the appellant having held himself out to be an undivided son of defendant 1 must be held to be estopped from now contending that he was not joint in status with his father and that his share was not bound by the court sale. The principle of S. 41, T. P. Act, was invoked in support of this argument and the decision of this Court in 34 I.C. 494[5] was cited to show that it applies to court sales also. I find it difficult to appreciate this argument. Assuming that S. 41 or the principle underlying it applies to court sales (as to which however see 29 Bom.L.R. 471[6]) there is no question here of the appellant having placed any property belonging to him in the ostensible ownership of respondent 1. Nor is there any evidence to show that respondent 5 when he purchased the properties in court sale was aware that the appellant was represented to be an undivided son in Exs. 6, 3 and 1 and acted on the faith of such representation. No estoppel can arise when no representation is shown to have been made and acted upon. The appellant also raised an alternative contention. The court sale to respondent 5 having taken place in pursuance of an award made by the Registrar of Co-operative Societies, the appellant's share in the properties could not be deemed to have been affected by such sale, as the appellant was not a member of the society which advanced the loan to respondent 1. It is not, however, disputed that an award made by the Registrar can be executed as if it was a decree passed by a civil Court and that in fact the properties in question were sold by a civil Court in execution of the award obtained by respondent 2. Whether a son's interest in family property also passes at a sale held in execution proceeding taken against the father alone depends not on whether such proceedings arise out of a decree of a civil Court but on consideration of Hindu law. I see no substance in this contention and I have no hesitation in rejecting it.

The appeal however succeeds on the other grounds indicated above and the preliminary decree passed by the Courts below will be modified by deleting the words "subject to the mortgage Ex. X" and including items 1 to 7 and 9 also of the A schedule among the properties of which partition has been decreed. The appellant will be entitled to mesne profits in respect of these properties from the date of suit and the amount due to the appellant will be ascertained and provided for by the trial Court. The appellant will get his costs in all the Courts from respondents 2 to 5 who contested the appeal. Leave granted.

Public Prosecutor — Appellant

v.

Krishnaswami for Sundaram Aiyengar — Accused — Respondent.

Criminal Appeal No. 415 of 1941, Decided on 15th October 1941, against acquittal by City First Class Magistrate, Madura, in C. A. No. 15 of 1941.

Motor Vehicles Act (1939), Ss. 3 (1), 11 (3) and 112 — Term of licence expired — Person driving car without renewing licence is guilty under S. 112 — Subsequent renewal does not date back to date of expiry of old licence — Construction of S. 11 (3).

A person driving a motor vehicle after the expiry of the term of his licence without renewing the same contravenes the provisions of S. 3 (1) and is guilty under S. 112. The subsequent renewal of the licence does not date back to the date of the expiry of the old licence so as to have the effect of cancelling the offence committed under S. 3 (1). [P 197*g*, h]

Section 11 (3) deals only with the amount to be paid for a renewal of a licence and merely states that the fee for the renewal of a licence, if the application is made previous to or within 15 days subsequent to the date of the expiration of the licence shall be three rupees; if after that date, five rupees. Therefore it is incorrect to say that S. 11 (3) gives 15 days of grace within which period it is unnecessary to apply for a licence. [P 197*e*]

Appellant in person.

K. V. Sesha Ayyangar and N. S. Mani — for Respondent.

Judgment. — The accused's licence for driving a car expired on 10th December 1940. On 12th December 1940 an unfortunate accident occurred in which the accused ran over and killed a child. He at once applied for a renewal of his licence, which was granted. He was subsequently prosecuted for driving without a licence and was convicted by the Sub-Magistrate, Madura Town, because on the date on which the accident occurred he had no effective licence. The matter was taken in appeal to the first class Magistrate of Madura, who set aside the conviction and acquitted the accused on the ground that the subsequent renewal dated back to 10th December 1940 and that the accused must therefore be deemed to have had an effective licence on 12th December 1940.

As the licence of the accused expired on 10th December 1940 and he had no licence on 12th December 1940, he contravened the provisions of S. 3 (1) of Act 4 of 1939, which says that no person shall drive a motor vehicle without an effective licence. It is difficult to see how anything that the accused did after that date can cancel the offence committed before he obtained a renewal. Section 11 is however said to have that remarkable effect. Section 11 (1) gives a licencing authority power to renew a licence. Sub-section (2) sets out the method to be adopted for obtaining a renewal. Sub-section (3) deals with the fiscal aspect of the application for renewal and states that the fee for the renewal of a licence, if the application is made previous to or within 15 days subsequent to the date of the expiration of the licence shall be three rupees; if after that date, five rupees. It is argued that sub-s. (3) of S. 11 gives 15 days of grace within which period it is unnecessary to apply for a licence. It is difficult however to accept that argument, because, firstly, this sub-section deals only with the amount to be paid for a renewal of a licence and secondly, the 15 days is merely the period within which the renewal fee is limited to three rupees. A person is at liberty to apply for a renewal of his licence not merely within 15 days but at any time subsequent to the expiry of the licence, with the proviso that if he makes his application beyond 15 days after the expiration of the period of the licence he has to pay five rupees instead of three rupees.

There is no limit at all set to the period within which he need apply for a renewal of the licence; so that if the argument of Mr. Sesha Ayyangar is sound there is an unlimited period of grace within which a person can apply for a renewal of a licence; and no person could ever be convicted for offending against S. 3 (1) of the Act, unless the licensing authority became aware that the applicant had been driving without a licence and refused to renew the licence on that ground. The argument of the learned advocate for the respondent is based on the fact that when a licence is renewed, it dates back to the date of the expiry of the old licence. The reason for that is presumably that if a person wishes to have the benefit of a renewal, with its lower fee and absence of formalities, he must be prepared to pay from the date of expiry of the old licence. A renewal cannot be regarded as a licence to infringe at pleasure another provision of the Act or as a grant of pardon by the licensing authority to one who has broken the law. This sub-section nevertheless serves a real need; because it does not force a person who desires a renewal to do so at once if he has no intention of driving for some time.

I am therefore satisfied that the accused contravened the provisions of S. 3 of Act 4 of 1939, and thereby committed an offence punishable under S. 112 of the Act. The order of acquittal is consequently set aside and the accused convicted. The accused has been holding a driver's licence for a large number of years. He says that in the past he has always taken great care to apply for a renewal of his licence before the term has expired and that by inadvertence he had not noticed that the term for which the licence was effective had expired. I see no reason to doubt the truth of these statements; and so I think it will be sufficient under the circumstances if the accused is given a nominal sentence and ordered to pay a fine of one rupee.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 810 of 1937, Decided on 17th September 1940, to revise decree of Dist. Munsif, Turiyur, in S. C. S. No. 95 of 1936.

Religious endowment—Promissory note executed by trustee — Liability restricted to personal promise — Suit on promissory note — Decree against temple properties cannot be passed.

Where a trustee borrows money for purposes of the trust by executing a promissory note and the liability is restricted to the personal promise of the executant trustee to pay, the creditor is not entitled to a decree charging the amount due under the promissory note against the trust property : ('18) 5 A.I.R. 1918 Mad. 533, Foll.; Case law referred.

M. S. Vaidyanatha Iyer — for Respondents.

Order. — The subject-matter of this petition is a promissory note executed by one T. D. Palaniappa Mudaliar in favour of the respondent for Rs. 200 on 22nd March 1933. Palaniappa Mudaliar describes himself in the body of the note as manager of a certain temple in Chettikulam, and states further that he has borrowed the money "for the preliminary expenses of the Panguni Uttiram festival in the said temple," but he has executed the note in his own name, and there is a personal covenant to repay without any reference to the temple funds, such as is found in the note with which I have dealt in C. R. P. No. 809 of 1937.[1] The respondent sued in due course upon this note and has obtained a decree against both Palaniappa Mudaliar personally and the properties of the temple. This is a petition on behalf of the temple in which its liability under the note is contested. The contention of the petitioner is supported by direct authority which if it has not been overruled and cannot be distinguished, is binding upon me. That authority is the decision of a Bench of this Court, 32 M.L.J. 259.[2] The headnote runs as follows :

> Where a trustee borrows money for purposes of the trust by executing a promissory note, the creditor is not entitled to a decree charging the amount due under the promissory note against the trust property, and in the body of the judgment it is categorically stated that all that the creditor obtained was a promise on the part of the executant of the note to pay the debt. That statement, in my opinion, certainly applies to the facts of the present case, and unless respondent can show that 32 M.L.J. 259[2] is no longer good law, the petitioner here is entitled to succeed. Respondent's learned advocate has cited a number of rulings, but has not been able to convince me that I can refuse to follow 32 M.L.J. 259.[2] The first rulings cited were 39 Mad. 915[3] and 58 Mad. 735.[4] These cases deal with promissory notes executed by mothers as guardians of their infant sons, and lay it down that the provisions of the Negotiable Instruments Act do not stand in the way of decrees being granted upon such notes against the estates of the sons. I do not think there is any reasoning in these judgments, which can be applied to the case of a trustee and a temple. The next case, 45 Mad. 703,[5] is directly concerned with a trustee who executed a bond. In that bond, however, it was expressly stipulated that the creditor should be repaid from the temple properties. The learned Judges who decided it not unnaturally refused to follow 32 M.L.J. 259[2] because of this vital point of distinction, but they do not in the slightest degree indicate any opinion that it had been wrongly decided. 49 M.L.J. 717[6] is a case of a promissory note in which a definite recital is found that the executants promised to pay "in their capacity as uralars of the Devasvom" and that the amount was "due from the devasvom." This is precisely the same ground of distinction as in 45 Mad. 703,[5] and neither of these two cases can be of any assistance to the respondent in the present argument.

No other case has been cited which is concerned with a promissory note or bond, and the only other reference to 32 M.L.J. 259,[2] which has been pointed out to me occurs in 60 M.L.J. 90.[7] In that case trustees had purchased goods for temple purposes and it was held that the creditor could recover their value from the temple funds. There is only a passing reference to 32 M.L.J. 259[2] as a case which had been distinguished by 45 Mad. 703.[5] On p. 94, however, it is found very explicitly that the trustees had contracted with the creditor that the goods should be paid for out of temple funds. All these three cases therefore are cases of contract in which the creditor stipulated that he should look to the temple properties for his money. In 45 Mad. 703[5] and 49 M.L.J. 717[6] the contracts were contained in the documents themselves; in 60 M.L.J. 90,[7] there was no document to prevent the reception of evidence of such a contract. Here, whatever the respondent may say as to previous statements made to him by the temple trustees, the suit must in essence be deemed to be based upon the promissory note, and upon the promissory note alone, since it is clear that there was no antecedent debt in existence. By the promissory note the liability is restricted to the personal promise of Palaniappa Mudaliar to pay, and, having taken a promissory note in these terms, respondent must now abide by them. Following 32 M.L.J. 259,[2] therefore I am of opinion that the decree granted against the temple properties cannot stand, and that respondent's suit as against the temple must be dismissed. In the view which I have thus taken it is unnecessary to discuss other objections taken by the petitioner to the validity of the promissory note as against the temple. I find no trace of the particular point of law upon which this petition has succeeded having been raised before the District Munsif and direct therefore that the petitioner do pay his own costs.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 484 and Petn. No. 457 of 41, Decided on 29th August 1941, to revise judgnt of Court of Session, North Arcot Division, in A. No. 16 of 1941.

Defence of India Act (1939), Sec. 2, Rules under, R. 34 (6) (d), (e), (j) and (k) — Particular portion of speech can constitute "prejudicial act" — Portions of speech held prejudicial acts.

A particular portion of a speech can constitute a "prejudicial act" and therefore for the purpose of conviction under R. 34 (6) it is not necessary to prove that the speech as a whole amounts to a "prejudicial act." Statements in a speech that the war was directly causing starvation in the country or that there would be no peace or happiness unless the British Government in India was overthrown or that people should refuse to enlist in any of His Majesty's Forces constitute prejudicial acts as defined in R. 34 (6) (d), (e), (j) and (k). [P 199*g,h*; P 200*a*]

B. Jagannatha Das — for Appellant.

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

FACTS. — The accused, the Secretary of the North Arcot District Congress Committee, was charged with an offence under R. 38 (1) (a) read with R. 38 (5) of the Defence of India Rules for having delivered a speech which constituted a "prejudicial act" under R. 34 (6) (d), (e), (j) and (k) of the Defence of India Rules. The subject on which the accused gave the speech was the "present situation and our duty." The meeting was attended by a head constable who took down notes of only portions of the speeches that he considered objectionable. He did not record the entire speech. The objectionable statements in the speech were (1) that coercion was being employed in collecting funds for the war or that such complaints were being made and that they must be enquired into and (2) that war news published in the papers and broadcast through radio was not reliable since part of the truth was suppressed, (3) that the war was directly causing starvation in this country, (4) that there would be no peace or happiness unless the British Government in India was overthrown, and (5) that people should refuse to enlist in any of His Majesty's Forces. The Sessions Judge on appeal held that items 1 and 2 did not fall within the scope of the definition of "prejudicial acts" that the other statements clearly constituted "prejudicial acts" as defined in R. 34 (6) (d), (e), (j) and (k) and confirmed the conviction but reduced the sentence of imprisonment to three months rigorous imprisonment retaining the fine. Against this sentence the revision petition was filed.

Order. — The findings of fact are sufficient to sustain the conviction. It is not possible to accept the contention of learned counsel for the petitioner that the petitioner's speech must be considered as a whole and that he could not be convicted unless the whole speech were found to be a "prejudicial act." I see no good reason for supposing that a particular portion of a speech cannot constitute a "prejudicial act." There is therefore no ground for interference with the conviction. Learned counsel for the petitioner has urged that the sentence of fine should be remitted or largely reduced since the petitioner is not a wealthy man. As the learned Sessions Judge has already reduced the sentence of imprisonment from eight months to three, maintaining the fine, I am not prepared to reduce the sentence further by reducing the fine. The petition is accordingly dismissed.

Thayyanayaki Ammal by agent Viswalingam Chettiar — Appellant

v.

Minor Sundarappa alias Apath Sahaya Kandiar by his mother and guardian Alamelu Ammal and others — Respondents.

Appeal No. 436 of 1938, Decided on 5th September 1941, against decree of Sub-Judge, Kumbakonam, in O. S. No. 65 of 1937.

(a) Limitation Act (1908), Ss. 20 and 19—Distinction — Mortgage — Payment by mortgagee after he has parted with mortgaged property saves right of suit against purchaser of equity of redemption.

A payment stands on a different footing from an acknowledgment as regards its effect in saving rights of action. Section 20 does not require, unlike S. 19, that interest or part of the principal should be paid by the party against whom the debt or legacy is claimed or by some person through whom he derives title or liability, but enacts simply that a fresh period of limitation shall be computed where interest or part of the principal has been paid by the person liable to pay or by the debtor, and saves the right of suit by the creditor in its integrity against all the persons who might have been sued within the prescribed period. Consequently a part payment by a mortgagor after he has parted with the mortgaged property but is personally liable to pay on his covenant saves the right of suit against the purchaser of the equity of redemption : ('40) 27 A. I. R. 1940 Mad. 470 (F. B.), Expl., and Disting.; (1886) 11 A. C. 639; 33 Cal 1278; ('18) 5 A.I.R. 1918 All. 61 and ('33) 20 A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 1, Rel. on. [P 201*d*,e,g; P 202*b*]

(b) Mortgage — Sale — A in 1917 purchased item 10 of property subject to mortgage after paying full consideration to mortgagee—B purchasing all properties comprised in mortgage in court auction in execution of money decree against mortgagor in 1925 and subsequently selling back properties purchased including items 6 to 9 except items 1 to 5 to mortgagor reserving bulk of consideration with mortgagor for discharging mortgage — Mortgagor defaulting — Subsequent sale of items 6 to 9 by mortgagor to C—A claiming that item 10 should be sold last while B claiming that items 1 to 5 should be sold after items 6 to 9—Equity claimed by A and B held should prevail.

In 1917 A purchased item 10 of the property which was subject to a mortgage after paying full consideration to the mortgagee, while B purchased all the properties comprised in the mortgage as well as some other properties in court auction in execution of a money decree against the mortgagor in December 1925 and subsequently sold the properties so purchased other than items 1 to 5 back to the mortgagor by a sale deed dated 16th June 1928 reserving the bulk of the consideration with the mortgagor for discharging this mortgage, which, however, the mortgagor failed to do. It was, therefore urged that in execution of the mortgage decree items 6 to 9 which were among the items thus sold to the mortgagor and which were subsequently passed by transfer to C should be sold before items 1 to 5 while A contended that item 10 should be sold last :

Held that the equity claimed by A and B should prevail and items 6 to 9 should be sold before items 1 to 5 in the hands of B and item 10 in the hands of A were brought to sale. [P 202*e*,f]

(c) Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), S. 3 (ii)—Person claiming benefits of Act must show himself to be agriculturist within S. 3 (ii)—Original debt incurred by agriculturist —Transferee is not necessarily entitled to benefits of Act.

A person who claims to be entitled to the benefits of the Act must prove that he is an agriculturist within the meaning of the definition in S. 3 (ii). Therefore it is incorrect to say that because the debt was incurred originally by an agriculturist his transferees are entitled to the benefits of the Act whether they are themselves agriculturists or not. [P 202*f*,g]

K. V. Krishnaswami Ayyar and R. Ramasubba Iyer — for Appellant.

M. S. Venkatarama Iyer and C. A. Seshagiri Sastri — for Respondents.

Patanjali Sastri J. — This appeal has been preferred by the plaintiff from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Kumbakonam, dismissing a suit brought to enforce a mortgage executed by one Rajagopala Kandiyar on 4th June 1913. Plaintiff claims title to the mortgage under the will of her father Sabapathi Chetti who was the son of the mortgagee and died in December 1934. Defendant 1 is the son of the mortgagor and defendant 6 is the Official Receiver of Tanjore, in whom the estate of the mortgagor has become vested on his adjudication as insolvent. The other defendants claim interest as purchasers in different items of properties comprised in the mortgage. The suit was filed in 1937 and certain part payments alleged to have been made from time to time and endorsed on the bond by the mortgagor were relied on as extending the period of limitation. The Court below held that some of these alleged payments and endorsements were not genuine and dismissed the suit as barred by limitation and the main question argued in the appeal is whether this finding is correct. (After discussing the findings, his Lordship proceeded.) We are therefore unable to agree with the Subordinate Judge's conclusion that the endorsements EXS. A-4 and A-5 were fabricated in order to save the suit from the bar of limitation. It was next argued on behalf of defendant 2, the alienee of item 10, that even if the disputed payments and endorsements were genuine, they could not operate to save the right of suit against this defendant, as he had purchased the property in 1917 long before these payments and endorsements were made by the mortgagor. Reliance was placed in support of this contention on the recent Full Bench decision of this Court in I.L.R. (1940) Mad. 872[1] of which the headnote runs thus :

> A mortgagor who has lost all interest in the mortgaged property cannot bind by an acknowledgment under S. 19 or by a payment of principal or interest under S. 20, Limitation Act, 1908, the person on whom his interest has devolved, whether the devolution is of the whole of the mortgaged properties or only of a part thereof. In order to be binding on the assignee, the acknowledgment or payment must be made before the person making it has parted with his interest in the property to the assignee.

This would seem, no doubt, to support the contention, but it appears from the facts stated by the Full Bench who were dealing with a case placed before them and not answering a question of law referred to them that when the mortgagor made the payment there was no subsisting liability to pay as the enforcement of the personal covenant had become barred and the mortgaged property had been alienated before the date of such payment. In view of this fact, it could hardly have been maintained that there was a payment by the debtor or the person liable to pay within the meaning of S. 20 of the Act, and no question could therefore arise with reference to that provision. This was pointed out at p. 886 where it was observed :

> A payment of interest to start a fresh period of limitation must be made by the person liable to pay the debt or by his agent duly authorised in that behalf. If the personal remedy against the mortgagor is barred he is no longer liable to pay the debt.

It is thus clear that the Full Bench were not concerned on the facts before them with the question whether a part payment by a mortgagor who has parted with the mortgaged property but is personally liable to pay on his covenant saves the right of suit against the purchaser of the equity of redemption. It will be seen that the payment there in question was towards interest and was endorsed on the bond, the endorsement being signed by the mortgagor. It was therefore argued that the payment so endorsed could be considered to be a valid acknowledgment under S. 19 as it fulfilled the requirements of that provision and the question arose, this was the point which the Full Bench had really to determine, whether for purposes of S. 19 which requires that an acknowledgment of liability in respect of any property or right must, in order to be effective, be given by "the party against whom such property or right is claimed or by some person through whom he derives title or liability," the derivation of title or liability should take place after the acknowledgment has been given. It was held that it should, following certain English and Indian decisions. But no such question can arise on the language of S. 20, which so far as it is material here runs thus :

> Where interest on a debt or legacy is, before the expiration of the prescribed period, paid as such by the person liable to pay the debt or legacy, or by his agent duly authorised in this behalf, or where part of the principal of a debt is, before the expiration of the prescribed period, paid by the debtor or by his agent duly authorised in this behalf, a fresh period of limitation shall be computed from the time when the payment was made.

It will be observed that this section does not require, unlike S. 19, that interest or part of the principal should be paid by the party against whom the debt or legacy is claimed or by some person through whom he derives title or liability but enacts simply that a fresh period of limitation shall be computed where interest or part of the principal has been paid by the person liable to pay or by the debtor. A fresh period of limitation for what suit? Evidently for such suit as the creditor might have brought before the expiration of the prescribed period. That is to say, the right of suit is saved in its integrity against all the persons who might have been sued within the prescribed period. This difference in language is the more remarkable as S. 20 follows immediately on S. 19 which has made an acknowledgment binding only on the party making it or some person in privity with him. The following observations of the Privy Council in (1886) 11 A.C. 639[2] are here pertinent :

> It must be remembered that payment and acknowledgment are two very different things. As regards the person makig them, acknowledgment may, as pointed out in (1862-63) 1 De. G. J. & S.

1. ('40) 27 A. I. R. 1940 Mad 470 : 188 I. C. 603 : I.L.R. (1940) Mad. 872 : (1940) 1 M.L.J. 766 (F.B.), Pavayi v. Palanivelu.

2. (1886) 11 A.C. 639 : 55 L. J. P. C. 75 : 55 L.T. 410, Lewin v. Wilson.

122,[3] be made by a person who, though a party to the mortgage contract, has ceased to have any substantial interest in it, and has nothing to lose by the acknowledgment; whereas, payment is certain to be made only by those who have some duty or interest to pay. As regards the recipient, so long as he is paid according to the intention of the contracting parties, he is in full enjoyment of his bargain, and is not put upon any further assertion of his rights, but not so if he only receives acknowledgment. If therefore we find that the Legislature has used different language about the two cases, we must not readily conclude that it has done so by accident or without meaning it.

The view we have expressed is in accord with the decision of the Calcutta High Court in 33 Cal. 1278[4] the principle of which has also been followed in 41 ALL. 111[5] and 12 Pat. 93.[6] We may here observe that even under the English Statutes of Limitation it has been recognised that payment stands on a different footing from an acknowledgment as regards its effect in saving rights of action. After reviewing the various statutory provisions and the decisions bearing upon them, Lightwood observes :

> The statutory provisions although varying slightly in their language are all subject to the same rule; the payment if so made as to be effectual at all is effectual to keep alive the creditor's remedies generally. Thus a payment by a person entitled to make it will keep alive the remedy on a mortgage or charge against the land although the person making it is not in possession of the land or in possession of a limited interest only; it will keep alive the personal remedy on a covenant although the remedy is to be enforced against another than the person paying; and after the death of a mortgagor or specialty debtor a payment by any one person interested in the estate will keep alive the liability of all other persons interested. (The Time Limit on Actions, page 365.)

It was further contended or defendant 2 that the property purchased by him, i. e., item 10 of the plaint schedule, should be directed to be sold last as he purchased it in 1917 paying full consideration to the mortgagee. Similarly, the learned advocate for defendant 5 urged that the properties in which he is interested namely items 1 to 5 should be sold after items 6 to 8 purchased by defendant 7 from the Official Receiver and transferred to defendant 8. It was pointed out that defendant 5 purchased all the properties comprised in the mortgage as well as some other properties in court auction in execution of a money decree against the mortgagor in December 1925 and that he subsequently sold the properties so purchased other than items 1 to 5 back to the mortgagor by a sale deed dated 16th June 1928 reserving the bulk of the consideration with the mortgagor for discharging this mortgage, which, however, the mortgagor failed to do. It was therefore urged that items 6 to 9 which were among the items thus sold to the mortgagor and which have subsequently passed by transfer to defendants 8 and 9 should be sold before items 1 to 5. We consider that the equity claimed by defendants 2 and 5 should prevail and we accordingly direct that items 6 to 8 held by defendant 8 and item 9 purchased by defendant 3 should be sold before items 1 to 5 in the hands of defendant 5 and item 10 in the hands of defendant 2 are brought to sale.

It only remains to deal with the claim of defendants 2, 4, 5 and 8 to relief under the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act. The Court below has held that inasmuch as the debt was incurred originally by an agriculturist, these defendants are entitled to the benefits of the Act as transferees from him, whether they are themselves agriculturists or not. This view is not correct as we have held that a person who claims to be entitled to the benefits of the Act must prove that he is an agriculturist within the meaning of the definition in S. 3 (ii). As the issues relating to this matter have not been determined by the Court below, they must now be investigated and if these defendants are proved to be agriculturists, the debt will have to be scaled down so far as they are concerned. In the result, the decree dismissing the suit is set aside and a preliminary mortgage decree will be passed by the Court below in the light of this judgment after determining issues 5 and 8. The appellant will have her costs here and below. The court-fee paid by the appellant will be refunded to her. As against defendants 2, 4, 5 and 8, the appellant will be entitled only to proportionate costs in the trial Court and here.

Yerabolu Subbarami Reddi.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 1846 and Appeal No. 389 of 1939, Decided on 4th August 1941.

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), S. 4 (f)—Object—Scope — Surety guaranteeing due discharge of his duties by trustee—Trustee committing breach—Surety is entitled to have his liability scaled down under Act.

The words "arising out of a breach of trust" in S. 4 (f) should not be read so as to cover any liability which is in any way connected with a breach of trust. The object of S. 4 (f) is not to place creditors who have lost money owing to a breach of trust in a more favourable position than creditors who have merely placed excessive confidence in their debtors. Section 4 (f) is based on grounds of public policy and its object is to prevent dishonest trustees from pleading the Act in order to retain the fruits of their dishonesty. When a third party gives security for the due discharge by a person under a fiduciary relationship of his duties, the surety incurs towards the beneficiary a contractual liability which is enforceable only in case the trustee commits a breach of trust; but the proximate or immediate basis of the surety's liability is the contract. The breach of trust is a more remote cause from which the liability can be said to arise only indirectly. The claim against the surety on breach of his obligations by the trustee is primarily based on the contractual liability undertaken by the surety, and hence in such a case the surety is entitled to have his liability scaled down under the Act. [P 203*d*,e,f,g]

K. Kuppuswamy — for Petitioner.

Wadsworth J.—These two matters both arise out of an application under S. 19 of the Madras Act, 4 of 1938. The question is as to the effect of S. 4 (f) of the Act which excludes from the operation of the Act liabilities of an agriculturist falling under the head of "any liability arising out of a breach of trust." The applicant was a surety for the next friend of certain minors who realised a sum of Rs. 6385 odd in a suit filed on behalf of the minors and drew this money out of Court on the strength of a security bond given under O. 32, R. 6, Civil P. C., by the present applicant. When the minors came of age they brought a suit against their guardians for an account, claiming this money as money to which they were entitled. In that suit the surety was impleaded and after a decree had been obtained against the guardians, I. A. No. 76 of 1937 was filed to enforce the security bond to the extent of the amount for which the guardians were found liable. The surety filed the present application under S. 19 to scale down the decree passed against him in I. A. No. 76 of 1937 and his application has been rejected by the learned District Judge on the ground that his liability under the security bond is a liability arising out of a breach of trust.

It seems to us that this decision is wrong. When a third party gives security for the due discharge by a person under a fiduciary relationship of his duties, the surety incurs towards the beneficiary a contractual liability which is enforceable only in case the trustee commits a breach of trust; but the proximate or immediate basis of the surety's liability is the contract. The breach of trust is a more remote cause from which the liability can be said to arise only indirectly. No doubt the surety will not be obliged to pay anything so long as the person whom he guarantees fulfils his obligations completely, but when the claim is made against the surety, it is made primarily on the basis of the contractual liability which the surety has undertaken, though the extent of the claim and the time at which it is made will be determined by the default of the person guaranteed. It seems to us that the words of this clause "arising out of a breach of trust" should not be read so as to cover any liability which is in any way connected with a breach of trust. As we read this clause, its object is not to place creditors who have lost money owing to a breach of trust in a more favourable position than creditors who have merely placed excessive confidence in their debtors. The object of this section must be to prevent dishonest trustees from pleading the Act in order to retain the fruits of their dishonesty, that is to say, this exception, just like the other exceptions enumerated in S. 4, is based on grounds of public policy, not on a desire to benefit one class of creditors as compared with another class of creditors. An attempt has been made to argue that in the circumstances of the case the surety must himself be deemed to have incurred a liability arising out of a breach of trust, because according to the affidavits the money drawn by the guardians on the strength of the surety bond was subsequently invested in a mortgage executed by the surety himself and it is alleged that the surety's default to the guardians is primarily responsible for the guardians' default to the minors.

There is no reference to this contention as having been raised before the learned District Judge and the necessary facts do not appear to have been established. Even assuming them to be as alleged, it seems to us apparent that there was no breach of trust on the part of the guardians in investing the money which they had drawn; and the failure of the person who has borrowed that money on a mortgage to pay his creditor, will certainly not amount to a breach of trust. It seems to us, therefore, that the decision of the learned District Judge rests on a misunderstanding of S. 4, cl. (f) and that the applicant is not, by reason of S. 4, cl. (f) precluded from getting the benefits of S. 19 of the Act. The civil revision petition is, therefore, allowed with costs and the application is remitted to the trial Court for disposal in the light of this judgment. The civil miscellaneous appeal does not lie and is dismissed. No separate costs.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 1401 of 1939, Decided on 3rd October 1940, to revise order of Dist. Court, South Malabar, D/-11th March 1939.

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), Ss. 23 and 19—Applicability—Decree passed by foreign Court—Sale in British India in execution of decree—Sale cannot be set aside under S. 23.

Section 23 is available only to an agriculturist entitled to the benefits of the Act, with reference to the particular matter and not generally since the procedure of amending a decree under S. 19 can only be applied by the Court which passed the decree. Section 19 cannot apply to a decree passed by a foreign Court and therefore a sale of the judgment-debtor's property held in British India in execution of that decree cannot be set aside under S. 23 as the Act does not apply to such a decree. The judgment-debtor therefore cannot be regarded as an agriculturist entitled to the benefits of the Act. [P 204c,d]

K. Kuttikrishna Menon — for Petitioner.

K. Narayana Menon — for Respondent.

Order. — The petitioner was a decree-holder in a Court of the Cochin State, who executed his decree by the sale of properties in British India. The judgment-debtor applied under S.23 of Madras Act, 4 of 1938 to set aside that sale and the lower appellate Court has ordered it to be set aside. It seems to me that the order is wrong. Section 23 is available only to an agriculturist entitled to the benefits of the Act. This must mean that he is entitled to the benefits of the Act with reference to the particular matter and not generally. The judgment-debtor in question having got this sale set aside cannot apply for any benefit under the Act unless he can get the decree amended under S. 19. That cannot be done as the procedure under S. 19 can only be applied by the Court which passed the decree, i. e., in this case by the foreign Court to which this Act has no application. It seems to me to follow that the judgment-debtor is not an agriculturist entitled to the benefits of the Act. I may point out that to hold otherwise would still leave it open to the decree-holder to execute his decree again and cause a fresh sale to be held, to which sale S. 23 would have no application. A further objection which was not taken in the lower appellate Court is that no appeal lay: vide 50 M.L.W. 201.[1] But in the view that I have taken on the merits, it is unnecessary to go into that objection. The petition is allowed with costs throughout and the application under S. 23 of Act 4 of 1938 is dismissed.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 658 of 1939, Decided on 3rd October 1941, to revise decree of Sub-Judge, Tenali, D/- 28th February 1939.

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), Ss. 9 and 8 — Construction — Under S. 9 principal of debt cannot be treated as different from principal of contract sued on — Nor does S. 9 warrant procedure analogous to that of S. 8 except for reducing debts originating before 1st October 1932.

There is nothing in S. 9 which justifies the treatment of the principal of the debt as anything different from the principal of the contract actually sued on or as warranting a procedure analogous to that of S. 8 which S. 9 does not contemplate except for the specific purpose of reducing debts which originated before 1st October 1932. [P 205f]

In the suit on a promissory note dated 22nd September 1937 executed for the balance due on a mortgage bond in favour of the same creditor executed on 19th December 1932 by the defendant it was contended that under S. 9 the defendant was entitled to have the debt scaled down on the basis of the original mortgage advance of 1932, payments thereunder made towards interest being adjusted to interest on the original principal at five per cent:

Held that the debt could not be scaled down on the basis of the mortgage advance since S. 9 contained no machinery for scaling down debts originating after 1st October 1932 except on the basis of the actual contract sued on with such re-appropriation of payments towards interest as were expressly prescribed. [P 205c]

Order.—This civil revision petition raises the question of the interpretation of S. 9 (1) of Act 4 of 1938. The suit was brought on a promissory note dated 22nd September 1937 executed for the balance due on a mortgage bond in favour of the same creditor executed on 19th December 1932 by the present defendants and some others. There had been considerable payments made under the mortgage bond. The contention of the defendant-petitioners here is that under S. 9, they are entitled to have the debt scaled down on the basis of the original mortgage advance of 1932, payments thereunder made towards interest being adjusted to interest on the original principal at five per cent. The contention is based on the language of the proviso to S. 9 (1) which states :

> Provided that any part of the debt which is found to be a renewal of a prior debt shall be deemed to be a debt contracted on the date on which such prior debt was incurred, and if such debt had been contracted prior to 1st October 1932, shall be dealt with under the provisions of S. 8.

Now, in the present case, the prior debt was not contracted before 1st October 1932 so that the last part of the proviso has no application. It is difficult to see how the debt can be scaled down on the basis of the mortgage advance, unless one can import into the first part of the proviso the explanation to S. 8 which treats the original principal as the principal for the purposes of S. 8. It has no doubt been held that when under the latter part of the proviso to S. 9 the debt is deemed to be a debt incurred before 1st October 1932 then the debt is to be scaled down in accordance with the provisions of S. 8 including the explanation thereto and the principal sum payable will be the principal sum originally advanced with any further sums advanced as principal. But S. 9 contains no machinery for scaling down debts originating after 1st October 1932 except on the basis of the actual contract sued on with such re-appropriation of payments towards interest as are expressly prescribed. The section does not seem to contemplate any going back to any earlier debt except for the single purpose of ascertaining what is the theoretical date of the debt in order to find out whether it has to be scaled down under S. 8 or not. The proviso certainly allows the Court to treat as the date of the debt the date of the original advance; but it is still dealing with the debt that is sued on and it is that debt which under the first clause is to be scaled down by the process of recalculating interest at five per cent., and adjusting to the interest so calculated the amount paid towards interest of that debt. In my opinion, the section does not contemplate the recalculation of interest on the antecedent debt and the re-appropriation of payments towards interest made under that antecedent debt. The process of going back to the earlier debt is a peculiar feature of S. 8 applicable only to debts which originated before 1st October 1932. Evidently the Legislature had in mind the date on which there was an economic upheaval which made it impossible for many agriculturists to pay their debts without some very drastic relief. Such debts, whether they subsist under the original document or under renewals, are dealt with under S. 8 on the basis of the original sum advanced. Debts originally incurred after this economic upheaval do not require such drastic treatment and for such debts the Legislature has provided only a moderate scaling down of interest by the process set forth in S. 9. There is nothing in S. 9 which, in my opinion, justifies the treatment of the principal of the debt as anything different from the principal of the contract actually sued on or as warranting a procedure analogous to that of S. 8 which S. 9 does not seem to contemplate except for the specific purpose of reducing debts which originated before 1st October 1932. In this view, I dismiss the civil revision petition with costs.

Payyalur Gramam Vanchi Pattar's son Sundaram Pattar and others — Respondents.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 1271 of 1939, Decided on 10th October 1941, to revise order of Sub-Judge, South Malabar at Palghat, D/- 8th February 1939.

(a) Court-fees Act (1870), S. 7 (i) — Applicability.

The plaint in a suit by a mortgagee or a person entitled to a charge on immovable property to recover what is due to him falls to be stamped under S. 7 (i). [P 207*b*]

(b) Court-fees Act (1870), S. 7 (ix)— Suit to enforce mortgage by sale does not fall under S. 7 (ix).

A suit to enforce a mortgage by a decree for sale obviously does not come within the purview of S. 7 (ix). [P 207*b*,c]

(c) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 67 (d) — Suit by co-mortgagee for his share of mortgage amount is maintainable—Value for court-fee and jurisdiction is same under S. 8, Suits Valuation Act — Court-fee must be paid on full amount of mortgage and not on plaintiff's share alone — Such payment does not result in hardship to plaintiff : 59 M. L. J. 928=('30) 17 A. I. R. 1930 Mad. 985=129 I. C. 45, OVERRULED.

One of several co-mortgagees who are in the position of tenants-in-common can sue to recover his own share of the mortgage, provided that he makes his co-mortgagees defendants, if they refuse to join him as plaintiffs: 15 M.L.J. 496 and ('19) 6 A.I.R. 1919 P. C. 24, Rel. on. [P 207*d*]

The value of the claim in such suit for purposes of jurisdiction and court-fee is the same under S. 8, Suits Valuation Act. But the governing section in the matter of court-fee is S. 7, Court-fees Act, and not S. 8, Suits Valuation Act, and in deciding what court-fee is payable under S. 7, Court-fees Act, the Court must have regard to the real nature of the claim. [P 207*c* ; P 208*c*]

A co-mortgagee suing to recover his individual share of the mortgage must ask the Court to decide what is due on the mortgage as a whole and to fix a period for redemption of the mortgaged property in its entirety. He must ask for a preliminary mortgage decree in respect of the entire debt. There can be no redemption in part. Therefore the plaintiff cannot get his share until the mortgagor has paid into Court what he owes on the mortgage or the mortgaged properties have been sold under the preliminary decree. Consequently, in such suit the primary claim can only be taken to be the enforcement of payment of the full mortgage debt, and therefore the plaintiff must value his suit according to the full amount due under the mortgage and not according to his own share : 59 M. L. J. 928=('30) 17 A. I. R. 1930 Mad. 985 = 129 I. C. 45, OVERRULED; ('37) 24 A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 922, Approved; ('19) 6 A.I.R. 1919 P.C. 24, Rel. on; ('36) 23 A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 895, Ref. [P 206*c* ; P 208*c*,d]

To require a co-mortgagee suing alone to pay court-fees on the full amount of the mortgage debt will not result in hardship. If he obtains a mortgage decree he will be entitled to recover out of the money paid into Court by the mortgagor or out of the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property the full amount of which he has had to pay in court-fees. [P 208*e*]

(d) Court-fee—Determination of — Hardship is no factor.

Hardship cannot be regarded as a factor in the matter of determination of the court-fee payable. [P 208*e*]

Leach C. J.—This civil revision petition raises the question whether a co-mortgagee when suing to recover his individual share in the mortgage must value his suit according to the full amount due under the deed, or whether he may value it according to his own share. The question has arisen in other cases in this Court and there is a conflict of opinion. It is certainly one of some difficulty. In the present case there is a charge on immovable properties and not a mortgage, but the same principle admittedly will apply. In the year 1919 one Vanchi Pattar organised a chit fund, of which he constituted himself the manager. The subscriptions were to be paid to him and as security for the discharge of his obligation to the subscribers he created a charge on certain immovable properties. Rama Pattar, the father of the petitioner and of respondents 4 and 5, subscribed to the fund on behalf of his family, which was then joint. Eventually the family became entitled to withdraw from the fund Rs. 3032, but Rama Pattar died without receiving payment. After his death his sons separated and under the decree passed in a partition suit the petitioner became entitled to two-fifths, respondent 4 to two-fifths and respondent 5 to one-fifth of the Rs. 3032. With two exceptions all subscribers to the fund have now been paid. The two exceptions are Rama Pattar's family and one P. M. Krishna Ayyar.

In 1936 the petitioner filed a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Malabar at Palghat to recover his two-fifths share of the Rs. 3032 by the enforcement of the charge created by Vanchi Pattar who is now dead. The defendants were respondents 1 and 2, who are the sons of Vanchi Pattar ; respondent 3, who is the alienee of the properties ; the petitioner's brothers and P. M. Krishna Ayyar. The amount due to P. M. Krishna Ayyar was Rs. 1429 and therefore at the time the suit was filed the properties remained charged in respect of a total sum of Rs. 4461. The petitioner prayed for a decree for Rs. 1212-6-4, the amount of his own share in the Rs. 3032, and stamped his plaint accordingly. As the amount claimed was less than Rs. 3000 the Subordinate Judge held that he had no jurisdiction to try the suit and returned the plaint to the petitioner to enable him to present it to the Court of the District Munsif of Alatur. In accordance with the decision of the Subordinate Judge the petitioner presented the plaint to the District Munsif, who accepted it, but in consequence of a plea raised by respondent 3 in his written statement—the District Munsif framed an issue on the question whether the suit had been properly valued for the purposes of court-fees and jurisdiction. The District Munsif considered that the suit should be valued in accordance with the full amount due under the document creating the charge and, therefore, ordered the plaint to be returned to the petitioner for presentation to the Court having jurisdiction; in other words to the Court of the Subordinate Judge. The petitioner then represented the plaint to the Subordinate Judge, who adhered to his previous decision and refused to accept it. In these circumstances the petitioner asks this Court, in the exercise of its revisional powers, to set aside the Subordinate Judge's order directing the plaint to be returned and compel him to try the suit. In representing the plaint to the Subordinate Judge the petitioner did not amend it in any way and did not tender any additional court-fee. The petitioner admits that he must ask for the sale of all the properties included in the charge and that the total amount due to the members of his family and to P. M. Krishna Ayyar under the document creating it is Rs. 4461, but he says that notwithstanding he is entitled to sue in the Court of the Subordinate Judge on payment of a court-fee based on the amount of his own share only.

Section 7, Court-fees Act, and S. 8, Suits Valuation Act, contain the only relevant statutory provisions. Sub-section (i) of S. 7, Court-fees Act, states that in suits for money the amount of the court-fee shall be computed according to the amount claimed. It is common ground that when a mortgagee or a person entitled to a charge on immovable property sues to recover what is due to him the plaint falls to be stamped under this sub-section. Sub-section (ix) requires a suit against a mortgagee for the recovery of the mortgaged property or a suit by a mortgagee to foreclose the mortgage to be stamped according to the principal money expressed to be secured by the instrument of mortgage, but this sub-section goes no further and a suit to enforce a mortgage by a decree for sale obviously does not come within it. Section 8, Suits Valuation Act, states that where in suits other than those referred to in S. 7 (v), (vi), (ix) and (x) (d), Court-fees Act, court-fees are payable ad valorem under the Court-fees Act, the value as determinable for the computation of court-fees and the value for purposes of jurisdiction shall be the same. Therefore in a suit like the one referred to in the petition it is the value of the claim which determines the forum, but it remains to be seen whether in such a suit the claim must be taken to be limited to the payment of the plaintiff's individual share or whether it is to be construed as one for the enforcement of the whole mortgage, and valued as such. It is not disputed, nor can it be in view of the authorities, that one of several co-mortgagees who are in the position of tenants-in-common can sue to recover his own share of the mortgage, provided that he makes his co-mortgagees defendants, if they refuse to join him as plaintiffs : see 15 M. L. J. 496[1] and 47 Cal. 175.[2] The last mentioned case was decided by the Privy Council and in delivering the judgment of the Board Lord Buckmaster said :

> Where a mortgage is made by one mortgagor to two tenants in common, the right of either mortgagee who desires to realize the mortgaged property and obtain payment of the debt, if the consent of the co-mortgagee cannot be obtained, is to add the co-mortgagee as a defendant to the suit and to ask for the proper mortgage decree, which would provide for all the necessary accounts and payments, excepting that there could be no judgment for a sum of money entered as between the mortgagee-defendant and the mortgagor.

Neither in 15 M. L. J. 496[1] nor in 47 Cal. 175[2] did any question of court-fee or jurisdiction arise. Therefore, these cases leave open the question under discussion, although we consider that the observations of Lord Buckmaster just quoted greatly assist in the solution of the problem. We shall return to 47 Cal. 175[2] presently but at this stage it will be convenient to examine the judgments of this Court which are in conflict. They are the judgment delivered by Ramesam J. in 59 M. L. J. 928[3] and the judgment of Varadachariar J. in (1937) 2 M. L. J. 666.[4] The case in 59 M. L. J. 928[3] was decided by Ramesam J. sitting alone. The learned Judge held that S. 67 (d), T. P. Act, does not prevent a person interested in part only of the mortgaged property instituting a suit. He may institute a suit for the recovery of his share provided the reliefs he prays for relate to the entire property. In the course of his judgment the learned Judge observed :

> Thus, the real question in all such cases is not one of maintainability of the suit but what is the court-fee to be paid by the plaintiff in such cases and perhaps though the point does not arise now there is also the question of jurisdiction. In such cases, should the plaintiff pay court-fee upon the whole of the mortgage money or only upon his share ? It is true that for realizing his share of the mortgage money he has to pray for sale of the whole property . . . . . If the whole of the mortgaged property realized more than the amount due on the document to all the mortgagees, the plaintiff will be simply paid his amount and the rest of it will be held by the Court and will not be paid to the other co-mortgagees until they pay their court-fees. The fear that the Government will be deprived of the Government revenue while the whole of the mortgage amount is being realised and only a small amount is being paid as court-fee, is therefore illusory. After the trial of the case and the final decree is passed, the Court will make a provision directing the defendants mortgagees to pay their court-fees within a certain time and if they do not pay the court-fees the amount will be paid to the mortgagor after taking security. In such a case no mortgagee will allow his money to go back to the mortgagor's hands owing to non-payment of court-fees, so that ultimately the Government will get the whole court-fee due upon the whole of the mortgage money.

It follows from these observations that Ramesam J. was of the opinion that the plaintiff could only be called upon to stamp his plaint according to the value of his share in the mortgage, and if this opinion is correct the petitioner has complied with the requirements of the law and the proper forum will be the District Munsif's Court. In (1937) 2 M.L.J. 666[4] Varadachariar J. sitting with Mockett J. indicated strong dissent from the opinion expressed by Ramesam J. in 59 M.L.J. 928.[3] In the course of his judgment the learned Judge said:

> Justice can be done between all the parties concerned only by providing in the decree for the distribution of the sale proceeds amongst the co-mortgagees. It accordingly seems to me more reasonable to regard the mortgage as a single cause of action at any rate for purposes of jurisdiction and in such a case under S. 8, Suits Valuation Act, the valuation for purposes of court-fee cannot be different. Ramesam J. suggests that as regards the defendant co-mortgagee's share, the Court may be able to collect the court-fees later on before distributing the monies to him. With great respect, I venture to doubt if there is anything in the Court-fees Act authorising the Court to do so.

With great respect we consider that the opinion of Varadachariar J. is to be preferred to that of Ramesam J. The governing section is S. 7, Court-fees Act, and not S. 8, Suits Valuation Act, but in deciding what court-fee is payable under S. 7, Court-fees Act, the Court must have regard to the real nature of the claim. A co-mortgagee suing alone for his share must ask for a preliminary mortgage decree in respect of the entire debt. As already pointed out, Lord Buckmaster in 47 Cal. 175[2] stated that where a co-mortgagee is suing alone he must ask for the proper decree which would provide for all the necessary accounts and payments, although a defendant mortgagee could not ask for judgment in his favour. This can only mean that the plaintiff must ask the Court to decide what is due on the mortgage as a whole and to fix a period for redemption of the mortgaged property in its entirety. There can be no redemption in part. Therefore the plaintiff cannot get his share until the mortgagor has paid into Court what he owes on the mortgage or the mortgaged properties have been sold under the preliminary decree. In these circumstances, it seems to us that the primary claim can only be taken to be the enforcement of payment of the full mortgage debt, which means that the plaint must be stamped accordingly. Although hardship cannot be regarded as a factor, it may be pointed out that to require a co-mortgagee suing alone to pay court-fees on the full amount of the mortgage debt will not result in hardship. If he obtains a mortgage decree he will be entitled to recover out of the money paid into Court by the mortgagor or out of the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property the full amount of which he has had to pay in court-fees.

The question of what would be the proper course for a mortgagee defendant to take to recover his share of the monies brought into Court as the result of a suit by a co-mortgagee does not arise in this case and the question can be left for decision until it does arise. In the course of his judgment the District Munsif referred to the decision of Pandrang Row J. in 44 M.L.W. 502[5] and the decision has been quoted to us in the course of the arguments. In that case a mortgage deed had been executed in favour of several creditors of the mortgagors for the aggregate amount of their dues, but it was the intention of the parties that there should be no separate payment to any of the co-mortgagees until the entire amount had been realised. Pandrang Row J. considered that the judgment of the Privy Council in 47 Cal. 175[2] did not apply and he held that one of the creditors could not bring a suit for his share. There are observations in the judgment which are open to criticism but it is not necessary to embark upon a discussion of the judgment because in this case it is common ground that 47 Cal. 175[2] does apply. The only contest is with regard to its bearing on the question raised by the petitioner. For the reasons given we hold that the petitioner should value his suit at Rs. 4461 and pay court-fees on that amount, which means that the proper Court to try this suit is that of the Subordinate Judge of Palghat, provided, of course, the plaint is properly stamped. The costs of this petition will be costs in the cause. The petitioner attached the plaint to his petition. The plaint will now be returned to him.

Second Appeal No. 803 of 1939, Decided on 9th September 1941, against decree of District Court, Anantapur, in A. S. No. 38 of 1938.

Transfer of Property Act (1882), Ss. 130 and 6 (e)—Sale set aside—Vendee's right to recover purchase money is actionable claim within S. 130 and not mere right to sue under S. 6 (e).

Where a sale is set aside a contract to repay the purchase money must be taken to be an implied term of the contract of sale between the vendor and the vendee. The right of the vendee to claim enforcement of this contract is an actionable claim within the meaning of S. 130 and is, therefore, clearly assignable. It is not a mere right to sue within the meaning of S. 6 (e) : ('32) 19 A. I. R. 1932 P. C. 32, Rel. on. [P 210*e*]

A. Lakshmayya — for Appellant.

K. Krishnaswami Ayyangar and N. Kotiswara Rao — for Respondents.

Judgment. — The appellant sold some properties to respondents 2 and 3. The sale was, however, set aside at the instance of two persons who claimed to be the real owners thereof. Their claim was upheld and the sale by the appellant in favour of respondents 2 and 3 was declared invalid. Thereafter respondents 2 and 3 assigned their right to get the purchase money from the appellant to respondent 1 (plaintiff) under Ex. A dated 9th February 1937. Respondent 1 then filed this suit for recovery of the purchase money from the appellant on the strength of Ex. A the deed of assignment in his favour. The sole question in the second appeal is whether Ex. A is a valid assignment. It was urged for the appellant who was the first and the contesting defendant that the right of respondents 2 and 3 which accrued to them as a result of the sale in their favour being set aside, was a right to sue for damages and that being a bare right to sue, it was not assignable at law being opposed to S. 6 (e), T. P. Act. Both the lower Courts held that the right which respondents 2 and 3 assigned in favour of plaintiff-respondent 1 was one to recover an ascertained amount and an actionable claim, and not a mere right to sue for damages. The suit was accordingly decreed by both the Courts.

In second appeal Mr. Lakshmayya, the learned advocate for the appellant, urges that the view taken by the lower Courts as to the nature of the right which accrued to respondents 2 and 3 by the sale to them being declared invalid has not been properly understood by both the Courts. If it is a bare right to sue that respondents 2 and 3 got on the sale in their favour being set aside, then it is obvious that a transfer of the same would be prohibited by S. 6 (e), T. P. Act, and that respondent 1 would have no right to sue. The question is not free from difficulty but I think it is covered by the decision of the Judicial Committee in 11 Pat 266.[1] A lease contained an agreement by the lessee to pay the Government revenue and there was a provision that if he committed a breach of the covenant, he should be liable to pay damages to the lessor. The lessee failed to pay certain instalments of revenue. Then the lessor sold the property to a third person who paid those instalments from out of the purchase money. Later, the lessor executed a document by which he assigned to the purchaser his right to recover the instalments from the lessee. The question was whether the right which the lessor obtained on the lessee committing default in the payment of the revenue to the Government which the lessor ultimately paid, was a bare right to sue, in which case the assignment of that right would not be a valid one. The suit was filed by the assignee to recover the instalments of revenue which remained unpaid by the lessee which as stated above he himself paid on behalf of the lessor. The suit was filed on the strength of the assignment which the lessor executed conveying his rights to recover the same from the lessee. The lessee committed default in payment of a further instalment which accrued due after the purchase of the property by the plaintiff. In so far as that instalment was concerned, he was the owner by that time and under the terms of the document having stepped into the lessor's shoes, he was held entitled to recover that instalment which accrued due after his purchase. As regards the right to recover the instalments which the lessee had failed to pay before the purchase by the plaintiff, the High Court held that it was a mere right to sue and that such a right was not transferable under the law. As extracted on p. 271 of the report, the High Court said this :

> What was assigned by defendant 2 to the plaintiff was his right to recover damages from defendant 1 on account of the latter's default in payment of the Government revenue and cesses. The right to recover damages is a mere right to sue and such a right cannot be transferred under the law.

After setting out the above extract, the Judicial Committee referred to the relevant provision in the Transfer of Property Act, S. 6 (e) which is in these terms: "A mere right to sue cannot be transferred." The Judicial Committee held that what was assigned was not a mere right to sue but a claim for a definite sum of money which the lessee was bound by his contract with Banerji to repay to him. This is what they say :

Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that this clause (Transfer of Property Act, S. 6 (e)) has no application to the facts of the present case. In their Lordships' opinion what was assigned to the appellant was not a mere right to sue but a claim for a definite sum of money which the lessee was bound by his contract with Banerji to repay to him. This would, their Lordships think, be an actionable claim to which S. 130 of the Act would apply. The failure of the lessee to fulfil this obligation does not give rise to a claim of damages within the meaning of the clause in the lease on which the High Court found, but to a claim for reimbursement of the precise sum which the landlord had disbursed to meet the obligation.

In the present case, respondents 2 and 3 the purchasers from the appellant had a claim for reimbursement of the precise sum which they had paid as purchase money. This was a precise sum which they were entitled to get either on the view that the sale was void ab initio (the vendors having had no title from the very beginning) or on the ground of an existing consideration which afterwards failed. In either case, it is the purchase money that respondents 2 and 3 had a right to recover. It may be that they had a right to recover some other amount under some other head of claim but certainly they had the right to recover the purchase money which is a definite sum of money and the vendor the appellant was bound to repay this sum to his vendees, respondents 2 and 3. As in the case before the Judicial Committee, it must be taken that this was an implied term of the contract of sale. In the case before the Judicial Committee, the lease deed did not contain an express covenant to repay to the lessor the sum which he paid to the Government by way of Government revenue which the lessee had defaulted to pay. But, eventually, the Judicial Committee implied such a contract and that is what is referred to on p. 271 as a claim for a definite sum of money which the lessee was bound by his contract with Banerji to repay to him. The contract which is here referred to is obviously an implied term of the contract, namely the lease deed. On the same reasoning it must be held that there was in this case a contract to repay the purchase money between the vendor and the vendees. A right to claim enforcement of this contract would be in the words of the above decision an actionable claim to which S.130, T.P.Act, applies. This being so, the right was clearly assignable. Having regard to the above decision of the Judicial Committee, I think it is not profitable to refer to the other cases cited by either party. The second appeal fails and is therefore dismissed with costs. Leave to appeal refused.

K. N. Ramakrishna Iyear — Applicant

v.

Official Liquidator, South Indian General Assurance Co., Ltd. (in liquidation) — Respondent.

O. P. No. 206 of 1940, (Application No. 1576 of 1941), Decided on 22nd August 1941.

Trusts—Creation of— Payment of money to insurance company for revival of policy—Company going into liquidation before policy revived —Receipt of money by company is not in fiduciary capacity and no question of trust arises.

In respect of a lapsed policy, the applicant paid certain money to the Insurance Company for revival of the policy. But before the policy was revived, the company went into liquidation. Thereupon applicant claimed to be treated as a preferential creditor to the extent of the money paid by him on the ground that a trust has been created :

Held that the payment to the Insurance Company of the sum was for a specific purpose which did not involve any payment by the company to any third person nor was it agreed that the money should be returned to the applicant upon the happening of any specified event. The object for which the payment was made and which was the consideration for the payment has failed inasmuch as the policy has not been revived since liquidation of the company took place before it could be effected. Therefore it could not be said that when the applicant paid the money to the company the company received this money in any fiduciary capacity. That being so, no question of trust arose : 32 Mad. 68, Rel. on ; 121 E. R. 12; (1857) 26 L. J. Ch. 710; ('40) 27 A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 441 and ('39) 26 A.I.R. 1939 Mad 337, Disting. [P 211*g*]

A. K. Sreeraman — for Applicant.

Order.—The applicant is creditor of the company which is being wound up. The Official Liquidator refused to place him in the list of preferential creditors and the object of this application is to obtain an order that he should be treated as such preferential creditor. The ground upon which preference is claimed is that a sum of Rs. 140 was paid by the applicant to the company in circumstances which created a trust, the company being the trustee and the applicant the cestui que trust. The applicant was the assignee of a policy of insurance issued by the company in respect of which about two years premia were in arrears and the policy had lapsed. After correspondence passing between the applicant and the company, Exs. P. 1 to P. 5, in which the company stated that upon payment of the amount of the premia in arrears amounting to Rs. 140 and a medical certificate being supplied in respect of the person insured by the policy, this would be revived. On 28th June 1940, the applicant sent a cheque for Rs. 140 to the company to meet the amount of the premia unpaid. The company acknowledged payment on 16th July 1940 stating that the medical certificate had not been forthcoming, but upon its receipt, it would consider revival of the policy and meanwhile, the sum of Rs. 140 was placed in the suspense account involving no risk to the company. In fact, the company did not place it in any account named "suspense," but in an account called "advance premium receipt account." Within a few days of payment, the liquidation of the company commenced and no further step was taken in regard to the policy or its revival.

Learned counsel for the applicant contends that this sum of Rs. 140 was paid for a specific purpose, namely, in order to obtain a revival of the policy and this purpose not having been fulfilled, the company then must have occupied a fiduciary position and it was their duty to return the money in full to the applicant, a trust having been created of which the company was the trustee and the applicant cestui que trust. In support of this argument, a number of authorities decided both in England and in India were cited : 121 E. R. 12;[1] (1857) 26 L. J. Ch. 710;[2] (1940) 1 M. L. J. 254[3] and (1939) 1 M.L.J. 209.[4] In these four cases, it was held that a trust existed, the circumstances in each being either money was paid to the payee, usually a banker, with instructions for the money to be paid to a specified third party or was money received by the payee upon the terms that it was to be repaid to the payee subject to certain conditions, the latter case being the amount of the security deposit paid by an employee to an employer in respect of his services and to be returned at the termination of the employment subject to any claim which the employer might have against the employee.

Whenever money is paid by one person to another it can be said that it is remitted for a specific purpose. The buyer paying to a seller of goods or a hirer for the hire of an article but because money is so paid that does not ipso facto make the recipient the trustee. If the goods are not delivered or the article hired is not supplied, as the case may be, there is failure of consideration and the one making the payment is entitled to recover the amount from the payee on an implied contract for the return of money, the consideration for which has wholly failed. In 32 Mad. 68,[5] it was held that a trust would exist when a banker is to collect and remit but not when he is to use and repay. In the four authorities to which learned counsel for the applicant referred, it was contemplated at the time of payment that the payee received the money in a fiduciary capacity. The payment to the Insurance Company of a sum of Rs. 140 was for a specific purpose which did not involve any payment by the company to any third person nor was it agreed that the money should be returned to the applicant upon the happening of any specified event. The object for which the payment was made and which was the consideration for the payment has failed inasmuch as the policy has not been revived since liquidation of the company took place before it could be effected. I cannot find that when the applicant paid to the company Rs. 140 the company received this money in any fiduciary capacity. That being so, no question of trust arose. The sole basis upon which the claim is made for the applicant to be treated as a preferential creditor is that he was the cestui que trust and the company was the trustee of the sum of Rs. 140. In my view, that is not the position. Consequently, this application fails and is dismissed. No order as to costs.

S. Subbarama Ayyar — Respondent.

Appeal No. 195 of 1940, Decided on 3rd October 1941, against appellate order of District Court, Coimbatore, D/- 6th September 1939.

(a) Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act (1937), S. 3 — Applicability.

The Act does not regulate succession to agricultural lands in the Governor's Provinces : ('41) 28 A.I.R. 1941 F.C. 72, Foll. [P 212*h*]

(b) Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act (1937), S. 3 — Construction — Property taken by widow is liable for her husdand's debts — b Fact that property was given to her under her husband's will for maintenance cannot exonerate her liability for those debts.

Under S. 3 the widow takes her husband's interest subject to the rights and obligations attached to that interest and subject to the restrictions placed on her powers by S. 3 (3) which leaves the right to partition untouched but restricts the right of alienation because the nature of the interest which she takes is a Hindu woman's interest. The Act has taken away the rule of survivorship and allowed the property to descend to the widow. Once the rule of survivorship no longer operates there is nothing to preclude a creditor from attaching the property. [P 213*b*, c, d, f]

Though the interest she takes is a limited interest of a Hindu woman, she is conferred the same c status as that of a male owner. The inheritance vests in her for the time being as fully as it vests in any male succeeding to the property but only with a restricted right of alienation : 5 Cal. 776 (P.C.), Rel. on. [P 213*d*, e]

The fact that a right of partition is conferred upon the widow goes to show that the property is taken by her subject to all the rights and liabilities which the husband would have had because it is the same interest that is conferred upon her. Therefore the property taken by her must be held to be liable for the payment of her husband's debts, and the fact that the properties were given to her under her husband's will for her maintenance cannot exonerate her liability to pay her husband's debts. [P 213*f*]

V. C. Veeraraghavan — for Respondent.

d Judgment. — This appeal raises a question relating to the construction of S. 3, cl. (2), Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937. The relevant facts are few. On 18th December 1935, the plaintiff obtained a decree for money in O. S. No. 1138 of 1935 on the file of the District Munsif of Coimbatore against defendant 1. Subsequent to the date of the decree defendant 1 died. His wife defendant 3 was brought on record as his legal representative. The plaintiff sought to implead the brother and the brother's son of defendant 1 besides defendant 3, but the Court allowed only defendant 3 to be brought on record and dismissed the application against the brother and the brother's son. e The order passed by the learned District Munsif is to the following effect :

To implead the widow he relies upon the Act 18 of 1937 by which a widow obtains an interest of her deceased husband. I do not think that the decree-holder can go both against the widow and against the brother and the brother's son. As the decree-holder is relying upon the Act 18 of 1937 I must presume that the widow has taken the husband's property and his interest in the joint property. The widow will therefore be added as legal representative and the brother and the brother's son are struck off the record.

Defendant 3 filed a statement of objections objecting to the execution being issued against her. She stated that her husband before his death left a will in her favour in and by f which he gave certain immovable properties to her for her maintenance which included also the suit properties and therefore they were not liable to be attached. The learned District Munsif took the view that the fact that the properties were given to her for her maintenance would not exonerate her liability to pay her husband's debt and he therefore allowed the execution to issue. On appeal, the learned District Judge took the view that if the properties were self-acquired, the will must be regarded as operative; but if the properties were regarded as joint family properties the share of the hus- g band which vested in defendant 3 under the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act was liable to be attached. He confirmed the decision of the learned District Munsif. On appeal, Mr. Vedanta Subramaniam on behalf of defendant 3 contends that the view of the learned District Judge in regard to the Married Women's Rights to Property Act is not sound. His contention is that under the said Act the property would be taken by defendant 3 free from the liability to pay her husband's debt and that it was not the intention of the Act to enlarge the rights of the creditors. The question is whether this h contention is tenable. In view of the recent decision of the Federal Court in (1941) 2 M.L.J. 12,[1] that the said Act does not regulate succession to agricultural lands in the Governor's Provinces, of the properties that were attached which comprise 23 items in the schedule to the execution petition, only two items, namely items 22 and 23 will be governed by the Act. The provisions of the Act which are relevant for the present discussion are cls. (2) and (3) of S. 3 which run thus :

1. ('41) 28 A.I.R. 1941 F.C. 72 : 194 I.C. 357 : I.L.R. (1941) Kar.F.C. 148 : (1941) 2 M.L.J. 12, In the Matter of the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act.

(2) When a Hindu governed by any school of Hindu law other than the Dayabhag School or by customary law dies intestate having at the time of his death an interest in a Hindu joint family property, his widow shall, subject to the provisions of sub-s. (3), have in the property the same interest as he himself had.

(3) Any interest devolving on a Hindu widow under the provisions of this section shall be the limited interest known as a Hindu woman's estate, provided, however, that she shall have the same right of claiming partition as a male owner.

Under S. 3 (2) the interest taken by the widow is the same interest as the husband himself had, that is, the interest of an undivided member of a joint family in the joint family property. The said interest is capable of definition and so far as this presidency is concerned, it is liable to separation by partition and alienable inter vivos for valuable consideration and liable to be seized in execution of a decree for the personal debts of the member. Giving the language its plain meaning, the widow takes that interest subject to the rights and obligations attached to that interest and subject to the restrictions placed on her powers by cl. (3) of S. 3 of the Act. That clause leaves the right to partition untouched but restricts the right of alienation because the nature of the interest which she takes is a Hindu woman's interest. What a Hindu woman's interest is, is well defined in Hindu law, that is, she is competent to alienate that interest only for purposes sanctioned by Hindu law and that interest is liable to be seized in execution of decrees for the payment of the debts of the last male owner. Taking both the clauses together, the property taken by her is liable for the debts of her husband. The contention of Mr. Vedanta Subramaniam is that as the husband died undivided and the other creditor has not taken any steps during his lifetime to attach the said property, his remedy is lost. It is true that if the Act had not been passed, as the husband died without leaving a male issue the property would have gone by survivorship to his undivided brother and his brother's son and the doctrine of survivorship would prevent the creditor from attaching that property. But the Act has taken away that rule of survivorship and allowed the property to descend to his wife. Once the rule of survivorship no longer operates, there is nothing to preclude a creditor from attaching the property. Though the interest she takes is a limited interest of a Hindu woman, she is conferred the same status as that of a male owner. Even in the case of a female who takes a Hindu woman's estate, the inheritance vests in her for the time being as fully as it vests in any male succeeding to the property but only with a restricted right of alienation. As pointed out by the Judicial Committee in 5 Cal. 776[2] at p. 789, "the whole estate is for the time vested in her absolutely for some purposes, though in some respects for only a qualified interest." If for instance an undivided member dies leaving a son and also his widow, the property would devolve upon both of them and though, so far as the widow is concerned, her interest is limited no such limitation can be placed upon the interest taken by the son. It cannot be said that the interest of the son is attachable but not that of the widow. The fact that a right of partition is conferred upon the widow goes to show that the property is taken by her subject to all the rights and liabilities which the husband would have had because it is the same interest that is conferred upon her. Therefore, giving the language its plain meaning, the property taken by her must be held to be liable for the payment of her husband's debts and is liable to be attached by the plaintiff. The view taken by the learned District Judge is therefore correct. The learned District Munsif will issue execution in the light of the observations contained in the judgment. I direct each party to bear his own costs in this appeal. Leave to appeal refused.

Criminal Appeal No. 352 of 1941, Decided on 3rd September 1941, against order of Court of Session of West Tanjore Division at Tanjore, in C. C. No. 8 of 1941.

(a) Penal Code (1860), Ss. 300 and 304 Part 2 —Accused striking old woman of 55 with heavy stick and fracturing temporal bone into pieces —Woman dying instantaneously—Offence falls under S. 300 (3).

The accused being in bad temper and irritated picked up a very heavy stick and gave an old woman of 55 years such a heavy blow on the head so as to break her temporal bone into several pieces. The woman died instantaneously:

Held that the offence came within the purview of S. 300 (3) and not S. 304, second part. [P 215*h*; P 216*a*]

(b) Criminal trial — Sentence — Public Prosecutor representing that more serious offence not committed—Policy of Crown is not to press.

It is not the policy of the Crown to press for a conviction for a more serious offence if the local representative of the Crown has represented that such an offence was not committed. [P 216*a*]

Judgment. — The appellant has been convicted by the Sessions Judge of West Tanjore of an offence punishable under S. 304, part 2, Penal Code, and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for four years. The deceased was an old lady of 55 years of age and she, like her son P. W. 8 and his brother, were farm servants of the accused. On the day of offence, P. W. 8 and his mother came to the field of the accused without the brother of P. W. 8 and they were at once taken to task by the accused for not bringing him. P. W. 8 gave an excuse which obviously did not satisfy the accused; and so the accused attempted to beat him. Fortunately for P. W. 8, he was able to run away and received a mere glancing blow on the back which did not cause any injury. The deceased saw that the accused was attempting to strike her son and so she intervened on his behalf and scolded the accused for attacking her son. Unfortunately for her, the accused was very irritable because he had been beaten just before by P. WS. 5 and 11 and others. Being in a bad temper and irritated by her interference, he raised a stout ferruled stick which he had in his hand and gave her such a severe blow on the head as to cause her death. This is spoken to not only by P. W. 8, but by P. WS. 9 and 10, who were working in the neighbourhood.

As soon as his mother had fallen to the ground, P. W. 8 went to a village three miles away to inform his brother. The offence took place at about 10 o'clock; but by the time he had brought back his brother and they had together gone to the village munsif's house one and half mile away and found him absent and then traced him to the scene of offence, it was 5-30 P. M. The village Magistrate (P. W. 12) had gone to the scene of offence on the information of D. W. 1, the brother of the accused, and had taken a statement from the accused himself, who had said that a number of persons (seven in number)—including P. WS. 5 to 7 and 11—had attacked him and those working for him and had killed the deceased.

Most of the remaining prosecution witnesses speak to the incident which is referred to in the statement of the accused and which, if the prosecution story is true, is entirely irrelevant; because the incident in which the deceased met with her death had absolutely no connexion with what had happened before. The prosecution story as to the earlier incident is that P. WS. 5 and 11, who were in turn married to the niece of the accused and had paid the accused a bride's price, had subsequently been discarded in favour of another man, but the bride's price had not been returned. On the day in question, they went to the field where the accused was harvesting the crops and said that they would not allow the harvest to proceed unless the Rs. 50 which had been paid by them were returned. During the subsequent disturbance, P. WS. 5 and 11 received some blows but no serious injuries, while the accused had received a few cuts and other injuries. D. W. 1, the brother of the accused, had two contusions and D. W. 10, the son of the accused, also received an injury. P. WS. 5 to 7 and 9 to 11 say that after this disturbance most of the witnesses went away. P. WS. 9 and 10 returned to their fields, which adjoin the field in which this offence occurred. It was only after the fight was over, they say, that P. W. 8 and the deceased came on the scene.

One's first impulse is to suspect that there were not two incidents, separated by 20 minutes to three-fourth hour, but one incident, the fight in which so many persons were injured. It seems more plausible that the deceased met her death while she and P. W. 8 were taking their master's part and received her injuries at the hands of P. W. 5 or P. W. 11 or one of their friends. That suspicion receives confirmation from the fact that the accused remained at the scene of offence and implicated P. WS. 5 and 11 and their pangalies within an hour and a half of the commission of the offence. Further, it is pointed out that the statement which P.W. 8 made was as late as 5-30 P.M. and even then was rather vague and omitted many details given in the Sessions Court. However, there are serious difficulties in accepting this story of the accused, despite first impressions that there was something in it. It could not have been the case that P. WS. 5 and 11 and others came and deliberately attacked the deceased. She was an old woman and she herself could have taken no part in the affray. It is suggested by the learned counsel for the accused that some blow intended for some male conspirator of the accused may have fallen on her; but the nature of the injuries makes that view impossible. She received not merely one fatal blow but three substantial blows, each of which caused a severe injury. Her right temporal bone was broken into pieces, in addition to that she had a contused puncture wound on her head and an injury to her arm, which shows that there was a deliberate attack made on her. This does not fit in very well with the accused's account of what happened that day in his field. The injuries are however easily explicable on the basis of the prosecution story; for the accused, having become angry on account of the incident 20 to 45 minutes earlier, was ready to vent his spleen on the deceased because she intervened to prevent him from beating P. W. 8.

Then, the evidence of the Village Magistrate is fatal to the accused's case. D. W. 1 came to him at about 11-30 A. M. and told him that the villagers were joining together and were going to beat the accused and that the latter had asked him to bring the Village Magistrate before they did so. This is consonant with the prosecution case that there had been a preliminary affray; for this messenger was sent to P. W. 12 because the accused apprehended that P. Ws. 5 and 11 would return in force with their pangalies and inflict a further beating. If the deceased had really been killed in the earlier fighting, D.W. 1 would certainly have told P. W. 12 so. It is argued that P. W. 12 is not completely trustworthy because he admits in cross-examination that he is related to P. Ws. 5 and 11 and others. Unfortunately, the prosecution did not ask P. W. 12 what exactly the relationship was or whether he was not also related to the accused; but it is in evidence that P. Ws. 5 and 11 are the first cousins once removed of the accused and so any person distantly related to P. Ws. 5 and 11 would also be related to the accused. Moreover, the conduct of P. W. 12 does not suggest that he was in any way partial. He acted on the information given to him by D. W. 1 and went to the scene of offence at once and recorded the statement of the accused. That statement he sent without any delay to the police, and it was on the accused's statement that the police came to the village. It was only when the police reached the village that the statement of P.W. 8 was handed over to the police. The head constable says that the statement of P. W. 8 was given to him at 10 P. M. and there is no reason to doubt the truth of his evidence; for it could have been a matter of no consequence to the police whether P.W. 11 was booked for this offence or the accused.

The prosecution story is spoken to by three witnesses. Although P. W. 9 may be interested and his evidence has to be accepted with caution, P. W. 10, a distant relative of the parties, seems to be quite disinterested. Finally, there is the evidence of P.W. 8, who was the farm servant of the accused and who, if the accused's story is true, was present with his mother and helping the accused. If his mother had been killed and he struck, as D. W. 1 says, by P. W. 11, he would have been only too eager to complain against P.W. 11 for dealing these savage blows at his mother. The accused has attempted to show that P. W. 8 was bought over. It is said that P. W. 5 sold a piece of land to P. W. 7, that P. W. 7 subsequently transferred the land to a distant relative of P. W. 8, and that P. W. 8 attested the document. No evidence that is worthy of any credence has been adduced to show that P. W. 8 received any benefit from these transactions. Moreover, these transactions took place long after the offence was committed. If P. W. 8's support was bought, he must have been persuaded before 5-30 P.M. —or at any rate before 10 P.M.—on the day of the offence. He obviously could not have accepted the overtures of the prosecution party without consulting his brother, and by the time he had brought his brother and had gone to the village Munsif's house and brought other pangalies — as he apparently did—there was little time left for him to enter into negotiations with the prosecution party to exculpate P. W. 11 and to foist the case on the accused. A number of witnesses were examined in the Sessions Court for the defence, but they did not figure very well in the witness box; and so the learned counsel for the appellant has rightly not sought to place any reliance on their evidence. I am therefore satisfied that the learned Sessions Judge came to the correct conclusion that it was the accused who caused this fatal injury.

To pick up a stick which is said to be three fingers in diameter with a ferrule at the end and which, from the nature of the injuries, must have been a very heavy one, and to give an old woman such a heavy blow on the head so as to break her temporal bone into several pieces — is certainly, in the words of cl. (3) of S. 300, Penal Code, "to do an act with the intention of causing such bodily injury to the deceased," as was found in the post mortem examination. That injury was undoubtedly sufficient, in the words of the same clause, "in the ordinary course of nature, to cause death." In fact, it would have been most remarkable if she had survived such a severe beating. Death was inevitable, and the evidence shows that she died almost instantaneously. The accused therefore committed murder and the learned a Sessions Judge was wrong in convicting him only under S. 304, Part 2. However the learned Sessions Judge has taken shelter behind his Public Prosecutor: and it is not the policy of the Crown to press for a conviction for a more serious offence if the local representative of the Crown has represented that such an offence was not committed. No notice has therefore gone to the accused to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced. The sentence in the circumstances is a light one. The conviction and sentence are affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

KING AND LAKSHMANA RAO JJ.

Official Receiver, Ramnad at Madura — Appellant

v.

Sivasuriya Narayanaswami Thevar and others — Respondents.

Appeal No. 339 of 1939, Decided on 28th October 1941, against order of the Sub-Judge, Ramnad at Madura, D/- 15th September 1938.

 (a) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 182 (5)—Final order — Meaning of explained — Order requiring applicant to do something so that Court may proceed with application is not final order.

c The expression "final order" in Art. 182 (5) means an order putting an end to the application in respect of which it is made and not merely the last order in point of time. An order requiring the petitioner to do something in order that the Court may proceed with his application does not even contemplate the end of the execution petition. Therefore an order returning a petition for attending to the directions given by Court that prayer for time should be moved by means of an application supported by an affidavit, is not a final order within the meaning of Art. 182 (5) as further action on the petition was contemplated : ('39) 26 A.I.R. 1939 Mad 841, Applied ; ('41) 28 A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 731, Disting. [P 217*g*,h]

 (b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 17—Application returned for amendment represented after inordinately long period without application to d excuse delay—Execution application cannot be deemed to be pending or revived.

If an execution petition is returned to the decree-holder for some amendment or compliance with some requisition, it is his duty to represent it within the time allowed or to get an extension of the time allowed, or to show cause why he should not comply with the requisition, or to pursue the matter in some way until he gets what can properly be described as the final order upon it. If, having received back the petition, he takes no further action upon it, then he should be treated as if he had never put in his petition at all. It is not permissible for a decree-holder to extend the period of limitation by simply failing to represent an execution petition returned for rectification and the proper way to deal with such a petition as that is to treat it as not having come into existence at all. The suspension of the proceedings in such cases is due to the act or default of the decree-holder in not representing the petition and the petition has no e judicial existence pending its representation. If it is represented within time, the date of the original presentation will be the date of the execution petition, and the same position would result if it is represented late with an application to excuse the delay and the delay is excused. It cannot be deemed to be pending if it is withheld for an inordinately long period and represented without any application to excuse delay merely in the hope of saving limitation for a fresh application : ('39) 26 A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 841 ; ('40) 27 A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 215 and ('40) 27 A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 281, Rel. on ; 27 All. 334 (P.C.), Disting.; C. V. Ramaswami Ayyar—for Respondents.

f Judgment.—This is an appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Ramnad dismissing E. P. No. 72 of 1937 as barred by limitation, and declining to revive a prior unregistered petition for execution returned on 15th January 1935 for compliance with a direction of 29th November 1934, and represented along with E. P. No. 72 of 1937 on 18th August 1937 with a prayer to revive it if necessary. The decree sought to be executed is the final decree for sale on a mortgage passed on 21st October 1932, and an application for execution was filed in 1933 (E. P. No. 19 of 1933). Notice was ordered and the petition was dismissed for nonpay- g ment of batta. The next petition is the unregistered petition, and it was filed on 23rd August 1934. The application was made by the appellant the Official Receiver in whom the estate of the decree-holder had vested, and it was returned on 13th September 1934 with the endorsement :

Affidavits in support of the transfer of the decree and also the vesting order should be filed. Sale papers and encumbrance certificate and Union tax should be filed. Columns G and H should be revised. Vakil's fee claimed is excessive. Serial number of this petition should be stated in the cause title.

Two weeks were allowed for complying with the directions, and the petition was h represented on 27th September with the endorsement :

Represented. Encumbrance certificates have been applied for and not received yet. It is prayed that two weeks' time may be granted for filing the sale papers etc.

The petition was returned on 28th September with an endorsement that prayer for time should be made by means of an application supported by an affidavit, and it was represented on 9th October with the endorsement :

Represented. The vesting order and other main records are reported by the Official Receiver to have been sent by him to the High Court and that it may take a long time for the High Court to return them. Inasmuch as the Official Receiver a responsible officer of this Honourable Court has made statements in columns D and J about the vesting in him and he being a transferee decree-holder, i.e,, by operation of law, the filing of any affidavit may be dispensed with. The filing of the vesting order may also be dispensed with for the present. If the defendants deny the vesting, then it may be ordered to be produced. Vakil's fee has been claimed as per R. 84 on p. 253 of Vol. 1 Civil Rules of Practice on the amount due as shown in column G. If it is pointed out how the calculation is wrong, I am ready to amend it. Serial number of this petition can be known only after it is filed and as soon as it is filed the serial number will be given. As regards sale papers, I have since obtained encumbrance certificates. It may take sometime for the original decree-holder to arrange for preparing other sale papers. I pray for two weeks time for the same and I am presenting an application for more time.

An application for time (E. A. No. 401 of 1934) was also filed, and time was granted till 23rd October. The petition was represented on 23rd October with the endorsement, "complied with and represented," and it was returned on 25th October with the endorsement vakil's fee on Rs. 19,424 comes to Rs. 170-10-11. Judgment-debtor's interest has not been stated in col. (J). As regards item 2, to state whether the judgment-debtor has got both warams or melwaram only, what is the jama for the village as per account.

Two weeks were allowed for compliance and the petition was represented on 8th November with the endorsement Represented. The fees portion has been amended. For the rest, the Village Munsif of Athiyathur has been addressed by the Official Receiver. Since it may take some time for getting the reply, if the execution petition is now filed, the information will be given on or before the date fixed for notice to defendants.

The petition was returned on 13th November with the endorsement "Direction No. 2 has not been attended to. Time two weeks" and it was represented on 27th November with the endorsement Represented. When a letter was written by the Official Receiver of Ramnad to the Village Munsif of Athiyathur, asking him to give particulars regarding the jama, direction No. 2 and the warams belonging to the defandants, the said Village Munsif without giving the said particulars, has reported that defendants 1 to 4 have no claim over item 2 of property. It is therefore necessary that further two weeks time should be granted for writing to the said Village Munsif again and ascertaining the particulars regarding jama and waram.

The petition was returned on 29th November with the endorsement "Prayer for time should be moved by means of an application supported by an affidavit" and it was represented on 20th December with the endorsement

Represented. In spite of the best efforts of the Official Receiver, Ramnad, he is not able to get the information as regards the jama and warams. The Official Receiver has no objection for fixing any amount as the upset price for item 2. In these circumstances the petition may be filed without the information as regards the jama and the warams and without any further information.

The petition was returned on 21st December with the endorsement

Extension of time has not been applied for by means of an application to represent this on 20th December and the directions called for on 25th October have not been attended to, and it was represented on 11th January 1935 with the endorsement

Represented. In view of the reply of 20th December the filing of a petition for extension of time may be excused. The directions of 25th October have been attended to, viz., by amending the vakil's fee portion (vide representation dated 8th November) and by saying that other information is not available (vide representation of 20th December).

The petition was again returned on 15th January with the endorsement that the direction of 29th November had not been attended to, and it was not represented till 18th August 1937 when it was filed along with E. P. No. 72 of 1937. The present application (E. P. No. 72 of 1937) was filed more than three years after the dismissal of E. P. No. 19 of 1933 and it would be barred by limitation unless the order of 15th January 1935 on the unregistered petition is the final order thereon within the meaning of clause (5) of Art. 182, Limitation Act, or the unregistered petition filed on 23rd August 1934 should be deemed to be pending. The initial question therefore is whether the order of 15th January is a final order and as pointed out in I. L. R. (1940) Mad. 60[1] in which all the previous decisions were considered, the expression "final order" means an order putting an end to the application in respect of which it is made and not merely the last order in point of time. An order requiring the petitioner to do something in order that the Court may proceed with his application does not even contemplate the end of the execution petition, and the unregistered petition in this case was returned on 15th January for attending to the directions of 29th November that prayer for time should be moved by means of an application supported by an affidavit. Further action on the petition was contemplated and the decision in (1941) 1 M. L. J. 837[2] is clearly distinguishable. In that case on an application filed in 1932 to transmit the decree to Bombay for execution, an order of transmission was made in August 1932 and another application was filed in February 1935, to transmit the decree again to Bombay for execution. The decree had not been received from Bombay and the application was returned on 27th February 1935, with the endorsement "Copy of the decree has not been received from the High Court, Bombay — returned." The petition was not returned for remedying any defect nor was any action required to be done by the applicant. Nothing could have been done until the decree was received from Bombay, and it was held that in the circumstances the only interpretation that can reasonably be given to the language was that the Court had decided that it would have nothing further to do with the application. Such an order would be a final order, but it is impossible to give the same interpretation to the order of 15th January in this case. The petition was required to attend to the directions of 29th November and the order was in no sense a final order on the petition.

1. ('39) 26 A. I. R. 1939 Mad. 841 : 189 I. C. 411 : I. L. R. (1940) Mad. 60 : (1939) 2 M. L. J. 671, Chidambaram v. Murugesan.
2. ('41) 28 A. I. R. 1941 Mad. 731 : 197 I. C. 261 : (1941) 1 M. L. J. 837, Kandasami Chetti v. Gokuldoss Madanji & Co.

The order of 15th January 1935 is thus of no avail and it remains to consider whether the unregistered petition should be deemed to be pending. No doubt the petition did conform to the requirements of Rr. 11 to 14 of O. 21, Civil P. C., but the amount claimed towards vakil's fees was incorrect and the vesting order had not been filed. The petition had to be returned on that account, and the sale papers which should not properly be called for till a later stage were also required. Exception was not taken to this course and the vakil's fee was amended on 8th November 1934 after further returns. Time was requested on 27th November for furnishing information regarding the interest of the judgment-debtor in item 2 and the petition was returned on 29th November with the endorsement that prayer for time should be moved by means of an application supported by an affidavit. The petition was represented on 20th December and it was returned on 21st December for attending among other things to the direction, regarding the filing of an application for time. The petition was represented on 11th January with a request to excuse the filing of a petition for extension of time and it was returned on 15th January with an endorsement that the direction of 29th November had not been attended to. The petition was not represented thereafter and as pointed out in I.L.R. (1940) Mad. 60[1] at p. 66, if the petition is returned to the decree-holder for some amendment or compliance with some requisition, it is his duty to represent it within the time allowed or to get an extension of the time allowed, or to show cause why he should not comply with the requisition, or to pursue the matter in some way until he gets what can properly be described as the final order upon it. If, having received back the petition, he takes no further action upon it, then he should be treated as if he had never put in his petition at all. It is not permissible for a decree-holder to extend the period of limitation by simply failing to represent an execution petition returned for rectification and the proper way to deal with such a petition as that is to treat it as not having come into existence at all. The suspension of the proceedings in such cases is due to the act or default of the decree-holder in not representing the petition, and as held in (1939) 2 M. L. J. 864[3] at p. 866, the petition had no judicial existence pending its representation. If it is represented within time, the date of the original presentation will be the date of the execution petition, and the same position would result if it is represented late with an application to excuse the delay and the delay is excused. It cannot be deemed to be pending if it is withheld for an inordinately long period and represented without any application to excuse delay merely in the hope of saving limitation for a fresh application, and we are unable to subscribe to the view taken in C. M. S. A. No. 193 of 1939, that even in such cases the application should be deemed to be pending. As pointed out in (1939) 2 M. L. J. 469[4] at page 472, an application returned for complying with certain requirements and not represented within a reasonable time even if none was fixed by the Court cannot be held to be of any avail, and no question of improper disposal or illegal dismissal arises here as in (1939) 2 M. L. J. 469[4] and C. M. S. A. No. 193 of 1939.

The unregistered petition was returned on 15th January 1935 for compliance with the direction of 29th November 1934 and it was not represented till 8th August 1937 when it was filed along with E. P. No. 72 of 1937. It was not accompanied by any application to excuse the delay nor was the Court requested to excuse the delay. The reason for the delay was not even stated and execution of the decree was barred by that time. The suspension of the proceedings till then was due to the act or default of the decree-holder in not representing the petition, and the decision in 27 ALL. 334[5] is not applicable. In the circumstances the unregistered petition cannot be deemed to be pending or revived and the decision of the Subordinate Judge is correct. The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 626 of 1939, Decided on 6th December 1940, against decree of Dist. Court, West Tanjore at Tanjore, D/- 29th July 1939.

Hindu law—Marriage — Brahma and Asura forms — Marriage must be presumed to be in Brahma form—Presumption can be rebutted.

Prima facie every marriage under the Hindu law must be presumed to have taken place according to the Brahma form. This presumption can, of course, be rebutted by evidence. Gift of jewels or money made to the bride does not make the marriage an asura : ('35) 22 A. I. R. 1935 Mad. 740, Rel. on. [P 219*e,f,h*]

A stipulation by the father for a dowry for, or a present of jewels to, the girl as a condition of giving her in marriage cannot turn such dowry or present into a "bride price" and make the marriage an Asura, the distinctive feature of which is "the giving of money or money's worth to the bride's father for his benefit or as a consideration for giving the girl in marriage." The fact that the father had intended to present his daughter with jewels and abandoned the idea subsequently in view of the payment received for the purpose from the bridegroom cannot affect the character of the marriage in Brahma form : ('35) 22 A. I. R. 1935 Mad. 740, Approved ; ('26) 13 A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 37, Distinguished and doubted. [P 220*c,f,g,h*]

T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer and A. Balasubramania Iyer — for Appellant.

R. Sundaralingam — for Respondent.

Judgment. — This is an appeal brought by the defendant from a decree of the District Court of West Tanjore made in favour of the respondent in a suit for recovery of the plaint mentioned jewels or their value Rs. 1400 with interest. The jewels belonged to one Sundarambal who was the daughter of the appellant and the wife of the respondent. She died without leaving any issue and the dispute relates to the respondent's right to succeed to the jewels as her heir. This depends, of course, under the Hindu law, upon the form of Sundarambal's marriage to the respondent. The trial Court held that it was in the Asura form and dismissed the respondent's claim. On appeal, the learned District Judge came to the conclusion that it was in the Brahma form and accordingly decreed the suit. The appellant challenges the correctness of that conclusion in this appeal.

It is well settled that prima facie every marriage under the Hindu law must be presumed to have taken place according to the Brahma form. This presumption can, of course, be rebutted by evidence and it is sought in this case to rebut it by showing that the appellant before giving Sundarambal in marriage stipulated for payment of Rs. 500 from the respondent as bride price. The respondent admits the payment of Rs. 500 to the appellant, but his case is that it was paid not for the appellant's own benefit but for the specific purpose of making jewels for the bride and they were accordingly made. This case was accepted by the trial Court and the finding was not challenged in the Court below or before me in this second appeal. The trial Court however took the view that the marriage was in the Asura form because the payment was not a voluntary payment by the bridegroom for making ornaments for the bride but was the result of bargain and stipulation. According to the learned District Munsif, a Brahma marriage involves a pure gift of the girl (Kanyadanam), and though a voluntary gift of money or jewels to the bride out of courtesy or affection may not be inconsistent with such form of marriage, a stipulation for such gifts as a condition of giving the girl in marriage, though intended entirely for the benefit of the bride, makes it an Asura marriage as understood in the Hindu law. This view has been pressed before me by Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Ayyar for the appellant and the question is whether it is well founded.

It has been held, and this is not disputed by Mr. Krishnaswami Ayyar, that gift of jewels or money made to the bride does not make the marriage an Asura (58 Mad. 488[1]), but he maintains that even such gifts if they are not purely voluntary but are made in fulfilment of stipulations in that behalf, bring it within that category. There is no direct decision on this point, at any rate none was cited at the bar, but the principles applicable are, to my mind, perfectly plain. Marriage, according to Hindu shastras, is a holy sacrament and the gift of a girl to a suitable person is a sacred duty enjoined upon the father which, if duly performed, is held to confer upon him great spiritual benefit. Manu laid down :

> No father learned in the shastras shall receive even a particle (of money) for giving his daughter in marriage. By receiving such money out of avarice he becomes a seller of his offspring. (Chapter 3, Verse 51).

The rishis thus discountenanced a father exploiting his power of disposal of his girl in marriage for his own pecuniary benefit in disregard of his parental duty of bestowing her on a duly qualified person. The vice of the discredited Asura form consists therefore in the father out of his greed turning his fiduciary obligation into a source of profit for himself thereby transforming a sacrament into a commercial bargain. Such being the object and principle underlying the prohibition of the Asura form, there is no apparent reason why a stipulation by the father for a dowry for the girl as a condition of giving her in marriage, should be viewed as involving a breach of his parental duty and amounting to a sale of his offspring (apatya vikraya). On the other hand, verse 54 of the same chapter of Manu indicates that the acceptance of a dowry from the bridegroom does not turn the marriage into a sale. It says :

> When the sulka given for the damsel is not taken by the kinsmen for their own use, there is no sale. It is only honouring (arhanam) the bride, and is totally free from sin.

Medhatithi, in his commentary on this text, points out that the receipt of money or money's worth for the benefit of the girl (kanyarthe) does not amount to her sale, and is desirable as it tends to enhance her self-esteem and also raises her in the estimation of others, and concludes with the observation that receipt of a dowry for the girl (kanyartham dhanagrahanam) is prescribed by thus stating the good arising from it (arthavadena). This would seem to clinch the matter, for if the receipt of a dowry for the girl is to be regarded as a thing prescribed (vidhiyate) by the shastras, it would be part of the father's duty to obtain it for her if possible, and a stipulation for its payment by the bridegroom cannot have the effect of making the marriage an asura which is as already observed, essentially founded on a breach of parental duty. Reference was made to the decision in 58 Mad. 488[1] where Varadachariar J. delivering the judgment of the Court observed :

> The form or value of the jewel was not even the subject of a bargain, but merely left to the pleasure of the bridegroom's father. This can in no sense be called "bride price."

Here the learned Judge was merely emphasizing that in no view was it possible, in the circumstances of that case, to hold that the marriage there in question was in the Asura form, and I cannot regard the passage as involving a decision that a bargain or a stipulation made with the bridegroom in regard to the present of jewels to the bride turns such present into a "bride price" and makes the marriage an asura, especially as the learned Judge has stated in the sentence next following that the distinctive feature of the asura form is > the giving of money or money's worth to the bride's father for his benefit or as a consideration for giving the girl in marriage.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer argued that the appellant had intended to make jewels for his daughter himself and that by stipulating for and receiving the sum of Rs. 500 from the respondent, he was relieved from the expenses of making such jewels and thus indirectly benefited himself, and reference was made to 49 M.L.J. 554[2] in support of this argument. I see no force in this contention. In the first place, this was not the case of the appellant at all. He alleged that the money was received only in consideration of his giving his daughter in marriage to the respondent and this has been found to be false. The money, as already observed, was found to have been received by the appellant for the specific purpose of making jewels for his daughter, and I cannot agree, in such circumstances, that even if the appellant had intended to present his daughter with jewels and abandoned the idea subsequently in view of the payment received for the purpose from the respondent, that would affect the character of the marriage. The appellant was under no obligation to make any jewels for his daughter before the receipt of the money, and there can be no question of his being relieved from any obligation by such receipt. In 49 M.L.J. 554,[2] the father of the bride received a contribution from the bridegroom's party towards the expenses of the marriage, and Ramesam J. held that as the father was benefited by such contribution in that he was relieved to that extent from defraying such expenses himself, the marriage was one in the Asura form. This view has been criticised in the latest edition of Mayne's Hindu Law as not really warranted by the Hindu law texts, and the point may have to be reconsidered when it arises. The decision has no application to the facts of the present case which are entirely different. For the reasons indicated, I have no hesitation in holding that the marriage of Sundarambal to the respondent was in the Brahma form and the respondent is her heir. The second appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs. Leave refused.

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

FACTS.—The accused several in number were charged of an offence under Ss. 144, 342, 366 and 448, Penal Code. The second class Magistrate, Papanasam, enquired into the case and 13 witnesses were examined. At that stage one of the accused applied to the Sub-Collector, Kumbakonam for a transfer of the case and the case was transferred to the second class Magistrate, Kumbakonam. The petitioners in the High Court who were also accused had no notice of this petition for transfer. The petitioners objected to the enquiry by the second class Magistrate, Kumbakonam for want of notice and also claimed de novo trial and asked that all the 13 witnesses should be summoned once again by the Court. The Magistrate passed an order rejecting both the requests. Against this order the present revision petition was filed on the ground that the transfer without notice was illegal and that S. 350, cl. (1), Proviso (a) applied to the case.

Order. — The transfer of the case to another Magistrate without notice to the petitioners was not illegal. The petitioners had no right to have witnesses re-called. The Magistrate gave reasons for not wishing to do so. The petition is dismissed.

In re V. Bhuvaraha Iyengar — Accused — Petitioner.

Criminal Misc. Petn. No. 1162 of 1941, Decided on 31st October 1941.

 (a) Defence of India Act (1939), S. 2, rules under, R. 130A (b) — Rule 130A is not ultra vires—Reasons stated.

Rule 130A (b) was contended to be ultra vires on the grounds that that provision contravenes the fundamental principle of English law that a person is presumed to be innocent until it is proved that he is guilty and that the Defence of India Act and the rules framed thereunder do not permit of a departure from the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure with regard to bail applications:

Held that neither the Defence of India Act nor the rules indicate any attempt to depart from the principle of English justice that a person is presumed to be innocent until he has been proved to be guilty. Rule 130A merely indicates that where a person is accused of an offence under the rules the Court may not liberate him on bail pending the trial, except when it has reasonable ground to believe that he is innocent. When the Court comes to decide the case it must acquit the accused if the prosecution has failed to establish the charge: [P 222*g*]

Held further that the fact that the specified matters in S. 2 (2) of the Act do not include bail applications does not mean that the Central Government cannot make rules with regard to bail applications if it considers that in the public interest it is necessary to do so. The general power conferred by sub-section (1) is left entirely unaffected by what is stated in sub-s. (2). Further, sub-s. (3) in itself appears to be wide enough to cover R. 130A without any recourse to sub-s. (1). For power is given to make rules with regard to the trial under sub-s. (3) and that implies power to make rules with regard to the custody of the accused pending trial. Therefore R. 130A is not ultra vires. [P 222*h*; P 223*a*]

(b) Defence of India Act (1939), S. 2, rules under, Rule 130A (b) — Bail — Provisions of Criminal Procedure Code do not apply.

In respect of offences which come within the rules framed under the Defence of India Act, that Act governs all other statutory provisions and therefore the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure with regard to bail do not apply.

K. Bhashyam Ayyangar and J. R. Gundappa Rao — for Petitioner.

Advocate-General and Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

Leach C. J. — On 1st October 1941 the petitioner delivered a speech at a meeting held in open air at Negapatam and in the course of it made statements which it is alleged constituted offences specified in the rules framed under the Defence of India Act. A police officer was present at the meeting and it is said that he made notes of the petitioner's statements. On 16th October the police filed in the Court of the Joint Magistrate of Negapatam a first information report in which the statements alleged to have been made by the petitioner on this occasion were set out. Immediately after the report had been presented the petitioner was arrested and a charge sheet prepared in which it was alleged that the petitioner had committed offences under R. 34 (6) (e) (g) (k) and (p) read with R. 38 (1) (a). Rule 38 (1) (a) states that no person shall, without lawful authority or excuse, do any prejudicial act. Sub-rule (6) of R. 34 indicates what is meant by a "prejudicial act." Clause (e) of that sub-rule says that it is a prejudicial act to bring into hatred or contempt, or to excite disaffection towards His Majesty or the Crown Representative or the Government established by law in British India, or in any other part of His Majesty's dominions. Clause (g) states that it is a prejudicial act to cause fear or alarm to the public or to any section of the public. Clause (k) provides that it is a prejudicial act to influence the conduct or attitude of the public or of any section of the public in a manner likely to be prejudicial to the defence of British India or to the efficient prosecution of war. Clause (p) says that it is a prejudicial act otherwise to prejudice the efficient prosecution of the war and the defence of British India, or the public safety or interest. The statements alleged to have been made by the petitioner would appear to come within these rules. On 20th October the petitioner applied for bail, but his application was rejected by the Joint Magistrate by reason of the provisions of Rule 130A and the Sessions Judge agreed with the Joint Magistrate when a similar application was made to him. The petitioner asks this Court in the exercise of its revisional powers to set aside the orders of the Joint Magistrate and the Sessions Judge and grant him bail. The basis of the petition is the allegation that R. 130A (b) is ultra vires the Central Government. The rule reads as follows :

> Notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, no person accused or convicted of a contravention of these rules shall, if in custody, be released on bail or on his own bond, unless—
> (a) the prosecution has been given an opportunity to oppose the application for such release; and (b) where the contravention is of any such provision of these rules as the Central Government may by notified order specify in this behalf, the Court is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing that he is not guilty of such contravention.

If cl. (b) contains a valid provision the Court must be satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the accused is innocent before releasing him on bail. It is said that this provision contravenes the fundamental principle of English law that a person is presumed to be innocent until it is proved that he is guilty and that the Defence of India Act and the rules framed thereunder do not permit of a departure from the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure with regard to bail applications. With regard to the first contention, it is to be observed that neither the Act nor the rules indicate any attempt to depart from the principle of English justice that a person is presumed to be innocent until he has been proved to be guilty. Rule 130A merely indicates that where a person is accused of an offence under the rules the Court may not liberate him on bail pending the trial, except when it has reasonable ground to believe that he is innocent. When the Court comes to decide the case, it must acquit the accused if the prosecution has failed to establish the charge.

Examination of Ss. 2 and 3 leaves no doubt in our minds that R. 130A is intra vires. Sub-section (1) of S. 2 states that the Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette make such rules as appear to it to be necessary or expedient for securing the defence of British India, the public safety, the maintenance of public order or the efficient prosecution of war, or for maintaining supplies and services essential to the life of the community. Sub-section (2) says that without prejudice to the generality of the powers conferred by sub-s. (1), the rules may provide for, or may empower an authority to make orders providing for, all or any of certain specified matters. The fact that the specified matters do not include bail applications does not mean that the Central Government cannot make rules with regard to bail applications if it considers that in the public interest it is necessary to do so. The general power conferred by sub-s. (1) is left entirely unaffected by what is stated in sub-s. (2). Moreover sub-s. (3) (i) of S. 2 says that the rules made under sub-s. (1) may further provide for the arrest and trial of persons contravening any of the rules. This provision in itself appears to be wide enough to cover R. 130A without any recourse to sub-s. (1). If power is given to make rules with regard to the trial does this not imply power to make rules with regard to the custody of the accused pending trial? But even if it does not, the scope of the general powers conferred by sub-s. (1) remains unaffected. Mr. Bhashyam Ayyangar has laid great stress on S. 14 which reads as follows:

> Save as otherwise expressly provided by or under this Act, the ordinary criminal and civil Courts shall continue to exercise jurisdiction.

This section has been inserted because power is given to the Provincial Government in Chap. 3 which embraces Ss. 8 to 13, to constitute special tribunals to try offences under the rules framed by the Central Government by virtue of its powers under the Defence of India Act. Special tribunals have not been set up and all offences under the Defence of India Act are still tried in the ordinary criminal Courts. That does not, however, mean that trials in the ordinary criminal Courts are not subject to the special provisions of the Act. Section 3 states that a rule made under S. 2 or an order made under such a rule, shall have effect notwithstanding anything inconsistent therewith is contained in an enactment other than the Defence of India Act or in an instrument having effect by virtue of an enactment other than the Act. In respect of offences which come within the rules framed under the Defence of India Act that Act governs all other statutory provisions and therefore the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure with regard to bail do not here apply if R. 130A is intra vires, which we hold it to be.

It is conceded that in placing the Defence of India Act in the statute book the Central Legislature acted within its powers. Therefore the Joint Magistrate and the Sessions Judge acted in accordance with law in rejecting the petitioner's application for bail. In the first information report and the charge sheet grave charges are alleged against the petitioner by a responsible police officer and at the stage at which the applications for bail were made it was impossible for the Magistrate or the Sessions Judge to be satisfied that there were reasonable grounds for believing that the petitioner was not guilty of a contravention of the rules, and that is the position now. Therefore the petitioner is not entitled to ask the Court to release him on bail. In these circumstances the petition will be dismissed.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 739 and Petn. No. 694 of 1941, Decided on 24th September 1941, to revise judgment of Court of Session, South Malabar Division at Calicut, D/- 21st July 1941.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 540 — Scope — Prosecution under S. 409, Penal Code — Court allowing stamp vendor to be called as prosecution witness to explain how name of person who had not purchased stamp could appear as vendee at back of stamp—Discretion under S. 540 held properly exercised.

Section 540 is extremely wide in its provisions and enables a Magistrate at any stage of any proceeding to examine any person as a witness; and, where it is essential to the just decision of the case, he is bound to do so. The summoning of a person as a witness whom the Court considers necessary for giving a just finding cannot be said to be an improper exercise of the powers under S. 540 merely because the evidence supports the case of the prosecution and not that of the accused. Section 540 is not limited for the benefit of the accused only, and the Court has power under S. 540 to examine a witness even to rebut defence evidence; but those powers should be sparingly invoked for such a purpose. The Court is not precluded from exercising its discretion under S. 540 merely because somebody asks it to do so. [P 224*e* ; P 225*d*,e,g]

In a prosecution under S. 409, I. P. C., the stamp papers alleged to have been purchased by the accused were found to bear the name of a different person on the reverse side. The defence produced a person who admitted that he bore the name appearing on the stamps and was a purchaser of the same. The Court allowed the prosecution under S. 540 to call the stamp vendor to explain how the name of a person could appear as vendee at the back of a stamp paper when that person had not purchased it:

Held that the discretion under S. 540 in permitting stamp vendor to be called as witness was properly exercised: Case law referred. [P 225*h*]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 540 — Witness allowed to be examined under S. 540 at instance of party—Notice to other party is not necessary.

In order to examine a witness under S. 540 at the instance of a party notice to the other party is not legally necessary, but if the other party is suddenly called upon to meet evidence which he does not know is going to be adduced, he may well be prejudiced. [P 226*a*]

V. V. Srinivasa Ayyangar and M. C. Sridharan — for Petitioner.

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

Order. — The petitioner was convicted under S. 409, Penal Code, of committing criminal breach of trust by dishonestly misappropriating a sum Rs. 118-15-0 entrusted to him in his capacity as Head Clerk, District Court, North Malabar; and the offence is said to have been committed between 2nd December 1940 and the 17th of that month. His appeal was dismissed, the conviction and sentence being affirmed. The principal question which arises in this petition is whether the learned Magistrate, purporting to act under S. 540, Criminal P. C., exercised his discretion improperly in admitting the evidence of a person who was examined as C. W. 1. The prosecution let in evidence through P. Ws. 8 and 9 that on 14th December 1940, the petitioner took a sum of Rs. 2 out of the bag in which he kept his money as Head Clerk and gave it to P. W. 9 to purchase seven stamp papers, which were subsequently handed over to P. W. 8. Formal evidence was given to this effect and there was not much cross-examination on this point. The reverse sides of the stamp papers however show that six of them were purchased in the name of one Appu Nair and one in the name of a still different person. There was therefore a possibility that the Court might be unable to accept the evidence of P. W. 9 in the face of the endorsements of the stamp vendor. The seventh paper was dated 4th December 1940, ten days before P. W. 9 is said to have made the purchase. Not unnaturally, the accused exploited these endorsements and examined a man who bore the name of Appu Nair and who deposed that he had purchased these papers. Faced with the possibility that P. Ws. 8 and 9 might be disbelieved because of an apparent discrepancy which he knew could be easily explained, the public prosecutor filed an application in the Magistrate's Court asking him to exercise his discretion under S. 540, Criminal P. C., and examine the stamp vendor as a witness. He did so; and the stamp vendor explained how it was possible for a person to purchase a stamp paper and yet for one to find some other name on the reverse. He also deposed that the Appu Nair whose name appeared on the reverse of six of the stamp papers was not D. W. 6, but an Appu Nair residing in an entirely different village to that in which D. W. 6 was living.

As will be seen from the wording of S. 540, Criminal P. C., it is extremely wide in its provisions and enables a Magistrate at any stage of any proceeding to examine any person as a witness; and, where it is essential to the just decision of the case, he is bound to do so. The very width of the powers given to the Magistrate require, however, a corresponding caution in using these powers. In the many cases cited by Mr. Srinivasa Ayyangar on behalf of the petitioner, various views have been expressed with regard to the power of the Court to examine witnesses after the defence case has been closed; but, in all those cases, it was obvious that the power had been misused. In (1927) 2 K.B. 587,[1] the Recorder permitted the examination as a court witness of a co-accused who had throughout the trial been standing in the dock by the side of the accused against whom this evidence was let in and who was admittedly an accomplice. Avory J. who delivered the judgment of the Court, quotes at p. 594 the rule laid down by Tindall J. in (1839) 9 C. & P. 129[2]:

> There is no doubt that the general rule is that where the Crown begins its case like a plaintiff in a civil suit, they cannot afterwards support their case by calling fresh witnesses, because they are met by certain evidence that contradicts it. They stand or fall by the evidence they have given. They must close their case before the defence begins, but if any matter arises ex improviso, which no human ingenuity can foresee, on the part of a defendant in a civil suit, or a prisoner in a criminal case, there seems to me no reason why that matter which so arose ex improviso may not be answered by contrary evidence on the part of the Crown.

However, in expressing the considered opinion of the Bench, Avory J. himself lays no restricting rule. He says:

> In the circumstances, without laying down that in no case can an additional witness be called by the Judge at the close of the trial after the case for the defence has been closed, we are of opinion that in this particular case the course that was adopted was irregular, and was calculated to do injustice to the appellant.

In India we are governed by the express provisions of S. 540, Criminal P. C., which, as I have said, is extremely wide in its terms. In 12 A.L.J. 15,[3] after the prosecution case had been closed, the prosecution put in an entirely fresh list of witnesses to be called, and the learned Judge held that that was an abuse of S. 540, Criminal P. C. In A.I.R. 1937

Pat. 246,[4] the learned Judge found that the object of the additional evidence was merely to fill in an important gap in the prosecution case and that it would be wrong for a Court to invoke S. 540, Criminal P. C., for that purpose. In 25 M.L.W. 151,[5] Curgenven J. found that the prosecution evidence as originally let in disclosed no case against the accused at all and that the Court had based its finding against the accused exclusively on evidence adduced subsequently. In 1929 M.W.N. 395,[6] the Prosecuting Inspector had deliberately refrained from examining the wife of the accused because he knew that she would not give evidence in support of the prosecution. He therefore adopted the plan of persuading the Judge to examine her as a court witness, so that he could cross-examine her. It was held that that was a gross abuse of the exercise of the powers given to the Magistrate under S. 540, Criminal P. C. Nevertheless, it was found that there was abundant other evidence, and the convictions were confirmed. In A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 690[7] some general remarks on the use of S. 540 are found, but no reasons are given for the particular decision arrived at. In A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 463[8] the abuse of S. 540, Criminal P. C., was of the same nature as in 1929 M.W.N. 395.[6] In 10 Lah. 790[9] the Magistrate, after hearing the evidence of both sides and the arguments, when nothing remained but to pronounce judgment, suddenly decided to hold a local inspection and, without any notice either to the prosecution or the accused, examined four witnesses at the scene of offence.

Mr. Srinivasa Ayyangar particularly relies on some remarks to be found in 12 A.L.J. 15[3] that no witnesses should be examined at the bidding of any person; and he argues in this case that this C. W. 1 was examined at the bidding of the prosecution and that therefore the accused was prejudiced. I cannot, however, see how a Court is precluded from exercising its discretion under S. 540, Criminal P. C., merely because somebody asks it to do so. It is also argued that S. 540, Criminal P. C., is intended only for the benefit of the accused. I see no reason why S. 540, Criminal P. C., should be so limited. It is in the interests of justice that a guilty person should be convicted just as it is in the interests of justice that an innocent person should be acquitted. If the Court thinks that in order to give a just finding it is necessary to examine a witness, then it could not be an improper exercise of the powers of the Court to summon that witness under S. 540, Criminal P. C., merely because the evidence supports the case of the prosecution and not that of the accused. It is possible to argue that the Public Prosecutor should have foreseen that there was a discrepancy between what P. W. 9 was going to speak to and the endorsements on the stamp papers, which the accused would be certain to exploit, and that he should therefore have examined the stamp vendor to explain this discrepancy; but I do not think that this lack of foresight on the part of the prosecution should preclude the Court from examining the stamp vendor and clearing up the point. It is true that C. W. 1 not only gave evidence to explain the apparent discrepancy but contradicted D. W. 6 by saying that the Appu Nair whose name appeared on the reverse of the stamp papers was not this witness.

I am of opinion that the Court has power under S. 540, Criminal P. C., to examine a witness even to rebut defence evidence; but clearly those powers should be sparingly invoked for such a purpose. If a witness were examined under S. 540 to contradict defence witnesses, then the accused might demand that further witnesses should be examined by the Court under the same section to contradict the prior witness examined and thus lead to that improper prolonging of a case so strongly condemned in the Allahabad case. If, in the present case, the learned Magistrate had examined C. W. 1 for the sole purpose of contradicting D. W. 6, I might have been inclined to hold that he had not exercised his powers under S. 540 judicially; but the main object of his examination was undoubtedly to explain how the name of a person could appear as vendee on the back of a stamp paper when that person had not purchased it. I am unable to say therefore that the Magistrate did not exercise his discretion properly in examining C. W. 1. It has been said that no notice was given to a the accused of the intention of the Court to examine C. W. 1. That is not legally necessary; but if an accused person is suddenly called upon to meet evidence which he does not know is going to be adduced, he may well be prejudiced. The order here was passed on 12th May and he was not examined until 26th May and, as can be seen from the cross-examination of that witness, the learned counsel for the accused was quite prepared to meet this additional evidence. On the appreciation of the evidence of the prosecution witnesses, the defence witnesses, and the court witness, I see no reason to interfere. There are concurrent findings of b fact in the Magistrate's Court and in the Sessions Court. The petition is accordingly dismissed.

Leach C. J.—The question in this appeal is whether the case falls within the Full Bench decision of this Court in 29 Mad. 333.[1] The appeal is under Clause 15 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of King J. The learned Judge considered that the case did not fall within that decision, but gave a certificate permitting the filing of this appeal. After a careful consideration of the facts and the judgment in 29 Mad. 333,[1] we are of the opinion that this appeal should be allowed. The facts are these. On 25th October 1930 one Sengoda Mudaliar was adjudicated an g insolvent in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Coimbatore. On 9th December 1927 the insolvent mortgaged certain immovable property belonging to him to the respondent to secure a sum of Rs. 7000. On 23rd June 1931 the mortgagee instituted a suit in the same Court to enforce the mortgage and made the appellant who is the special receiver in the insolvency a party. On 20th August 1931 the appellant applied to the Subordinate Judge in the insolvency proceedings for an order setting aside the mortgage under the provisions of Ss. 4 and 53, Provincial Insolvency Act. The respondent's suit and the appellant's application were h heard together and by a judgment dated 9th October 1934 the Subordinate Judge held that the mortgage was valid. The consequence was, he granted the respondent a preliminary decree and dismissed the appellant's application under Ss. 4 and 53, Provincial Insolvency Act. The appellant appealed to the District Judge of Coimbatore against the order dismissing his application, but filed no appeal against the preliminary decree. The District Judge reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge and this resulted in the respondent appealing to this Court. His contention was that inasmuch as the appellant had not appealed against the mortgage decree the judgment of the Subordinate Judge in the suit operated as res judicata and King J. held that it did.

In 29 Mad. 333[1] the facts were as follows : A tenant filed a suit under the Madras Rent Recovery Act to compel the tender of a patta by the landholder. The landholder filed a cross-suit to compel the tenant to accept the patta offered by him. The suits were tried together and were disposed of in the same judgment. The result was that the tenant's suit was dismissed and the landholder's suit decreed. The tenant then filed an appeal in his suit, but not in the landholder's suit and the question was whether the decision in the landholder's suit operated as res judicata and prevented the tenant proceeding with his appeal. This Court was of the opinion that the case did not fall within the contemplation of S. 13 of the Code of 1882, which corresponds to S. 11 of the present Code. The Court said that it would lead to startling results if it were to hold that an appellate tribunal was precluded from dealing with a question which comes before it because an inferior Court on the same facts in a case other than that under appeal had given a decision which had not been appealed against at the same time as the decision under appeal. This principle was followed in 29 M.L.J. 551[2] and in 67 M.L.J. 364.[3] The latter case is on all fours with the present case. There was a suit and an original petition in insolvency proceedings in which the same question arose for decision between the same parties. Both matters came up for hearing before the Additional Subordinate Judge of Tinnevelly and were heard together. A creditor, who was affected by the decision appealed, but only against the order on the petition, not against the decree. Beasley C. J. had no hesitation in holding that the case fell within the four corners of 29 Mad. 333.[1]

In the present case King J. has held that the decision in 29 Mad. 333[1] does not apply because the appeal in the mortgage suit was directly to the High Court and in the insolvency proceedings to the District Judge in the first instance. That is shortly the effect of his decision. We fail to see what difference this makes. There was an appeal to this Court in both the cases. We are not called upon to say whether 29 Mad. 333[1] was rightly decided. That decision is binding upon us and the reasons for holding that the doctrine of res judicata did not operate in that case apply equally in the present case, and the appeal must be allowed. The learned Judge did not decide a second objection taken by the respondent to the decision of the District Judge. The respondent's second contention was that the insolvency Court had no jurisdiction to set aside the mortgage because it did not fall within S. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act, and the special receiver could not in such an application call in aid S. 53, T. P. Act. The respondent's objections in this connexion are set out in paras. 6, 7, 8 and 9 of his memorandum of appeal. This question remains open and the case will be remanded to King J. to decide it. The appellant having succeeded in this Court, he is entitled to his costs.

In re Karuppayya Thevar — Accused — Appellant.

Criminal Appeal No. 255 of 1941, Decided on 2nd September 1941, against order of Court of Session, East Tanjore Division at Negapatam, in C. C. No. 14 of 1941.

(a) Criminal trial — Evidence — Statements by expert medical witnesses as to nature of blows causing injuries — Court need not try to reconcile statements — Court should consider whether medical evidence precludes prosecution story.

It is not necessary for the Court to try to reconcile the various statements made by expert medical witnesses with regard to the nature of the blows which caused the injuries. The Court should consider whether the medical evidence precludes the prosecution story. [P 228 f,g]

(b) Criminal trial—Evidence — Postal stamp.

The probative value of a postal stamp on a postcard is not very high. [P 228 h]

(c) Penal Code (1860), S. 300 — Person can be guilty of murder even though death is not necessary consequence of blow given — Heavy blow on head fracturing skull and proving fatal —Accused must be presumed to have intended probable consequence of such blow — Injury caused being sufficient in ordinary course of nature to cause death accused is guilty of murder.

A person can be guilty of murder even though death is not a necessary consequence of the blow given. A person commits the offence of murder if the act he does is done with the intention of causing bodily injury to a person and the bodily injury intended to be inflicted is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. An accused who strikes a heavy blow on the head resulting in extensive fracture of the skull and proving fatal must be presumed to have intended the probable consequence of such a blow and the injury so caused being sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, the accused commits the offence of murder. [P 229*d*,e,f]

(d) Criminal trial — Public Prosecutor — Duty of.

No doubt a Public Prosecutor should be fair to an accused person and should not press for a conviction of a graver offence if he thinks a lesser one has been committed; still it is his duty to put before the Sessions Judge all that can be said in support of the charge. [P 229*g*]

Judgment. — The learned Sessions Judge of East Tanjore charged the appellant with the murder of Visalakshi Ammal by striking her on the head with a heavy stick and causing an extensive fracture of the skull. He, however, found him guilty only under S. 304, para. 2, Penal Code, and sentenced him to seven years' rigorous imprisonment. According to the prosecution evidence, there was a quarrel because P. W. 7 had stolen a chisel from Rangaswami Asari, a relative of the accused, when Rangaswami Asari failed to pay P. W. 7 his wages. On 11th September P. W. 7 was beaten by the accused, and on the following day, i. e., on the 12th, Murugayya and Rangaswami Asari went to P. W. 8's house and continued the quarrel. There was also a disturbance in the early evening of the 13th. The actual attack which resulted in the murder took place at about 8 P. M.; and it arose because P. W. 4, a respectable man in the village, went to the persons who were quarrelling and attempted to pacify them. He was accompanied by his aged father (P. W. 6) and his mother, the deceased. The accused, a young man of 22 or so, seems to have got incensed at the interference. Finding it easier to deal with a woman than with a man, he struck the deceased with his stick, fracturing her skull. He then ran after P. W. 8, another elderly woman; but she was fortunately able to escape into her house and secure the door. The murder is spoken to by as many as six eye-witnesses. Although P. Ws. 4 and 6 are closely related to the deceased, there is no reason why their evidence should not be accepted. On the contrary, it seems most unlikely that P. Ws. 4 and 6, with whom the deceased went to pacify the accused, would foist this murder on the accused, with whom they had no quarrel whatsoever. The dispute was between P. Ws. 7 and 8 on the one hand and Rangaswami Asari and Murugayya on the other. P. Ws. 4 and 6 had no concern with the matter at all, except as elders asked to intervene. P. Ws. 9 and 10 are also trustworthy witnesses.

The learned advocate for the appellant has relied on certain discrepancies in the medical evidence, and has argued that—contrary to the prosecution story—the deceased probably received two blows; because she had one injury on the forehead to the left side of the middle line and also what is commonly known as a black eye on the other side. The young Lady Assistant Surgeon was quite sure that these were due to two distinct blows; but the two much older men doctors (P. Ws. 3 and 5) were of opinion that they might well have been caused by one blow; for one of the fractures radiating from a central depressed fracture extended to the right orbital cavity. This particular radial fracture might well have led to an extravasation of blood which would have made the skin appear blue. It was not, however, necessary for the Court to have tried to reconcile the various statements made by expert witnesses with regard to the nature of the blows which caused the injuries; it should have asked itself whether the medical evidence precluded the prosecution story. The prosecution witnesses stated that there was only one blow; and although the evidence of P. W. 2 may be said to be inconsistent with that, yet reading the medical evidence as a whole, it cannot be said to render the prosecution story unworthy of credit.

Considerable reliance has been placed on the defence evidence of alibi, which is to the effect that the accused was laid up with typhoid fever at the time when this offence was committed. The learned advocate for the appellant does not go so far as to say in this Court that the accused has satisfactorily proved that he was laid up with typhoid fever, but he does rely on two post-cards dated 9th and 11th September written by the father of the accused to D. W. 1 at Alathur. These post-cards indicate that the accused was staying with D. W. 1 when those cards were written. One of the post marks on the second letter, Ex. 14 is "Memisal, 11-30 A.M., 13th September 1940." The probative value of a postal stamp is not very high; but if it was true, it was probable that when that post-card arrived, the accused was staying at Alathur, which is about three-fourth of a mile from the post office.

The learned advocate for the appellant contends that if the accused was there at noon on the day of the offence, it is most unlikely that he was present at the village of offence (Ettugudi) when the witnesses say. The question is not however whether it was probable or not that the accused was present but whether one can be absolutely sure that the accused was not present. No evidence as to the exact distance from Alathur to Ettugudi has been given; but D. W. 2 says that one has to go 5 miles by cart, 22 miles by bus, 6 hours by railway, and then 6 miles by cart, and that it would take 12 hours to do this. I am not however prepared to conclude, merely on D.W. 2's evidence, that that is the only and the quickest way of getting to Ettugudi; and so, even if the post-cards are true and the accused was in the village of Alathur at noon on the day of offence, I am not prepared to say that he could not have been in Ettugudi by 8 P.M. The fact that the accused was not seen at any of the earlier quarrels on the day of offence or on the previous day makes it not improbable that he left for his village only after receiving EX. 14. If these post-cards are true, the evidence of P. Ws. 7 and 8 with regard to the incident on the 11th cannot be true; but that is not material to the consideration of what happened when this murder was committed. That is spoken to by a number of persons who do not say that they saw the accused in the village on the 11th. I therefore find no reason for not agreeing with the learned Sessions Judge that it was the accused who had committed this offence.

The accused put forward a theory that the deceased fell on a survey stone, but there is no evidence at all that she did so. It is unworthy of consideration in the face of the evidence of so many eye-witnesses. The learned Sessions Judge, instead of finding the accused guilty of murder, has found him guilty only under S. 304, para. 2, Penal Code, holding that although the accused should have known that death was a likely result of such a blow, death was not the necessary consequence of it. He seeks support for that conclusion from the evidence of P. W. 5, one of the doctors examined. P. Ws. 2 and 3 say that death was the necessary consequence of the blow; but P.W. 5 says that it was not a necessary result but only likely. He appears to have used the word "likely" in contradistinction to "necessary." A person can be guilty of murder even though death is not a necessary consequence of the blow given. Persons make remarkable recoveries at times from severe injuries that ordinarily lead to death. P.W. 5 does not explain how the deceased could have recovered from a depressed and extensively radiating fracture; but perhaps the piece of bone that was depressed could have been removed by operation. Ordinarily, however, an injury of the nature caused to the deceased ends fatally. Even P. W. 5 says that death might have resulted instantaneously from such an injury, and it is one's experience that injuries of this kind ordinarily end fatally. A person commits the offence of murder if the act he does is done with the intention of causing bodily injury to a person and the bodily injury intended to be inflicted is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The blow given to the deceased must have been a very heavy one to have caused such a severe injury, and the accused must be presumed to have intended the probable consequence of such a blow. The injury so caused being sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, the accused committed the offence of murder and should have been convicted accordingly.

The learned Public Prosecutor thinks that the learned Sessions Judge may have felt himself restrained by an apparent admission of the Public Prosecutor of East Tanjore that the offence committed was not that of murder. If the local Public Prosecutor made such a statement, he did wrongly. One expects a Public Prosecutor to be fair to an accused person and not to press for a conviction of a graver offence if he thinks a lesser has been committed. On the other hand, it is his duty to put before the Sessions Judge all that can be said in support of the charge. To do the Public Prosecutor justice however I very much doubt whether the learned Sessions Judge felt himself restrained in any way by anything that the learned local Public Prosecutor said. The conviction and sentence are affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

Second Appeal No. 471 of 1939, Decided on 12th September 1941, against decree of Court of Small Causes, Trichinopoly, in A. S. No. 17 of 1938.

(a) Madras Revenue Recovery Act (2 of 1864), Ss. 25 to 47 — Sale of land in default of payment of revenue — Defaulter dying before sale—Sale is infructuous—Proper procedure to be followed by Collector in such case, stated.

In the case of a sale in default of payment of arrears of revenue the Act contemplates the continued existence of the defaulter till the date of sale and if before the date of sale the defaulter dies, the sale would be infructuous and would pass no title to the purchaser. Until the property is sold, the title of the defaulter to the land is not lost, and the Government could have the property sold only by due course of law, that is, by following the appropriate procedure provided by the Act and until the property is sold, it continues in the defaulter. On the death of the defaulter before the sale, the property ceases to be his and therefore what is sold is the right of a dead man and the sale would pass no title to the purchaser. Though, strictly speaking, there is no provision in the Act for substituting his legal representative, still when the defaulter who was a party to a proceeding under the Act is dead, there can be no valid legal proceeding against him : 22 Mad. 119, Rel. on; 6 Mad. 303; 7 Mad. 405; ('17) 4 A.I.R. 1917 Mad. 984 and 34 Mad. 493, Approved; ('32) 19 A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 664, Ref. [P 232*a*,c,d,e]

The proper procedure to be adopted by the Collector on the death of the defaulter before the date of the sale is to substitute the names of his legal representatives in the registry, fix a fresh date of sale, issue a fresh notification under S. 36 of the Act and serve a copy on the legal representative and proceed with the sale or commence the whole procedure de novo by issuing a fresh demand under S. 25 of the Act on the legal representative and in default of compliance with it, take further steps as provided in the Act. (b) Madras Revenue Recovery Act (2 of 1864), S. 2 — "Land" in S. 2 — Meaning of.

The land in Sec. 2 means the land of the landholder. [P 231*b*]

(c) Ownership — Dead persons.

The moment a man dies, the ownership which he had in the property is lost. Dead men are no longer persons in the eye of the law. They have laid down their legal personality with their lives and are now as destitute of rights as they are free from liabilities. They do not even remain the owners of their property until their successors enter upon the inheritance. [P 232*b*]

S. Parthasarathy and V. K. Thiruvenkatachari — for Appellants.

T. V. Muthukrishna Ayyar — for Respondents.

Judgment.—The question for decision in this second appeal relates to the validity of a revenue sale. The relevant facts are these. The suit properties belonged to one Ramanarayana Pillai in whose name the patta stood in the revenue registry and the total extent of land sold was about 14 acres. There was default in the payment of arrears of revenue for Fasli 1340 amounting to Rs. 11-5-0. On 10th September 1931 a notice (Ex. 3) was issued under S. 25, Revenue Recovery Act, calling upon the said Ramanarayana Pillai to pay the arrears within ten days. The notice was not personally served on him but was affixed to his house. A copy of the notice was also affixed on the land and published in the District Gazette. In the notice it was stated that the sale would take place on 12th November 1931. Ramanarayana Pillai died on 27th October 1931 leaving the plaintiffs his sons who were then minors. The property was sold on 12th November 1931 and purchased for Rs. 11-12-0 by defendant 1 who has since transferred the property to defendant 3. This suit was filed by the plaintiffs for a declaration that the sale is null and void. It was attacked on various grounds but both the lower Courts decided against the plaintiff and held that the sale was valid. Mr. Thiruvenkatachari, the learned counsel for the plaintiffs, has confined himself only to one ground, namely that Ramanarayana Pillai having died before the date of sale, the sale must be held to be null and void and in support of his contention he relied on some observations of the learned Judges in 55 Mad. 876[1] at p. 881. In that case the registered pattadar was dead and his legal representative the widow was not registered in his place. His widow was, however, paying the assessment but she committed default in Fasli 1331. The Collector took steps for realizing the same. The requisite notices under the Revenue Recovery Act were issued in the name of the dead man and affixed to the property and the property was sold. It was held that the sale was invalid. The learned Judges observed thus :

> The whole procedure in connexion with sale of immovable property is based on the assumption that there is "a default," i. e., in the case of a human being a living person who is in default . . . To go through, with the name of a dead man, the procedure intended for giving living men a chance of saving their property is a farce and futility . . . . The sale proceedings were of no force and effect by reason of the absence of the fundamental requisite for giving the revenue authorities jurisdiction to conduct a sale, i. e., that there should be a defaulter living who can receive the notices and avoid the sale by payment of the arrears.

1. ('32) 19 A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 664: 139 I.C. 426: 55 Mad. 876: 63 M.L.J. 249, Marukolandai Ammal v. Secretary of State.

Mr. Muthukrishna Iyer for the contesting respondent contends that this case was distinguishable on the ground that the defaulter in that case was dead even before the proceedings were initiated, whereas in the present case all the requisite notices were served on the defaulter and all that remained was to sell the property and therefore the jurisdiction of the revenue Court could not be said to have been taken away by the mere fact that the defaulter died, that after service of the requisite notices the jurisdiction to sell the property was complete and that there is no procedure for bringing on record in the proceedings the legal representatives of the deceased defaulter.

The question is which of these contentions is tenable. A close analysis of the various provisions of the Act leads me to the conclusion that the Act contemplates the continued existence of the defaulter till the date of sale and if before the date of sale the defaulter dies, the sale would be infructuous and would pass no title to the purchaser. Section 2 of the Act says, "the land, the buildings upon it, and its products, shall be regarded as the security of the public revenue." The land in that section means the land of the landholder and in the present case the ryotwari interest of the proprietor Ramanarayana Pillai. If there was default in the payment of arrears of revenue, the Act empowers Government to initiate proceedings for realising the said revenue by sale of the defaulter's moveable or immovable property which would include land in respect whereof there has been default in the payment of revenue, or by execution against the person of the defaulter. Sections 25 to 44 deal with the procedure which the Collector is enjoined to adopt if he decides to sell the land in respect whereof arrears are due or the other immovable property of the defaulter, and these provisions undoubtedly indicate that what will be sold will be "the land of the defaulter." Sections 26 and 44 clearly provide what it is the Collector is empowered to sell. Section 26 says, "he shall proceed to recover the arrear by the attachment and sale of the defaulter's land." Section 44 says :

> It shall be lawful for the Collector, or other officer empowered by the Collector in that behalf to sell the whole or any portion of the land of a defaulter in discharge of arrear of revenue.

In 6 Mad. 303,[2] Innes J., explained thus the rights of the Government in regard to the realisation of revenue when default was committed (p. 310) :

> On non-payment of the Government dues, the right to the land would be liable to forfeiture, and the Collector might proceed according to law to sell the lands. Until such procedure was taken, it is difficult to see how the mirasdars could have forfeited their right to the land . . . For the right of the Government is only a right to a charge on the land, and a right to forfeit by due course of law, the title of the person holding the land who does not pay the charge.

Therefore until the property is sold, the title of the defaulter to the land is not lost, and the Government could have the property sold only by due course of law, that is, by following the appropriate procedure provided by the Act. What would be sold and what would pass at the revenue sale is only the proprietary interest of the registered pattadar. That is clear from the declaration which has to be made by the Collector after the issue of a sale certificate. Under S. 39 of the Act, the Collector has to advertise > the name of the purchaser and the date of purchase together with a declaration of the lawful succession of such purchaser to all the rights and property of the former landholder in the said lands.

Construing this section, Turner C. J., in 7 Mad. 405[3] at p. 406 observed :

> According to S. 3 it is the proprietor that is liable for the payment of the revenue. According to S. 39 it is his right and property that passes by the revenue sale.

(Vide also the observations of Wallis C. J., in 40 Mad 93[4] at p. 96.) The form of declaration framed by the Board of Revenue and which is actually published establishes this beyond doubt. The form in the Board of Revenue Standing Orders Volume 2, page 393 (From No. 10) runs thus :

> It is hereby publicly notified for general information that AB, of village in Taluk of the District has purchased on 191 at a public auction the undermentioned lands sold for arrears of revenue due by , landholder in the undermentioned village, and has paid the full purchase money, viz., Rupees , and that the lands have been registered in his name. It is therefore, declared that the said AB has succeeded to all the rights and property of the present registered holder in the said lands.

This view is further strengthened by S. 36 (4) of the Act which provides that where a resale takes place in consequence of the non-payment by the purchaser of the purchase money and where the lands may on the second sale sell for a higher price than at the first sale, the difference or increase shall be the property of him on whose account the said first sale was made. This clearly indicates that what was sold is only the proprietary interest of the defaulter and that until the property is sold it continues in the defaulter. That the law contemplates the continued existence of the defaulter down to the date of sale is also clear from Ss. 37 and 47 of the Act, which provide that it is open to the defaulter to pay up the arrears before the date of sale or tender security to avert the sale. As observed in 34 Mad. 493[5] at p. 495, in the eye of the law the land must be his property at the time of the sale. The question therefore is, can it be considered to be Ramanarayana Pillai's property on the date of sale in this case? He having died, his property vested in his sons and therefore on the date of sale the property belonged to them. No doubt they took the property subject to the obligation of paying the arrears of revenue; nevertheless it was their property. The moment a man dies, the ownership which he had in the property is lost. That is the fundamental principle of jurisprudence (vide Holland's Jurisprudence, Edn. 13, p. 222). As Salmond observes in his book on Jurisprudence :

> Dead men are no longer persons in the eye of the law. They have laid down their legal personality with their lives and are now as destitute of rights as they are free from liabilities . . . . . They do not even remain the owners of their property until their successors enter upon the inheritance : (Page 332, Edn. 8.)

So when the land is sold as the property of the defaulter, what was sold was the right of the dead man and the sale would pass no title to the purchaser. I would respectfully adopt the following observations in 22 Mad. 119[6] at page 125 though they were made in connexion with a sale in execution of a decree of Court :

> The only thing sold was the right of a dead man which passes no property, as the dead man has no right at the time of the sale, the rights of the dead man being at the time of the sale in his legal representatives and their rights were not sold or in any way affected because they were not on the record.

According to the declaration under S. 39 of the Act, the purchaser succeeds to the rights and property of the "present registered holder." When the registered holder is dead, there could be no present registered holder to whose rights the purchaser can succeed. It is contended by Mr. Muthukrishna Iyer that there is no procedure for bringing on record the legal representatives of a defaulter under the Revenue Recovery Act, and that a revenue sale cannot be rendered invalid on that account. I quite agree; but there can be no doubt that the proceedings taken by the Collector under the Act are legal proceedings to which the defaulter must be deemed to be a party. Though strictly speaking there is no provision for substituting his legal representative, still when a party to a proceeding is dead, there can be no valid legal proceeding against him. A duty is enjoined on revenue officers to substitute the legal representatives in the registry. What the Collector should have done was to substitute the names of the minors in the registry, fix a fresh date of sale, issue a fresh notification under S. 36 of the Act and serve a copy on the mother, the legal guardian of the minors and proceed with the sale or commence the whole procedure de novo by issuing a fresh demand under S. 25 of the Act, on the mother as the guardian of the minors and in default of compliance with it, take further steps as provided in the Act. As neither procedure was adopted by the Collector in this case, I must hold that the sale was invalid and therefore passed no title to the purchaser, defendant 1.

In the result the decrees of both the lower Courts are set aside and there will be a decree in favour of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs are directed to pay Rs. 100 to defendant 3 as and for the improvements effected by him. The plaintiffs are entitled to get delivery of possession of the property only after payment to defendant 3 of the said sum of Rs. 100 has been made. The plaintiffs are given leave to deposit the said sum into Court. Having regard to the circumstances of this case, I direct each party to bear his own costs of the litigation throughout. There will be no order in regard to mesne profits. Leave to appeal is refused.

LEACH C. J. AND CHANDRASEKHARA AYYAR J.

Paramanand Doss Chota Doss & Sons, Firm and others — Appellants

v.

Nannulal Kanji and others — Respondents.

Appeals Nos. 18 and 31 of 1940, Decided on 25th September 1941, from judgment and decree of Somayya J., D/- 30th January 1940.

(a) Hindu law—Joint family — Alienation by father—Suit to set aside by sons—Suit instigated by father—Effect.

The fact that the institution of a suit by the sons to set aside alienation by their father has been instigated by their father does not prevent the plaintiffs from being granted the reliefs to which they are entitled in law. [P 234*e*]

(b) Hindu law—Joint family—Alienation — Mortgage by manager of property in Madras — Mortgagor can confer power of sale on mortgagee without recourse to Court — Reasons stated.

A manager of an undivided Hindu family in creating for a family purpose a mortgage of immovable property in one of the towns mentioned under S. 69, T. P. Act, like Madras may confer on the mortgagee a power of sale which can be exercised without recourse to the Court for the following reasons : (1) Section 69 applies to Hindus and there is no indication in the Act that the Legislature intended to exclude a mortgage created by the managing member of an undivided Hindu family, (2) the power to mortgage in itself implies a power in the mortgagor to confer upon the mortgagee a right to sell the mortgaged property without the intervention of the Court, and (3) the manager of an undivided Hindu family has the power to sell as well as to mortgage : 52 E. R. 9 ; 53 E. R. 267 ; ('27) 14 A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 121 and ('23) 10 A.I.R. 1923 P. C. 114, Rel. on. [P 235*g*,h]

(c) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 69 — Mortgagor can give power of sale to second mortgagee, though such power not given to first mortgagee.

There is nothing in S. 69 to prevent a mortgagor giving to a second mortgagee, if he likes to do so, a power of sale, even when he has not given one to the first mortgagee. [P 236*b*]

Leach C. J. — These two appeals which arise out of the same judgment raise an important question of law and questions of fact. The question of law is whether a manager of an undivided Hindu family in creating for a family purpose a mortgage of immovable property in Madras may confer on the mortgagee a power of sale which can be exercised without recourse to the Court. The appeals have been heard together and can be dealt with conveniently in one judgment. The suit was filed on the original side of this Court by respondents 1 to 7, all of whom are minors. Respondents 1 and 2 are the sons of defendant 1 in the suit. Respondent 3 is the son of Mulji Lala, the brother of defendants 1 and 2. Mulji Lala died before the institution of the suit. Respondents 4 to 7 are the sons of defendant 2. Defendants 1 and 2 and Mulji Lala constituted an undivided Hindu family and the family remained joint after Mulji Lala's death, which occurred in 1928. Defendant 1 has, at all times material to the issues, been the manager of the family. The family is a business family and during the period with which this suit is concerned its activities were confined to building contracts entered into with railways. The family owned immovable properties in Madras, in the native State of Sachin and in the district of Surat. The Madras properties consisted of land and premises known as Nos. 34 and 35 Gollever Agraharam, Tondiarpet, and land and premises known as Nos. 9 and 10 Hunters Road, Vepery. For the sake of convenience I shall refer to the former property as "the Tondiarpet property" and the latter as "the Vepery property."

On 23rd October 1931 defendant 1, as manager of the family, mortgaged the Tondiarpet property with the firm of Paramanand Doss Chota Doss & Sons, defendant 3, to secure a loan of Rs. 15,000. The mortgage deed contained a power of sale. On 27th March 1935, defendants 1 and 2 created a second mortgage on the Tondiarpet property in favour of defendant 7 for a sum of Rs. 1000 and on 15th April 1935 a third mortgage in his favour for the like amount. On 16th November 1935, defendant 3 exercised the power of sale under the mortgage and the property was purchased by defendant 8 for the sum of Rs. 16,300. On 13th October 1932, defendants 1 and 2 deposited with defendant 5 by way of equitable mortgage to secure a loan of Rs. 20,000, the title deeds of the Vepery property. The deposit was evidenced by a memorandum executed on the same day. On 12th May 1933, defendant 1 created a second mortgage in favour of defendant 4 to secure a loan of Rs. 5000. This deed also contained a power of sale, which was exercised on 9th April 1935, when the property was purchased by defendant 6 for Rs. 28,500. The plaintiffs allege that all these mortgages are invalid so far as their respective interests in the properties are concerned. It is denied that the monies were required for the business of the family or for any family purpose. They allege that defendants 1 and 2 are addicted to drink, profligacy and gambling and that the moneys raised on the mortgages were spent on vice. They aver that the manager of an undivided Hindu family cannot, even when mortgaging family property for a family necessity, confer upon the mortgagee a power of sale.

The suit was tried by Somayya J. who held that S. 69, T. P. Act, does not extend to the manager of a Hindu family when mortgaging family property. On the evidence he found that the mortgage of the Tondiarpet property to defendant 3 was binding on the family to the extent of Rs. 6000, that of the Rs. 15,000 advanced by defendant 3 Rs. 10,000 had been repaid, that the first mortgage to defendant 5 of the Vepery property was valid so far as the family was concerned to the extent of Rs. 10,000 (half the amount of the loan) and that the second mortgage of the Vepery property in favour of defendant 4 was not binding on the family at all. Defendant 7 in whose favour the second and third mortgages of the Tondiarpet property had been created led no evidence in support of his mortgages and in these circumstances the learned Judge held that they were not binding on the plaintiffs. In the end, the learned Judge declared that the plaintiffs were entitled to their shares in the Tondiarpet and Vepery properties, and, as I read his judgment, free from all liability. Appeal No. 18 of 1940 has been filed by defendants 3 and 8 and Appeal No. 31 of 1940 has been filed by defendant 4. Defendants 5 and 6 have filed memoranda of cross objections in Appeal No. 31 of 1940.

It is manifest that the persons who are responsible for this suit are defendants 1 and 2. Defendant 1 has gone so far as to give evidence in support of his sons' allegation against him of immorality and he allowed his motor-car driver to be called to give the names of women with whom it is said he had immoral relations. It is a regrettable fact that the Courts of this Province are not infrequently called upon to decide cases in which Hindu fathers have set their sons up to plead parental immorality in order to defeat alienees of family properties, but until this case came into Court I had never met with a case where a father had gone to the length of supporting by his own evidence a plea of immorality made against him by his son. When the Vepery property was sold on 9th April 1935, defendants 1 and 2 wrote to the purchaser offering to buy back the property from him for Rupees 500 more than he had agreed to pay for it. There was no suggestion in the letter that the power of sale had been unlawfully exercised. The notice which preceded the exercise of the power of sale was dated 30th November 1934 and no reply was sent. On 2nd August 1935, defendant 6, the purchaser of the Vepery property, filed a suit against defendants 1 and 2 to recover possession of it, and on 30th November 1935, he obtained a decree. On 17th February 1936, the present suit was filed and there can be no doubt that its immediate object was to defeat defendant 6. The fact that the institution of the present suit had been instigated by the two fathers does not, of course, prevent the plaintiffs from being granted the reliefs to which they are entitled in law, but it is important to bear in mind that the fathers are behind this suit when it comes to consider the evidence relating to the issues of fact.

It will be convenient now to decide the question whether the manager of a Hindu family may lawfully create a mortgage which confers upon the mortgagee a power of sale when the money is required for a family necessity. Somayya J. is emphatic in his opinion that the manager of a Hindu family is outside the scope of S. 69, T. P. Act. Obviously the learned Judge was greatly impressed by the fact that a power of sale embodied in a mortgage created by the manager of a Hindu family might mean, that the other members of the family would not have recourse to the property should the mortgage prove to be invalid and they would have to be content with a money decree which might not be enforceable. The learned Judge's reasons for holding that the manager of a Hindu family is outside the scope of S. 69 are that the section was passed in the interests of the commercial community, that it does not profess to affect or modify the rules of Hindu law, and that there is no authority in the manager of the family to delegate his powers. Accepting all this to be true, it does not follow that the manager of a Hindu family cannot avail himself of S. 69 when he has occasion to mortgage family property for a family necessity.

The section applies to Hindus and the manager of an undivided Hindu family is himself always a Hindu. The wording of the section is free from ambiguity. It says that notwithstanding anything contained in the Trustees' and Mortgagees' Powers Act, a mortgagee or any other person acting on his behalf, shall subject to the provisions of the section have power to sell or concur in selling the mortgaged property or any part of it, in default of payment of the mortgage money, without the intervention of the Court in certain specified cases. One of the cases specified is where a power of sale without the intervention of Court is expressly conferred on the mortgagee by the mortgage deed and the mortgaged property or any part of it was on the date of the execution of the mortgage deed situate within certain towns, of which Madras is one of those named. The section goes on to provide that the power shall not be exercised until (a) notice in writing requiring payment of the principal money has been served on the mortgagor or on one of several mortgagors and default has been made in payment of the principal money or part of it for three months after the service of the notice or (b) some interest under the mortgage amounting at least to Rs. 500 is in arrear and unpaid for three months after becoming due. In passing, it may be mentioned that it is not suggested that the notices which were served by defendants 3 and 4 were in any way defective. There is nothing in the section itself or in any part of the Act which indicates that it does not apply to a mortgage created by a managing member of a Hindu family and, this being the case, the Court is bound to give effect to it, even if there is a manifest hardship in its application. I do not suggest that the section works any hardship in this case, but supposing that it did the Court could not take the hardship into consideration. The case must be decided on what the section says. Of course there must be a power to mortgage. Unless money is required for the purposes of the family the manager has no power to mortgage, and if a mortgage is itself invalid the deed cannot confer a power to sell. This has been freely conceded by the appellants. But the matter can be carried further. A power to mortgage in itself implies a power to give the mortgagee a right of sale, if the conditions in the mortgage with regard to repayment are not fulfilled. The power can undoubtedly be taken away by statute, but in the case of a mortgage of property by deed in one of the specified towns the right to give such a power has in fact been recognized by the inclusion of S. 69 in the Transfer of Property Act. In 52 E. R. 9[1] Romilly M. R. said :

> The power of sale given to a mortgagee must, I think, be considered, not as the delegation of the power entrusted to the executor, which is a power to sell for the benefit of his cestui que trust, but as the creation of a new power to sell, not for the benefit of the persons interested in the testator's estate, but for the benefit of the person interested in the mortgage; that is, a power to render the mortgage effectual ; and I think that the right to create this power is incidental to the authority of the executor to mortgage.

In that case the question was whether an executor could give a power of sale when mortgaging property of the estate. It was contended that he could not, but this contention was emphatically overruled and the opinion expressed by Romilly M. R. has been accepted as a correct statement of the law. In 53 E. R. 267,[2] Romilly M. R. had occasion to refer again to this question. In that case he observed :

> I think that no objection can be taken before me that the power of mortgaging was executed by means of a mortgage, which contained a power of sale, because I think that such a power is incident to the power to mortgage unless expressly excluded.

In 8 Lah. 597,[3] the Privy Council held that it was for the manager to decide whether he should mortgage or sell. In delivering the judgment of the Board, Sir John Wallis said:

> The learned Judges of the High Court were of opinion that as in this case the business had recently resulted in loss the managing member was not justified in putting more money into it, and that in any case he should have raised money by mortgage instead of sale. As regards the latter question, it is not clear that borrowing probably at a high rate of interest, would have been more beneficial than sale. In any case this was a question for the manager to decide.

As the manager of an undivided Hindu family may sell or mortgage as he deems fit for the purpose of raising money for a family necessity it follows that, apart from any statutory provision to the contrary, he has the right to confer upon a mortgagee a power of sale. Of course where the Transfer of Property Act is in force the mortgage must be one of those specified in S. 69. In 4 Lah. 284,[4] the Privy Council held that a power of sale embodied in a mortgage of property situate in a part of India where the Transfer of Property Act did not apply was a lawful provision. Therefore, we have these factors in favour of the contention of the appellants : (1) Sec. 69 applies to Hindus and there is no indication in the Act that the Legislature intended to exclude a mortgage created by the managing member of an undivided Hindu family; (2) the power to mortgage in itself implies a power in the mortgagor to confer upon the mortgagee a right to sell the mortgaged property without the intervention of the Court; and (3) the manager of an undivided Hindu family has the power to sell as well as to mortgage. This being the position it seems to me that the considerations which weighed with Somayya J. must be ignored. It follows that I consider that the learned Judge misread S. 69. Should it be found that the section results in hardship to members of joint Hindu families, the remedy lies with the Legislature, but it must be remembered that the section does not apply to mofussil mortgages, and comparatively speaking there is little scope for the misuse of it.

1. 52 E. R. 9, Russell v. Plaice.
2. 53 E. R. 267, Bridges v. Longman.

4. ('23) 10 A.I.R. 1923 P. C. 114 : 75 I. C. 7 : 50 I. A. 162 : 4 Lah. 284 (P.C.), Kanhayalal v. National Bank of India Ltd.

The plaintiffs contend that even if the mortgagee of the Vepery property was entitled to exercise the power of sale mentioned in the deed there could in law be no sale of the mortgaged property without the intervention of the Court. This contention is based on the fact that the power of sale was only conferred on the second mortgagee. The first mortgagee admittedly concurred in the exercise of the power by the second mortgagee, of course, on the understanding that he was paid first. The plaintiffs say that the first mortgagee had no right to concur in the sale by the second mortgagee, but here again the provisions of S. 69, T. P. Act, are overlooked. There is nothing in the section to prevent a mortgagor giving to a second mortgagee, if he likes to do so, a power of sale, even when he has not given one to the first mortgagee. Sub-section (1) of the section says that a mortgagee or a person acting on his behalf shall, subject to the provisions of the section, have power to sell or concur in selling the mortgaged property. There can be nothing plainer than this and the first mortgagee in this case did in fact concur. Therefore if the second mortgage was lawfully created the sale of the Vepery property to defendant 6 cannot be disturbed.

I now come to the findings of fact and I will commence with the findings of the learned Judge with regard to the mortgage of the Tondiarpet property. As already mentioned, the appellants here are defendants 3 and 8. Mr. V. V. Srinivasa Ayyangar on their behalf has given no reason for challenging the finding of the learned Judge that only Rs. 6000 out of the Rs. 15,000 advanced by defendant 3 on this mortgage can be regarded as binding on the family. In fact he has made no attempt whatever to dispute the correctness of the learned Judge's conclusion. Therefore the finding must be accepted. It is equally clear that the learned Judge was right in holding that there remains only Rs. 5000 of the principal sum advanced on this mortgage. On 2nd November 1938, Rs. 10,000 of the Rs. 15,000 was repaid. It is not disputed that the Rs. 10,000 came out of moneys belonging to the family and this being the case the family liability of Rs. 6000 was discharged. But as the property has been lawfully sold the plaintiffs have lost their interests in it. Their rights are now restricted to the proceeds of the sale.

Sub-section (4) of S. 69 says that the money which is received by the mortgagee arising from the sale, after discharge of prior incumbrances, if any, to which the sale is not made subject, or after payment into Court under S. 57 of a sum to meet a prior incumbrance, shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be held by him in trust to be applied, first in payment of all costs, charges and expenses incurred in connexion with the sale; and secondly, in discharge of the mortgage money and costs and any other money due under the mortgage; and the residue shall be paid to the person entitled to the mortgaged property. Consequently, the plaintiffs are merely entitled to payment of their shares in the balance of the Rs. 16,300 which was realized by the sale of the property, after the expenses of the sale have been met and the mortgagee has received all which he is entitled to in law as against the plaintiffs. (His Lordship dwelt on the findings and concluded.) The result is that the decree passed by the learned Judge will be set aside and the suit remanded to the original side for the taking of an account of what the plaintiffs are entitled to receive out of the proceeds of the sales of the properties. During the arguments, the Court indicated that this course might be adopted should it consider that the learned Judge had misread S. 69, T. P. Act, and find that the mortgages are binding, either in whole or in part, on the family. No objection was raised to this course being adopted and the parties accepted the position that if the plaintiffs have lost all interest in the properties themselves they are entitled to have recourse to the sale proceeds in this suit. The account will be taken in the light of this judgment and regard will be had to considerations arising out of the personal law of the minors, such as their liability under the pious obligation rule. When the account has been taken the trial Court will pass a fresh decree.

The appellants in each appeal are entitled to their costs against respondents 1 to 9 and I consider that defendant 5 should have his cost on Rs. 4556-11-11 in respect of his cross-objections but that no costs should be awarded on the memorandum of objections filed by defendant 6. The plaintiffs have sued in forma pauperis. The question of the court-fee will be decided by the learned trial Judge when he is giving directions for the drawing up of the new decree. He will also decide the question of the costs to be awarded in the trial Court.

BURN AND MOCKETT JJ.

In re Annika Lakshmudu and others Accused — Appellants.

Referred Trial No. 19 and Criminal Appeal No. 86 of 1941, Decided on 11th March 1941, referred by Court of Session, East Godavari, D/- 24th January 1941.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), S. 24—Murder case — Statement by accused to police held came under S. 24.

In a murder case the police after arresting the accused questioned him as follows: 'Did you commit the offence? Produce the sticks and knives used by you? You need not be afraid if you do so.' Thereupon the accused said 'we admit the offence' and the police officer took down the statements of the accused :

Held that since the statements by the accused were made in answer to a direct inducement, namely that a promise that nothing would happen to them if they produced the sticks and knives which were used and that request was preceded by the words 'Did you commit the offence?' the statements were inadmissible in evidence under S. 24. [P 239*d*]

(b) Evidence Act (1872), S. 27—Statement to police made while producing materials used by accused in committing offence are inadmissible.

A statement to the police by the accused while producing the materials used by him in committing the offence is inadmissible since it cannot be said to be a statement in consequence of which a fact was discovered. [P 239*e*]

(c) Criminal trial—Murder—Sentence—Mitigating circumstance — Primitive character of accused not using deadly weapon but joining in murder held justified transportation.

The five accused men of primitive character who were all waiting with the intention of committing the most violent assault upon the deceased, attacked the deceased and caused injuries with sticks and a deadly weapon. Only one of them had used a deadly weapon :

Held that in the case of the accused who used the deadly weapon, the sentence of death should be confirmed but in the case of others in view of their primitive character the sentence of transportation was enough in the interests of justice. [P 240*b*,c]

E. T. Chockammal — for Accused.

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

Mockett J. — The five appellants have been convicted and sentenced to death by the learned Sessions Judge of East Godavari for the murder on 25th September 1940 of Chinki Asahayudu. The deceased and the accused lived in the village of Siddavaripalem which is shown on the plan and all that it is necessary to note on the plan is that, as is in evidence, any one who wishes to visit the shandy which is used by the people of this village must pass through a forest and later through a village called Erakapuram to reach that shandy and consequently on returning from the shandy they will take the same way in the opposite direction. There is a history of the parties in this case which may be shortly noticed although it is of no very great importance. The deceased was the husband of P.W. 4 who had been married when she was young but had not joined her husband. Then P. W. 4 lived with P. W. 7 and married him but remained with him only for a year. She then left him and went to live with the deceased. P. W. 7 married again one Chinnammi who bore him two children and then this Chinnammi joined Asahayudu.

Naturally this action of the deceased in attracting two women from the house of P.W. 7 into his own caused trouble in the village and a panchayat was held and Asahayudu was directed to pay Rs. 116 to the caste elders for distribution to the aggrieved parties. The amount was reduced to Rs. 40 of which P.W. 7 received Rs. 20 and the rest of his casiemen the other Rs. 20 between them. We mention this narrative because it is suggested in this case that the relations of Annika Nukayya were much aggrieved because of the action of the deceased who had taken two women from P. W. 7 and it was thought the particular caste was thrown into disrepute. That is alleged to be the reason why Asahayudu was murdered by accused 1 to 5. Naturally to attach any great importance to this circumstance would be to attach importance to matters which must be purely conjectural. But they do at any rate make intelligible what did happen on that evening as was found by the trial Court. P. W. 4 was returning from the shandy to the village of Siddavaripalem and she had reached a tadi tree marked on the plan which is in a jungle. P. W. 4 was walking in front carrying the shandy purchase and the deceased was walking behind. She heard a rustling sound and turning round states that she saw the following scene which we reproduce in her own words :

I saw accused 1, Annika Lakshmudu, cutting a Asahayudu on the leg. Accused 1 next cut Asahayudu on the left side of the forehead. The other four accused belaboured and thrashed Asahayudu with sticks. The knife used by accused 1, Lakshmudu, was like M. O. 1. The sticks held and used by accused 2, 3, 4 and 5 were like M. Os. 2, 4, 6 and 7. I bowed and clasped hands crying, 'Babu, Babu,' and then accused 3, Tenke Bennayya hit me on the right thumb and accused 2, Masara Venkanna, hit me on the left shoulder.

That is her statement and description of what happened. It is convenient now to pause for a moment and see what were the wounds found upon this man. The doctor Venkataraman, P. W. 3, held the post mortem examination on the deceased at 6-15 b P. M., on 29th September. He said he found five injuries on the body; (1) a cut exposing the skull bone $2\frac{1}{2}''$ by $\frac{3}{4}''$; (2) a simple fracture of the middle third of the left upper arm; (3) a compound fracture of upper third of right upper arm; (4) a simple comminuted fracture of lower third of left radius and a simple fracture of lower end of the shaft of left ulna bone; and (5) a compound comminuted fracture of lower third of left tibia with the lower end of the upper fragment protruding through a wound. There was also a fracture of the middle third of the shaft of left fibula. On an examination of c the head he found a cross shaped fracture on the left side of the frontal bone and on opening the skull bone he found that the left three-fourths of the horizontal fracture and the lower three-fourths of the vertical fracture were visible inside also. He states that injuries 2, 3, 4 and 5 could have been caused by a blunt instrument like a stick and NO. 1 could have been caused by a sharp instrument like M. O. 1. He thinks that the sticks could have caused the fractures. So, it will be seen that the injuries found upon the deceased correspond with the account of the attack upon him as described by P. W. 4.
d She herself had two injuries on her which are described by the doctor as follows: (1) a swelling on the other part of dorsum of right hand with swelling of the upper part of the thumb, and (2) a contused swelling on the lower portion of front of left shoulder. So it will also be seen that both as regards the injuries which she describes she saw inflicted on the deceased and the injuries that she states she herself actually received she is corroborated by the medical testimony.

It is naturally of great importance in a case of this sort to examine the subsequent conduct of the principal witness who is P. W. 4. She was described by the learned Sessions Judge quite rightly as "a frightened ambushed woman." She threw down her e basket and ran away home and she sent word through one Kesavayya who has been described as a boy. He called her son-in-law, P. W. 5, and when he came, which he did according to P. Ws. 4 and 5, she told him what had happened and in much the same words as have been set out above. P. W. 5 according to her, went to the spot and what happened there will be described when dealing with his evidence. Now the village of Siddavaripalem is a lonely place and the inhabitants do not venture out at night for fear of wild animals and so no message was sent to the authorities until the next day. The next day P. W. 5 went to the Village
f Munsif at a village called Peda Mallapuram and he came to Siddavaripalem about noon. He examined P. W. 4 and she made a statement to him which is marked EX. F in this case. An examination of that statement shows that she described consistently with her evidence in the Court the incidents of the night before. She assigns to the various accused the weapons and the use of the particular weapons in each case.

P. W. 5, the son-in-law, tells how he was summoned by being told that he was urgently required and he went home and then P. W. 4 g told him again in similar terms to those which we have already set out how her husband had been attacked by these five accused and with those weapons and in that manner. But he adds that P. W. 4 asked him, 'go and fetch the deceased home.' This he did. He states that the deceased said to him, "Annika Lakshmayya cut me with a knife. Mosara Venkanna, Tenke Benayya, Tenke Butchayya, Annika Injappa beat me with sticks. I do not hope to survive." There has been some criticism of this witness with regard to whether he can be believed when he says this statement was made for reasons which we will deal with presently.
h P. W. 5 proceeded to the village of Peda Mallapuram and he made a report to the Village Munsif. The Village Munsif came back to Siddavaripalem and at the village he recorded from P. W. 5 EX. G. Exhibit G gives an account which is similar to that which has already been given by P. W. 4, but the statement which P. W. 5 made to the Munsif does not mention that the deceased made the dying declaration which we have set out. It does however say that the deceased said "he (the deceased) asked me to take him home" and that with the assistance of villagers he was brought home. It is not suggested that any other statement was made by the deceased who died soon after. At this point we may deal with the criticism which Miss Chockammal levelled at EX. G, namely, the omission to refer to the dying declaration. There is this to be said about it. It is quite clear from EX. G that P. W. 5 told the Village Munsif that the deceased was able to speak because he said "he asked me to take him home." That being so, the probabilities that he also told him what had happened are great. Of course it may be said that knowing already from P. W. 4 what had happened he may have at the trial thought fit to add it to his evidence but we do not consider that the omission from EX. G of the statement seriously affects the credibility of P. W. 5 as a whole.

The accused were arrested on 29th September and P. W. 10, the Village Munsif, describes what happened. This witness describes how he was summoned to Siddavaripalem and saw the dead man and he also describes how he took the statement EX. G from P. W. 5 and EX. F from P. W. 4. He seems to have sent this report promptly and in this case there has been no cross-examination to suggest that there was any manipulation or preparation of the evidence at Siddavaripalem. When the police arrested the accused the Munsif states that the following occurred :

> Accused 1 Lakshmudu first was questioned by the Sub-Inspector in these words 'Did you commit the offence? Produce the sticks and knives used by you ? You need not be afraid if you do so.' All the five said 'we admit the offence.'

Thereupon the Sub-Inspector took them to the house of accused 1 and they made statements, A-1 producing a knife and A-2, A-3, A-4 and A-5 sticks. These statements which are of a confessional nature were received in evidence and used by the learned Sessions Judge. Now it is obvious that on one ground alone they are inadmissible. Section 24, Evidence Act, states "A confession made by an accused person is irrelevant" and therefore inadmissible in evidence "in a criminal proceeding if the making of the confession appears to the Court to have been caused by any inducement, threat or promise." It is quite obvious that it must have appeared to the Court as it does to us that these statements as proved by P. W. 10 were made in answer to a direct inducement, namely that a promise that nothing would happen to them if they produced the sticks and knives which were used and that request was preceded by the words "Did you commit the offence ?" The learned Sessions Judge while recognizing that there was an inducement as proved by the Village Munsif expresses the quite incomprehensible view that such inducement "will not take away from the essential truth of the statements made by them and their production of the weapons used by them." The statements are of course not receivable in evidence at all and therefore their truth could not be the subject of enquiry. Mr. Ethiraj has quite rightly conceded that on this ground alone the statements should have been excluded but in addition an examination of them shows that they were, as far as can be gathered, statements made whilst producing the material objects concerned and therefore not statements in consequence of which a fact was discovered. We use the expression "as far as can be gathered" because we have been put to some inconvenience in this case by the learned Judge recording in Telugu characters the precise statements. The learned Judge is entitled to record answers in English and the proper and usual course is to do so. If the learned Judge considers that it is necessary for any particular purpose to record the statements in the language spoken, a translation should be added. But in the case of A-1 who brought out the knife there is a record of what he said in Telugu but no translation. Excluding these statements, the result is that the case against these men rests on the evidence of P. W. 4 as corroborated by EX. F and her conduct and by P. W. 5 and in the case of P. W. 5 by his conduct and his statement, EX. G. No serious criticism can be levelled at the conduct of either of these witnesses. The woman having seen her husband murdered says she immediately went home, sought the aid of the most obvious person, her son-in-law, told him what happened, sent him to fetch the injured man. The son-in-law in his turn at the earliest opportunity ran and reported to the Village Munsif what had happened and immediately the Munsif came to the spot, the statements, EXS. F and G were recorded and apart from the omission in EX. G to which reference has been made no criticism worth the name has been launched against him.

The accused in this case who are men of primitive character give no assistance. They content themselves with a denial both at the Magistrate's Court and at the Sessions Court, saying that the case has been fabricated by the police. We have therefore no opportunity of judging whether there is any question of considering their whereabouts that night or any alternative story. We are satisfied that the evidence of P. WS. 4 and 5 is reliable and was properly accepted by the learned Sessions Judge. There is no circumstance of suspicion in this case at all to suggest that this story—really a very simple story when one comes to examine it — was not the entire truth. The learned Public Prosecutor has quite rightly touched on an aspect of the case namely as to whether the evidence in this case is sufficient to prove the intention under S. 34 of the Code, namely whether murder was the common intention of all these five people or whether a conviction would not be more appropriate under S. 302 read with S. 149, Penal Code. We do not consider it necessary to pursue this topic further because the result will be academic for the following reasons. It relates to a matter of sentence. The accused were all undoubtedly waiting with the intention of committing the most violent assault upon the deceased and it has been proved that one of them used a weapon which, in spite of the contentions of the defence, we regard as an obviously deadly weapon, namely M.O. 1. We consider that in his case the sentence of death should be confirmed. In the case of others having, as we have already indicated, regard to the sort of people they are, we think it will be enough in the interests of justice, if, instead of the sentence of death, a sentence of transportation for life is substituted.

The result will, therefore, be that we consider the conviction of all these five persons for murder was correct and so far as their appeals are concerned they are dismissed. We confirm the sentence of death in the case of accused 1 but we set aside the sentence of death in the case of accused 2 to 5 inclusive and instead sentence them to transportation for life.

Order.—Three Bench Magistrates sat to consider C. C. NO. 1931 of 1940 on the file of the First Class Bench Court of Rajahmundry. At a later hearing of the case a fourth Magistrate joined. At the final hearing there were only three Magistrates present, of whom two had sat throughout. So it is clear that the Magistrate who did not sit at the first hearing had no legal power to participate in the disposal of the case. As three Magistrates constitute a quorum and only two Magistrates sat throughout, they could not have passed a legal order. On the date of the final disposal of this case the complainant was absent and so the case was dismissed under Sec. 247, Criminal P. C. Later, the Magistrates realized that they had passed an illegal order and so proceeded to rectify it by hearing the case once again. The trial is proceeding. The accused has therefore filed the present petition for revision. A Bench Court has no power to correct errors in its judgments or to review its own illegal order. Such power vests only in the High Court. The present trial is therefore illegal; and although the order of acquittal passed by the three Bench Magistrates was also illegal, it stands until set aside.

The only question that now arises is whether, after quashing the proceedings now taking place, I should order a retrial or, bearing in mind what has taken place, I should allow the order of acquittal, illegal though it may be, to stand. The case was dismissed because the complainant did not attend; and it seems unlikely that even if the Magistrate who had been present at the beginning had sat throughout, the case would have taken a different turn. It would almost certainly have been dismissed just as it was by the improperly constituted Bench. I do not think therefore that the interests of justice require that the accused, who was acquitted so long ago as 5th February 1941, should now be called upon to stand his trial afresh. The revision petition is allowed and the present proceedings quashed.

Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 250 and 342—Complainant showing cause under S. 250 — Magistrate need not record actual words used by complainant—Proper procedure indicated.

Under S. 250, it is not necessary to record the actual words used by the complainant in showing cause under that section separately as in the case of an accused under S. 342. It is however necessary that the Magistrate should at least indicate in his judgment that he asked the requisite questions and he should set out the explanation the complainant gave and say whether he thought the explanation satisfactory, and if so, why. Even in a simple case where the complainant says nothing more than that the evidence let in is true, the Magistrate should note in his judgment that the complainant had no explanation to offer : ('38) 25 A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 161 and ('38) 25 A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 247, Not approved. [P 241 f,g]

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

Order. — The accused in C. C. No. 17 of 1941 on the file of the joint Magistrate of Tirupattur was charged under S. 409, Penal Code, with misappropriating amounts paid to him as village munsif by the petitioner as kist. In passing an order of discharge, the joint Magistrate wrote :

I find that P. W. 1 (petitioner) has not only failed to prove the charges but also admitted in effect that they are false, frivolous, and vexatious. I therefore discharge the accused under S. 253 (1), Criminal P. C., and direct that P. W. 1 shall pay the accused a compensation of Rs. 30.

The only question that arises is whether the joint Magistrate has complied with the provisions of S. 250, Criminal P. C., which requires of him that if he considers the case to be false, frivolous or vexatious, he should call upon the complainant to show cause why he should not pay compensation. Sub-section (2) requires that :

The Magistrate shall record and consider any cause which such complainant. . . . may show, and if he is satisfied that the accusation was false and either frivolous or vexatious may, for reasons to be recorded, direct that compensation. . . . be paid by such complainant.

Counsel on both sides have been through the records and they have found nothing there which suggests that the learned joint Magistrate asked the questions and made the record that he was required to under sub-ss. 1 and 2 of S. 250, Criminal P. C. I do not think it necessary to go as far as Baguley J. did in A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 161[1] and in A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 247[2] and say that the actual words used by the complainant should be recorded separately as in the case of an accused under S. 342, Criminal P. C. It is however necessary that the Magistrate should at least indicate in his judgment that he asked the requisite questions and he should set out the explanation the complainant gave and say whether he thought the explanation satisfactory, and if so, why. In most cases, the complainant says nothing more than that the evidence let in is true. Even in such a simple case as that, the Magistrate should note in his judgment that the complainant had no explanation to offer. For the above reasons, it is necessary to set aside the order of compensation; and as it is unlikely that the Magistrate would remember after the lapse of more than six months exactly what he asked the complainant and what the complainant said in reply, it would be necessary, if remand were ordered, for the Magistrate to question the complainant afresh; but in the circumstances, I do not think such a step is necessary in view of the fact that the complainant admittedly had a receipt for the money which he says he paid. The Magistrate seems to have accepted the evidence of the karnam and the statement of the accused that it was customary to grant the ryots receipts in advance which would serve as a kind of demand notice. I find it difficult to believe that such a dangerous practice exists. Without therefore disagreeing with the find-Criminal Revn. Case No. 488 and Petn. No. 461 of 1941, Decided on 23rd September 1941, to revise order of Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Tindivanam, D/- 28th April 1941.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 112—Court can pass supplementary order.

There is nothing in the Criminal Procedure Code which prohibits the issuing of a supplementary order under S. 112 relying upon the subsequent conduct of the party though the persons affected by the second notice should of course have sufficient time to consider it. [P 242*f*]

V. T. Rangaswami Ayyangar and E. V. Sundara Reddi — for Petitioner.

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

Order. — A preliminary order under Sec. 112, Criminal P. C., was issued by the Joint Magistrate of Tindivanam, calling upon the petitioner and eight others to show cause why they should not be bound over to keep the peace for a period of 12 months, and ten instances were cited of acts which tended to show that it was necessary to bind them over. The Magistrate began the enquiry; and after one witness had been examined in chief, the police represented to the Court that even after the institution of the proceedings the petitioner and the others had committed a number of other misdeeds which also showed that it was necessary to bind them over. The police therefore asked the Court to pass a supplementary order under S. 112. The Joint Magistrate acceded to the request of the police and the question that arises in revision is whether that practice is illegal or objectionable.

It would be unfortunate if a Court could not take judicial notice of what had taken place after the institution of proceedings of this nature; for the behaviour of a person who was subject to these proceedings after the institution of the proceedings is a very relevant factor to help the Court to determine what order it should pass. The behaviour and action of the person against whom a notice under S. 112 has been issued may be such as to lead the Magistrate to conclude that even though his behaviour before the issue of the notice had been reprehensible, yet, in view of the evidence of his good intentions and good behaviour since the institution of the proceedings, it was not necessary to bind him over. If, on the other hand, the subsequent conduct of such a person indicates that despite the existence of these proceedings and his having been called upon to show cause why he should not be bound over to keep the peace and be of good behaviour, he continues to flout the law and to commit illegal acts, it would seem most desirable that the Court should take notice of this and be influenced by it in framing its final order. Admittedly, there is nothing in the Code which prohibits the issuing of a supplementary order under Sec. 112, and it can be open to no objection that I can think of. The persons affected by the second notice should of course have sufficient time to consider it; and such time has been given to the petitioner in this case. I do not consider that the petitioner is in any way aggrieved. The petition is accordingly dismissed.

P. Govinda Menon — for Appellant.

Leach C. J.—This second appeal has been placed before a Bench because there are conflicting decisions of Judges sitting alone with regard to the interpretation of S. 20, cl. (5), Malabar Tenancy Act, 1929. Section 20 opens with these words :

> No suit for eviction of a customary verumpattamdar, kuzhikanamdar or kanamdar shall lie at the instance of his landlord except on the following grounds :

There are six clauses in which the grounds are set out and cl. (5) is in these terms :

> that the period of the verumpattam, kanam or kuzhikanam, as the case may be, has expired and there has been no renewal and the landlord requires the holding bona fide for his own cultivation or for that of any member of his family or tarwad or tavazhi who has a proprietary and beneficial interest therein.

The question which falls for decision is whether the words "requires the holding bona fide" mean that the jenmi may, in the circumstances stated at the beginning of the clause, resume occupation if there is a genuine intention to cultivate or whether he must show a real need to do so. In S. A. No. 42 of 1939,[1] an unreported case, Venkataramana Rao J. held that a mere desire on the part of the landlord to have the land for his own cultivation, even if bona fide is not enough. The learned Judge said that in coming to a conclusion on the question of the landlord's need being bona fide, the Court should in each case consider whether the circumstances are such that the land must be restored to the landlord for his own cultivation or cultivation by any member of the family or tarwad, the test being the need of the landlord. In forming this opinion the learned Judge placed reliance on the decision of the Calcutta High Court in 26 C. W. N. 499.[2] That was a case under the Calcutta Rent Act, S. 11 of which prohibited a landlord from recovering possession from a tenant so long as the tenant paid the rent to the full extent allowable by the Act and performed the conditions of the tenancy. The section incorporated a proviso giving the landlord the right to resume possession if the premises were required by him bona fide for purposes of building or rebuilding or for his own occupation or the occupation of any person for whose benefit the premises were held. A landlord wished to get possession of the premises from his tenant. The evidence disclosed that the landlord had let out the premises in which he was living to tenants and that the reason which he gave for requiring possession of the premises in suit, namely his wife's health, was not the real reason. We do not regard that decision as being really applicable. The Calcutta Rent Act was a measure designed to prevent profiteering in houses, the war of 1914-18 having resulted in a shortage of residential accommodation. The measure was merely intended to meet a position which was of a temporary nature. It is true that the Malabar Tenancy Act has the object of creating permanent tenancies but the circumstances are in no way analogous and we are unable to read the Malabar Tenancy Act in the same way as the Calcutta Rent Act was read in the case just referred to. The same question arose in this Court in S. A. No. 538 of 1939,[3] which was decided by King J. This judgment is also unreported. King J. in discussing the meaning to be attached to "bona fide" said :

> The expression 'bona fide' cannot apply to a state of circumstances but only to the statements or intentions or actions of a human being. All therefore that is necessary in my opinion is for the Court to decide whether, when the landlord demands or asks for or sues for any land on the ground that he wishes to cultivate it himself, his statement that he wishes to cultivate it himself is a statement made bona fide.

We consider that this interpretation is the correct one. If the Court is convinced that the jenmi has really the intention of cultivating the land he is entitled to be put into possession of it. The fact that he has sufficient land under cultivation elsewhere to provide for the needs of himself and his family matters not. It is his land and if he really wants to cultivate it, he is entitled to regain possession when the kanom has expired and there has been no renewal. In the present case both the Courts below have held that the jenmi had the bona fide intention of cultivating the land. That being so, the decree which has been granted to him cannot in our opinion be disturbed and the appeal will have to be dismissed with costs.

(a) Madras Land Encroachment Act (3 of 1905), S. 9 — Sale of defaulter's property for assessment and penalty passes property free of encumbrances.

Where the Legislature says that the amount of penalty and penal assessment shall be deemed to be land revenue, though it is not in reality land revenue, it must be taken to be land revenue for the purposes of the Act : ('30) 17 A. I. R. 1930 P. C. 54, Rel. on. [P 244*f*,g]

(b) Madras Land Encroachment Act (3 of 1905), S. 9—Object of Act stated.

The object of the passing of the Madras Land Encroachment Act was to negative the Full Bench decision in 27 Mad. 386, which had held that the provisions of Madras Act, 2 of 1864 could not be applied to recovery of penalties and other amounts of like nature from persons who were not landholders and who were treated by the Government as trespassers. It is because the Full Bench held that the impost in such cases was not land revenue that Madras Act, 3 of 1905 was passed wherein the Legislature has expressed in the clearest terms possible that for the purpose of recovery, penal assessment is land revenue and that being so S. 42, Madras Act, 2 of 1864 applies. Judgment. — S. A. No. 508 of 1939 — The question involved in this second appeal is whether a sale held for recovery of penal assessment imposed under Madras Land Encroachment Act, 3 of 1905, prevails over prior encumbrances. A sum of Rs. 1182 odd was the assessment and penalty imposed by the Government for the encroachments of certain lands belonging to the Government by one Venkata Sattayya. The plaintiff in the suit had obtained two mortgages from Sattayya on his properties and had filed a suit and obtained a final decree on foot of those mortgages. As the Government was bringing the property to sale under the provisions of Madras Act 3 of 1905 read with Madras Act 2 of 1864 the plaintiff protested that the land should be sold subject to his mortgages. But the Government ordered the sale to be held free of all prior encumbrances. The plaintiff then paid the amount under protest and filed the present suit for recovery of the sum. If a sale for penal assessment and penalty imposed under Madras Act 3 of 1905 does not prevail over prior encumbrances of the defaulter's properties, then the plaintiff is entitled to recover the sum which he paid under protest in order to save the property from being sold for such penal assessment and penalty. Section 9, Madras Land Encroachment Act, 3 of 1905, lays down :

> The amount of assessment and penalty imposed under this Act on any person unauthorisedly occupying any land shall be deemed to be land revenue and may be recovered from him as arrears of land revenue under the provisions of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act, 1864, or the Madras City Land Revenue (Amendment) Act, 1867, as the case may be.

This section provides that the amount of assessment and penalty imposed under this Act should be deemed to be the land revenue and it provides further that such amount may be recovered as arrears of land revenue under the provisions of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act. Where the Legislature says that the amount of penalty and penal assessment shall be deemed to be land revenue, though it is not in reality land revenue, we must take it that it is land revenue for the purposes of the Act. The Judicial Committee had to consider a similar case under the Income-tax Act. By S. 43 of the Act, > any person employed by or on behalf of a person residing out of British India, or having any business connexion with such person, or through whom such person is in the receipt of any income, profits or gains upon whom the Income-tax Officer has caused a notice to be served of his intention of treating him as the agent of the non-resident person shall, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed to be such agent.

The Judicial Committee say this in 54 Bom. 216[1] at page 223 :

> Now when a person is "deemed to be" something, the only meaning possible is that whereas he is not in reality that something the Act of Parliament requires him to be treated as if he were.

Therefore though the penal assessment and penalty are not in fact land revenue, we must take them to be land revenue. The next portion of S. 9 makes the matter further clear by providing that the amount may be recovered as arrears of land revenue under the provisions of the Madras Revenue

Recovery Act. Thus, the amount is to be deemed to be land revenue and may be recovered as arrears of land revenue. This being so, it is difficult to escape the conclusion that all the consequences which result in the case of a sale under the Revenue Recovery Act for arrears of land revenue strictly so called also result in the case of a sale for recovery of penal assessment and penalty levied under Madras Act 3 of 1905. Reliance is placed by Mr. Raghava Rao upon various decisions of this Court which have considered the effect of sales under the Abkari Act or the Income-tax Act—whether they pass the property free of prior encumbrances or only subject to the encumbrances then existing. The earliest of these cases is the case in 7 Mad. 434.[2] The sale was held under the provisions of S. 10, Madras Abkari Act, which provided that the Collectors may proceed against abkari renters or other persons licensed under the Act for the recovery of arrears due by them "in like manner as for the recovery of arrears of land revenue." Turner C. J. and Muthuswami Ayyar J., held that such a sale did not pass the property free of prior encumbrances. They held that it was only the procedure laid down in Madras Act 2 of 1864 that was to be followed for recovering arrears due by an abkari renter and that a sale under the Abkari Act did not carry the consequences provided by S. 42, Madras Revenue Recovery Act, 2 of 1864. Emphasis was laid on the expression "in like manner as for the recovery of arrears of land revenue." After referring to the various sections of Madras Act 2 of 1864 the Judges said this :

> Section 42 declares that all lands brought to sale on account of arrears of revenue shall be sold free of all encumbrances. Taking these sections together, the intention is clear that the purchase is free of prior encumbrances only when the arrear is of public revenue of which the land is the first security by statutory declaration. . . . . The question is — has S. 42 been extended by S. 52 to sales for arrears of Abkari revenue? We must certainly answer it in the negative. The expression, "In like manner as for the recovery of arrears of land revenue," indicates only that the same procedure is to be followed, and the language used in S. 52 is to the same effect.

In 28 Mad 420,[3] Benson and Boddam JJ. followed the decision just cited and held that a purchaser at a sale for arrears due by an abkari renter did not pass the land free of encumbrances as in the case of a sale for arrears of land revenue. In the old Abkari Act of 1864, the provision was that the arrears may be recovered in like manner as for recovery of arrears of land revenue. In the Abkari Act 1 of 1886 the provision was that abkari arrears may be recovered as if they were arrears of land revenue: see S. 28 of Madras Act 1 of 1886. It was held that this change did not affect the applicability of the decision in 7 Mad. 434.[2] Cases of sales under the provisions of the Income-tax Act came up for decision more than once. In 26 Mad. 230[4] this Court had to deal with the provisions of the Income-tax Act then in force (Act 2 of 1886). Under S. 30 of that Act :

> The Collector may in default of payment of the tax recover the amounts as if they were arrears of land revenue or by any process applicable to the recovery of a municipal or local tax or may pass an order for recovery of the amount from the defaulter, and such order may be executed as a decree for payment of money passed under the Civil Procedure Code.

Act 2 of 1886 is an Imperial Act and the question was whether a sale under S. 30 of that Act which provided that the tax may be collected by the Collector as if it was arrear of land revenue passed the property free of encumbrances. The Judges applied the principle of the decision in 7 Mad. 434[2] and pointed out that the difference in the wording between the provisions of the Income-tax Act and the Abkari Act was merely verbal. They say this at page 233 :

> We are clearly of opinion that S. 30, Income-tax Act, has not the effect of converting income-tax into an arrear of land revenue in respect of the land which may be brought to sale for realization of the income-tax, but that its effect simply is to extend the procedure prescribed by (Madras) Act 2 of 1864 and (India) Act 1 of 1890, to the recovery of arrears of income-tax.

Section 46 (2), Income-tax Act of 1922, provides :

> The Income-tax Officer may forward to the Collector a certificate under his signature specifying the amount of arrears due from an assessee, and the Collector, on receipt of such certificate, shall proceed to recover from such assessee the amount specified therein as if it were an arrear of land revenue, and the same result would follow even in respect of sales held under the present Income-tax Act. The question has next been considered with reference to loans granted under the Land Improvement Loans Act (19 of 1883). Section 7 of that Act provides for the recovery of the loan. It was held by this Court in 41 Mad. 691[5] that a sale held under S. 7 (1) (c) of that Act passed the property free of encumbrances. This is a decision on the other side of the line. Mr. Raghava Rao urges that the decision in 7 Mad. 434[2] and the cases following it, proceed upon the principle that it is only where a land is sold for arrears of land revenue accruing on that very land, that the sale passes the property free of encumbrances and not where the sale is for recovery of an amount due on another land of the landholder. In 34 Mad. 493[6] Miller and Munroe JJ. decided that for the arrears of land revenue due on the land included in one patta, the land in another patta in another village may be sold free of encumbrances. They pointed out that under S. 5, Revenue Recovery Act, all the lands and buildings of the defaulter are a charge. This view of Miller and Munroe JJ. was followed by this Court in 41 Mad. 691.[5] Seshagiri Ayyar J. says at page 700:

> During the course of the argument I felt some doubt as to whether the decision of Miller and Munroe JJ. in 34 Mad. 493[6] was right. But on closely examining the sections of the Revenue Recovery Act, I feel that the effect of S. 42 is not only to discharge pre-existing encumbrances upon the property on which the arrear is due but also pre-existing encumbrances upon every property which is brought to sale for arrears of revenue due from the defaulter.

See also 27 M. L. J. 295.[7] Therefore, though the amount which is sought to be recovered did not accrue in respect of the land which is now sought to be proceeded against, the Government has the right to proceed against that property and to enforce all the rights given to them under the Madras Revenue Recovery Act. No doubt in the case of arrears under the Abkari Act or the Income-tax Act, they do not accrue on any land of the defaulter. So, likewise in the case of penal assessment and penalty, they do not accrue on the lands which are now sought to be proceeded against. Once the amount levied as penal assessment and penalty is to be deemed to be land revenue and is to be recovered as such, it is impossible to come to any other conclusion than that a sale of the defaulter's property for such an amount passes the property free of all encumbrances.

Mr. Raghava Rao then argued that if it is so, the Legislature need not provide that the amount may be recovered as arrears of land revenue. He says that these words will be superfluous if under the expression "shall be deemed to be land revenue," the amount in question became land revenue. I think the Legislature used the expression "and may be recovered as land revenue" only for the purposes of further clarification and that the addition of this expression does not cut down the effect to be given to the expression "shall be deemed to be land revenue." All the decisions referred to by Mr. Raghava Rao proceed upon the wording of the provisions of the particular Acts all of which have this common feature that the arrears due under those Acts were to be recovered as if they were land revenue or in the like manner as land revenue. But here the provision is "that the amount shall be deemed to be land revenue" and "may be recovered as land revenue" and not "in the manner provided for the recovery of land revenue." Therefore the Legislature has expressed in the clearest terms possible that for the purpose of recovery, penal assessment is land revenue and if this so, S. 42 of Madras Act, 2 of 1864 applies.

Before closing the judgment, it is only necessary to say that Madras Act 3 of 1905 was necessitated by the decision of the Full Bench of this Court in 27 Mad. 386,[8] which held that the provisions of Madras Act 2 of 1864 could not be applied to recovery of penalties and other amounts of like nature from persons who were not landholders and who were treated by the Government as trespassers. It was said that the impost was not land revenue, that the trespasser was not a landholder within the meaning of the Revenue Recovery Act, that he was only in improper possession of Government property and that his act was a wrongful act and a trespass. It is because the Full Bench held that the impost in such cases was not land revenue, that Madras Act 3 of 1905 was passed and the acceptance of Mr. Raghava Rao's argument will be to defeat one of the main purposes of the Legislature in enacting Madras Act 3 of 1905. I hold that S. 9 equates the penal assessment to land revenue and also provides that it may be recovered as land revenue. This being so, the view of the lower appellate Court is wrong. I reverse the decision of the lower appellate Court and restore that of the District Munsif with costs here and in the lower appellate Court.

K. V. Ramaseshan and C. D. Venkataraman — for Petitioner.

Government Pleader and K. V. Ramachandra Ayyar — for Respondent.

Order. — This petition has been filed against the finding of the District Munsif of Udumalpet in O. S. No. 46 of 1940 that he has jurisdiction to try the suit. The suit was one for the administration of the estate of one Kairunnissa Bibi for accounts and for division of the assets amongst the heirs under the Mahomedan law. The short point that arises in this petition is whether the provisions of Section 7 (iv) (f), Court-fees Act, or Artical 17-B of Sch. 2 apply. At first sight, there is a very formidable array of authority in support of the contention of Mr. Ramachandra Iyer for the respondent that an administration suit should be treated as a suit for accounts and that, therefore, S. 7 (iv) (f) is applicable. He has cited 39 Bom. 545,[1] 44 Cal. 890,[2] 45 Cal. 634,[3] 61 Cal. 711[4] at p. 724, 55 I. C. 258[5] and 12 Rang. 512,[6] in most of which cases it was held that S. 7 (iv) (f) was the proper provision of the Court-fees Act to apply. Of these cases, however only one, viz., 44 Cal. 890[2] discusses this question fully and directly. That was a case where there was a trust for sale created by a debtor for the benefit of his creditors. The history in the English Courts of administrative actions was discussed; but the whole of the reasoning, the discussion, and the conclusions were confined to that particular kind of administration suit in which a creditor seeks to have administered the estate of a deceased debtor for the benefit of the creditors. If this suit had been one for the administration of a debtor's estate, I should have been compelled to regard this well considered decision as a very strong authority for Mr. Ramachandra Ayyar's position that S. 7 (iv)(f) was the proper provision of the Court-fees Act to determine both the question of court-fee and the question of jurisdiction; but can the analogy for purposes of court-fee between an administration suit and a suit for accounts be extended to other kinds of administration suits in which the next of kin, the legatee, or the executor seeks to have the estate of the deceased person administered for the benefit of those entitled to some share of the deceased person's property, and which may involve not merely the taking of accounts but the division of moveable and immovable property ? In 39 Bom. 545[1] the question discussed was whether the suit, which was for accounts and the administration of an estate of a deceased person, was really an administration suit or whether it was not a suit for a definite share of property. The pleadings were discussed and the learned Judges came to the conclusion that it was an administration suit. They did not discuss what provisions of the Court-fees Act do apply to an administration suit. They say :

According to the provisions of the Court-fees Act, if the plaintiff succeeds in showing upon the accounts that she is entitled to a share in the property and assets of Tyeballi Sheikh Adam, she will not be able to obtain execution of any decree that may be passed in her favour by reason of the provisions of S. 11, Court-fees Act, until the difference between Rs. 130 and the fee which would have been payable, had the suit comprised the whole of the amount decreed, has been paid to the proper officer. That being so, there does not appear to be any reason why this should not be treated as a suit for account and for the share which may be found due to the plaintiff upon taking of such account, and if it is a suit for an account falling under S. 7 (iv) (f), Court-fees Act, the plaintiff is at liberty to value it at Rs. 130 or any other sum she pleases.

45 Cal. 634[3] was an administration suit of a somewhat similar kind to that in 39 Bom. 545;[1] but the learned Judges do not discuss whether that particular kind of administration suit would properly be governed for purposes of court-fee by S. 7 (iv) (f), Court-fees Act. They follow 39 Bom. 545[1] and 44 Cal. 890[2] without expressing any reasons. 61 Cal. 711[4] at p. 724 has been quoted by Mr. Ramachandra Iyer because of a sentence found in the judgment in which the learned Judges were discussing whether the suit under consideration was an administration suit or not. They held that it was not; because (quoting 44 Cal. 890[2]) "an administration suit is in essence a suit for accounts." 55 I.C. 258[5] merely follows 39 Bom. 545[1] and 44 Cal. 890[2] without argument. 12 Rang. 512[6] dealt with an administration suit, the nature of which is not clear from the judgment. The learned Judges purported to follow 9 Rang. 165[7] which, however, did not deal with an administration suit at all, but with a suit for accounts. They apparently assumed, as a proposition that needed no argument, that an administration suit is a suit for accounts. 12 Rang. 512[6] also contains a reference to 7 Rang. 164[8] which dealt with a suit for the administration of the estate of a deceased Mahomedan. There, the relief was valued by the plaintiff at Rs. 2000, that being her share in the property. It was held by the learned Judge that that was the correct valuation. Clearly, section 7 (iv) (f) was not applied in that case. The learned Judge went on to say that as the suit was not of the nature described in the Court-fees Act, S. 7, paras. v, vi and ix and para. x, cl. (d), and that as the court-fee was payable ad valorem on the claim, the value of the suit for the computation of court-fees and the value for purposes of jurisdiction were the same. He therefore concluded that the value of the share of the plaintiff in the deceased's estate determined jurisdiction.

In none of the above decisions was it considered whether it would not be more appropriate to apply Article 17B of Sch. 2, Court-fees Act. The question in each case was whether the plaintiff should pay court-fee on a reasonable valuation of his share of the deceased's assets. If not, it was assumed that S. 7 (iv) (f) was the correct provision of the Court-fees Act to apply. The learned District Munsif quoted the decision of Wadsworth J. in C. M. A. No. 235 of 1938. This was a short order on a check slip put up by the office in which the learned Judge pointed out that an administration suit was not merely a suit for account, that S. 7 (iv) (f) could not therefore be applied, and that as there was no provision in the Court-fees Act applicable to an administration suit, it followed that the residuary provision of Art. 17B of Sch. 2 would have to be applied. He did not discuss the case law on this point, beyond saying that 55 Mad 26[9] was an authority for the position that an administration suit was not a suit for accounts. The point that fell for decision in 55 Mad. 26[9] was whether creditors who were impleaded in an administration suit as defendants would have to pay court-fee on the value of their claims. It was argued by the learned Government Pleader, on the analogy of S. 11, Court-fees Act, that as a suit for administration was substantially a suit for accounts, the defendant-creditors would have to pay a court-fee.

The learned Judges, while conceding that in a sense a creditor's suit for administration was a suit for accounts, pointed out that the analogy between an administration suit and an ordinary suit for accounts broke down in many respects. They were not prepared to consider it a suit for accounts for the purpose of applying S. 11, Court-fees Act. They pointed out that it would be improper in a fiscal enactment like the Court-fees Act to argue by analogy and to apply to an administration suit rules that were laid down solely for a suit for accounts. The learned Judges avoided expressing any opinion as to the court-fee payable by the creditor who filed the suit ; but if we exercise the caution thought necessary by the learned Judges in applying the provisions of a fiscal enactment relating to one type of suit to another, it is clear that we ought not to regard an administration suit as a suit for accounts for any purpose relating to court-fee, above all a suit which is not one by a creditor for the administration of the assets of a deceased person to be divided amongst the creditors, but one in which a division of moveable and immovable property might have to be made. I, therefore, respectfully agree with Wadsworth J.'s expression of opinion in C. M. A. No. 235 of 1938 that as an administration suit is not a suit for account, it should be valued under Art. 17B of Sch. 2, Court-fees Act.

It is conceded that if Art. 17B of Sch. 2, Court-fees Act, is to govern the court-fee, then the jurisdiction is determined by the market value of the property. If the market value exceeds the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court, then the plaint will have to be returned for presentation in the Court having jurisdiction. As this is conceded, it is not necessary to discuss the authorities on this point. It is sufficient to refer to 50 M. L. W. 154[10] which follows 50 Mad. 646.[11] The learned Munsif while holding that Art. 17B of Sch. 2 governed the court-fee, came to the conclusion that the court-fee paid was sufficient, because the plaintiff had paid Rs. 22 whereas, under Art. 17B of Sch. 2, all that was necessary was a court-fee of Rs. 15. On the question of jurisdiction, he contented himself with saying > as regards issue 10, since there is nothing preventing an administration suit being filed in this Court and since this suit is a suit for administration, I find on this issue that this Court has jurisdiction.

He did not consider whether, despite its being an administration suit, the value of the property was such as to preclude him from trying the suit. It seems probable that the market value of the property exceeded the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court; but as the learned District Munsif has not given any definite finding on this point, he will have to do so. It was argued by Mr. Ramachandra Ayyar that even though the District Munsif erred in holding that he had jurisdiction, this Court ought not to interfere at this stage; for, if the suit is decreed in favour of the plaintiff, the defendant would be entitled to raise this question in appeal; and if he satisfied the Court that he had suffered prejudice by the wrongful exercise of jurisdiction by the District Munsif, he would be able to get the decree set aside. He quoted 51 M. L. J. 500[12] in support of his argument. I do not think that 51 M.L.J. 500[12] can be considered to be an authority for the position that this Court should not interfere in revision on a question of jurisdiction when it arises at a preliminary stage in the suit.

The learned Judges thought that under the peculiar circumstances of the case before them, it was not necessary for them to consider the principal point raised in revision. This Court has frequently interfered before the disposal of a suit where it has been found that a Court has wrongfully assumed jurisdiction. I quite appreciate the argument as to the inconvenience caused by holding up the trial of a suit in order that this Court might consider the correctness of decisions made during the course of trial. If I had considered the question of inconvenience soon after admission, I might have held that it was not advisable to interrupt the trial of the suit; but that inconvenience has already been caused and the disposal of the suit has been delayed for a considerable time owing to the pendency of this civil revision petition. That cannot now be avoided; so there is no longer any reason why, when the suit is still in its early stages, this Court should not interfere to correct an error which affects jurisdiction. The petition is therefore allowed and the suit remanded to the District Munsif for fresh consideration of the question of jurisdiction. If he finds that the market value of the property exceeds Rs. 3000, he should return the plaint to the plaintiff for presentation in a Court having jurisdiction. The costs of the parties to this application will abide the result and will be provided for in the order of the District Munsif. The Government Pleader will be entitled to his costs from the Government.

Order. — In a dispute between one Suryanarayana Raju, who originally filed this criminal revision petition, and a large number of counter petitioners, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Bhimavaram passed an order that certain items of property should be retained in the possession of the counter petitioners, and the petitioner was prohibited from interfering with their enjoyment. After the filing of this petition, Suryanarayana Raju died; and his wife and sister were brought on record as his legal representatives. Mr. Jayarama Iyer for the petititoners argues that the order of the lower Court is not only a travesty of justice but also a gross abuse of the powers of the Court. In particular, he says that none of the facts stated by the counter petitioners was satisfactorily proved and that in any event the Magistrate did not give a finding as to possession on the date of the preliminary order. A preliminary objection was raised by Mr. V. V. Srinivasa Iyengar that this Court had no jurisdiction to bring on record the legal representatives of the man who filed this petition; and he has quoted 4 M.L.W. 440[1] where it was held that S. 145(7), which permitted Magistrates to continue their inquiry despite the death of any of the parties, applies only to the proceedings of the Magistrates' Court and not to this Court in revision. The learned Judges said that they had been shown no authority for the extension of the purview of S. 145 (7) to other proceedings, such as the proceedings before them under the Charter Act. That revision petition had to be filed under the Charter Act; because at the time that case was decided, S. 435, Criminal P. C., did not apply to proceedings under Chap. 12, Criminal P. C. In 1923, however, S. 435 was extended to proceedings under Chapter 12 and Sec. 561A was enacted. As Sec. 435 was made to apply to Chap. 12 also, it followed that from the date of the amendment, this Court, in dealing with revision applications against orders under Sec. 145, Criminal P. C., had the wide powers of an appellate Court instead of the restricted powers conferred under Sec. 15, Charter Act. Section 561A, too, gave very wide additional powers to the High Court. It says :

Nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or affect the inherent powers of the High Court to make such orders as may be necessary to give effect to any order under this Code, or to prevent abuse of the process of any Court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice.

If there had been a gross miscarriage of justice in this case, then, to secure the ends of justice, it would have been necessary to have brought the present petitioners on record in order that the wrong order of the lower Court could be corrected. I think therefore that as the law now stands, this Court has ample power to bring legal representatives on record if the ends of justice require it. Mr. Jayarama Ayyar has taken me through certain portions of the depositions of the witnesses and through a great deal of the judgment of the learned Magistrate, and there seems to me to have been abundant material for the finding that was arrived at by the Magistrate. It may or may not be true that a civil Court would have required some better evidence of the adoption and partition; but a large number of witnesses were examined on behalf of the counter petitioners; and if their evidence is to be accepted, as the learned Magistrate did accept it, they prove that the second counter petitioner was adopted by Suryanarayana Raju and that when some dispute arose between the adoptive father and the adopted son about the selection of a bride for the latter, a partition was effected by mediators of the family property. In that partition the second counter petitioner (the adopted son) obtained possession of his half share. Counter petitioners 4 and 17 obtained possession, the Magistrate finds, of all of the father's half share with the exception of 20 cents; and he gave a finding that with the exception of that 20 cents, all the other property was in the hands of the counter petitioners.

It is contended by Mr. Jayarama Iyer that the learned Magistrate's order is vitiated by his failure to consider the real question that fell to be decided by him under S. 145, Criminal P. C., i.e., who was in possession on the date of the preliminary order? It does seem true that in the operative part of the learned Magistrate's judgment, he has not specifically referred to that crucial date; but it seems clear from a reading of the judgment that he was of opinion that when the partition was effected, the son immediately obtained possession of his half share of the property. That was on 24th March 1940, after the harvest had been completed; and so there were few acts of enjoyment possible before this complaint was filed. The evidence of the counter petitioners is to the effect that there were certain acts of enjoyment, such as repairing the bunds and the cultivation of a seed bed. I think that is quite sufficient. If, in fact, the petitioners willingly accepted the partition and said that the share of the son was to be his, that was in fact effectively giving over possession into the hands of the son, even though the nature of the season made it impossible for the son to perform many acts of enjoyment.

It has been found that counter petitioners 4 and 17 took the half share of the father—with the exception of 20 cents on lease for a period of one year. That period has long since expired and the learned advocate for the said counter petitioners does not deny that the petitioners are entitled to receive back items 2, 3, 6 and 14. Attachment of all the lands was ordered by this Court to continue, and the Court auctioned the lands for one year and received a certain sum, the exact amount of which we do not now know. It is admitted that the petitioners are entitled to the lease amount agreed on between them and counter petitioners 4 and 17 and that counter petitioners 4 and 17 are entitled to the balance of the money deposited in Court in connexion with the items leased to them. The lower Court will therefore pay from the money in its hands the lease amount to the petitioners and the balance of this sum to counter petitioners 4 and 17. The proceeds of the leasing out of the son's property will of course be given to him. The attachment of those lands will be dissolved and the possession of them given to him. Items 2, 3, 6 and 14 will be given to the petitioners. In the result the petition fails and is dismissed.

Mohamed Nathar Sahib — Respondent.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 393 and Petn. No. 372 of 1941, Decided on 27th August 1941, to revise order of Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Chidambaram, D/- 7th January 1941.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 488 — Maintenance petition by married woman against third person as mother of minor child alleged to be born through illegal intimacy with him—Admissions of paternity are irrelevant if woman fails to prove non-access to her husband when child could have been begotten.

In a petition for maintenance by a married woman against a third person as mother and guardian of minor child alleged to have been born out of illegal intimacy with that third person all admissions of paternity by that third person are irrelevant if the woman fails to prove that she and her husband had no access at the time when the child could have been begotten. [P 252b]

K. S. Jayarama Iyer and G. Gopalaswami — for Petitioners.

C. Padmanabha Ayyangar — for Respondent.

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

FACTS.—The petitioner as the mother and guardian of two minor children filed an application under S. 488, Criminal P. C., against the respondent alleging that she was a married woman employed as a midwife, that the respondent got acquainted with her and contracted illegal intimacy with the result that two children were born. It was in evidence that she got separated from her husband in 1934 and became acquainted with the respondent from 1937. It was also found that the husband was visiting the petitioner during the time the respondent was intimate with her and there were ever so many other males with whom the petitioner was intimate. The lower Court held that in those circumstances there was no conclusive proof that the children were born to the respondent and so refused to pass an order under S. 488, Criminal P. C., and against this order the present revision was filed.

Order.—In view of the clear wording of S. 112, Evidence Act, all admissions of paternity are irrelevant if the complainant fails to prove that she and her husband had no access at the time when the child could have been begotten. The Magistrate has held that there may have been access. The petition for maintenance had necessarily therefore to be dismissed, however convincing the evidence adduced by the complainant might have been. This petition is dismissed.

Leach C. J.—Section 69 (2), Partnership Act, states that no suit to enforce a right arising from a contract shall be instituted in a Court by or on behalf of a firm against a third party unless the firm is registered and the persons suing are or have been shown in the register of firms as partners in the firm. The question which arises in this petition is whether the registration of a firm after it has filed a suit can cure the defect. In this case an unregistered partnership instituted a small cause suit in the Court of the District Munsif of Palni. It had applied for registration before filing the plaint, but the application had not been granted. In fact it was not granted until over a month had elapsed after the filing of the plaint. In these circumstances the District Munsif dismissed the suit with costs. The reported cases disclose a difference of opinion, but the majority of the judgments are to the effect that subsequent registration of the firm does not entitle the Court to proceed with the suit and that the only course open to it is to dismiss it.

The question has been considered on different occasions by four Judges of this Court, namely by Menon J. in 71 M. L. J. 663,[1] Stodart J., in (1937) 2 M.L.J. 717,[2] Horwill J., in (1937) 2 M.L.J. 273[3] and Venkataramana Rao J., in ('1938) 2 M.L.J. 44.[4] Menon, Stodart and Venkataramana Rao JJ. formed the opinion that subsequent registration did not remedy the defect. On the other hand, Horwill J. held that it did. Menon, Stodart and Venkataramana Rao JJ. considered that the wording of the section compelled the Court to dismiss a suit filed by an unregistered firm. Venkataramana Rao J. in addition to relying on the wording of the section drew attention to the fact that the Privy Council in 51 Bom 725[5] had pointed out that S. 80, Civil P. C., is explicit and mandatory. Section 80, Civil P. C., has very much in common with S. 69, Partnership Act. It says that no suit shall be instituted against the Secretary of State for India in Council, or against a public officer for an act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity, until the expiration of two months next after notice in writing has been given. The Privy Council also observed that S. 80 imposes a statutory and unqualified obligation upon the Court, and S. 69 (2), Partnership Act, does the same. Venkataramana Rao J. relied further on the decisions of this Court with regard to S. 28 (2), Provincial Insolvency Act. That section prevents a suit being filed against an insolvent without the leave of the Insolvency Court, and in 51 Mad. 833[6] and I.L.R. (1937) Mad. 841[7] this Court held that a subsequent leave would not cure the initial defect and validate the institution of a suit. In expressing the contrary opinion Horwill J. in (1937) 2 M.L.J. 273[3] observed :

> It is well established principle that the Court can take notice of events that happen subsequent to the filing of the suit and that any irregularities or deficiencies in the cause of action that may exist on the date of the filing of the plaint can be overlooked if on some date subsequent to the filing of the plaint and before the suit comes up for trial those irregularities or deficiencies are rectified by the plaintiff or by process law.

Whatever may be principle which applies to the rectification of irregularities and deficiencies in the cause of action, we are of the opinion that it cannot be applied here. The conclusion of Horwill J., that subsequent registration will put the suit on a proper basis receives support, however, from the judgment of the Calcutta High Court in 41 C. W. N. 534[8] and that of the Nagpur High Court in A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 301.[9] These cases were decided by Judges sitting alone. In the Calcutta case, it was said that when registration had been effected the suit might be treated as though the plaint had been received and the suit instituted on the day following the day of registration. The Patna High Court expressed dissent from this opinion in 18 Pat. 114[10] where Harries C. J. observed that he knew of no provision of law which permits a Court to treat the plaint as having been filed on a date subsequent to the date upon which it was actually filed, and we know of no such provision. It has been pointed out to us that a Bench of this Court expressed the opinion in 69 M.L.J. 791[11] that a defect in a suit filed under the provisions of O. 33, R. 15, Civil P. C., could be remedied after the suit had been instituted and that in such circumstances it should be treated as having been instituted on that date. Order 33, R. 15 states that an order refusing to allow a person to sue as a pauper shall be a bar to a subsequent application of a like nature by him in respect of the same cause of action, but he shall be at liberty to institute a suit in the ordinary manner provided he first pays the costs incurred by Government and by the opposite party opposing his application for leave to sue as a pauper. The wording of O. 33, R. 15 is not the same as the wording of S. 69 (2), Partnership Act. Order 33, R. 15 gives liberty to institute a suit in certain circumstances. Section 69 (2) says that no suit shall be instituted in certain circumstances which is more emphatic, and the circumstances are very different. Therefore we do not regard 69 M.L.J. 791[11] as having application here.

The Allahabad High Court in 58 All. 495,[12] the Patna High Court in 18 Pat. 114,[10] the Lahore High Court in 17 Lah. 275[13] and A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 767,[14] have all held that subsequent registration of the firm will not allow the suit to proceed. All these cases except the second Lahore case were decided by Division Benches. The great weight of authority is in favour of the opinion that registration will not put the suit on a proper basis and that the Court's duty is to dismiss it. We consider that the majority opinion is correct. A suit is instituted when the plaint is filed in a Court of competent jurisdiction. Section 69 says that a suit by a firm shall not be instituted until the firm has been registered. The registration of the firm is a condition precedent to the right to institute the suit and the Court has no jurisdiction to proceed with the trial when the condition precedent has not been fulfilled. For the reasons given, we consider that the District Munsif acted lawfully in dismissing the suit.

Manyam Krishna Rao — Petitioner

v.

Official Receiver, East Godavari and another — Respondents.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 2258 of 1939, Decided on 8th September 1941, to revise order of Dist. Court, East Godavari at Rajahmundry, D/- 5th August 1939.

(a) Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), S. 20—S. 20 does not apply to sales by Official Receiver.

Section 20 has no application to sales by Official Receiver and cannot be invoked in favour of a person who is not a judgment-debtor seeking to stay the execution of a decree. [P 255*e*]

(b) Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), Ss. 21 and 20—Debts due by insolvent—Scaling down - Procedure analogous to that for reduction of other debts should be followed—Debts not covered by decree or suits in other Courts—Insolvency Court can entertain application under S. 21 to scale down debts and direct receiver to revise schedule according to result or stay realisation of assets — Insolvent and Official Receiver both should be made parties to application under S 21 — But Court is not bound to stay administration of estate or sale of property subject to mortgage until debts are scaled down.

Though S. 21 lays down no procedure for scaling down debts due by the insolvent, the procedure should, as far as may be, be analogous to that prescribed for the reduction of other debts. Therefore, in the case of a debt embodied in a decree, the Court which passed the decree would have to be moved under S. 19 to reduce the decree and the Court which executes the decree must be moved under S. 20 to stay execution of the decree. The Insolvency Court is competent to entertain an application under S. 21 for the scaling down of the debts not covered by the decrees or suits in other Courts and to apply the principles of the Act and direct the Official Receiver to revise or frame the schedule in accordance with the result, and to give directions to the Official Receiver regarding the staying of realisation of assets where such realisation is legally to be effected by the scaling down process. But it certainly does not follow from the mere fact that an insolvent's estate may claim the benefit of S. 21, that all administration of the estate must stop until there has been an adjudication on the claims nor does it necessarily follow because there is a sale being held subject to mortgages and the insolvent estate may have a right to get those mortgage-debts scaled down, that the sale must necessarily await the scaling down process. Both the Official Receiver and the insolvent should be made parties to any application under S. 21.

(c) Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), Sections 21 and 20—Sale of insolvent's property subject to mortgage advertised by Official Receiver — Application by insolvent under S. 21 to Insolvency Court without impleading Official Receiver to declare him agriculturist, scale down his debts and stay sale—Insolvent also applying to Official Receiver to stay sale under S. 20 and mentioning his application filed before Insolvency Court—Receiver refusing stay and holding sale on 27th September 1938—Application by insolvent under S. 68, Provincial Insolvency Act, to set aside sale—Application to Insolvency Court without impleading receiver and for scaling down all debts including mortgage debts held not maintainable — Application to receiver under S. 20 for stay of sale held incompetent — Sale by Receiver held valid.

In the course of the administration of the assets of the insolvent the Official Receiver advertised for sale the equity of redemption on certain properties belonging to the insolvent. The sale was fixed for 27th September 1938. On 14th September 1938, the insolvent applied to the Insolvency Court under S. 21 without impleading the Official Receiver for declaring him to be an agriculturist, for scaling down his debts and staying the sale. He also applied to the Official Receiver under S. 20 to stay the sale mentioning the application which he had filed before the Insolvency Court. The Official Receiver refused to stay the sale which was held on 27th September 1938. The insolvent thereupon applied to the Insolvency Court under S. 68, Provincial Insolvency Act, to set aside the sale:

Held that the application to the Insolvency Court to scale down all the debts including the mortgage debts and without impleading the Official Receiver was not maintainable and the application to the Official Receiver under S. 20 of Act 4 of 1938 for stay of sale was incompetent, and though the sale was held by the Official Receiver with the knowledge that the insolvent had made a move in the matter of an application under S. 21 of Act 4 of 1938, it could not be said that the Official Receiver acted illegally or irregularly in going on with the sale notwithstanding that knowledge.

(d) Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), Ss. 20 and 21—Official Receiver about to sell insolvent's property subject to mortgages—Mortgages liable to be scaled down under Act—Application to Insolvency Court to direct Receiver to suspend sale till completion of scaling down process can be made — Sale by receiver in disobedience of direction can be set aside under S. 68, Provincial Insolvency Act.

Where the Official Receiver is about to sell the insolvent's properties subject to mortgages which mortgages were liable to be scaled down under the Act an application can be made to the Insolvency Court to give directions to the Official Receiver to suspend the sale until the scaling down process is completed; and if the Official Receiver holds the sale in disobedience to such directions, then it would be a ground under S. 68, Provincial Insolvency Act, for setting aside the sale. It would not be a case of the insolvent being aggrieved by the mere sale of the properties, but the insolvent being aggrieved by the act of the Official Receiver disregarding the directions of the Court obtained at the instance of the insolvent who is seeking the benefit of a special statutory procedure : ('26) 13 A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 556 (F.B.), Expl. [P 256*a*, b] Order. — This civil revision petition is preferred under S. 75, Provincial Insolvency Act, against the order of the District Judge reversing the decision of the Insolvency Court which declined to interfere under S. 68, Provincial Insolvency Act, with a sale held by the Official Receiver. The petitioner here was the purchaser from the Official Receiver of the equity of redemption of certain properties of the insolvent which were bound by three mortgages, one of which had been the subject of a decree for sale. The other two had not been sued on. The insolvency sale was held on 27th September 1938 and was subject to these mortgages. On 14th September 1938, the insolvent filed the petition in the Insolvency Court. According to an unofficial copy of the petition which has been placed before me, the insolvent impleaded therein a large number of creditors, but did not implead the Official Receiver and he asked under Ss. 21 and 7 of Act 4 of 1938 that he should be declared an agriculturist, that the debts due to the creditors should be scaled down or that the Official Receiver should be asked to prepare schedules according to the Act after scaling down the debts; and the petition recites that the Official Receiver has advertised the properties for sale on 27th September 1938, and that loss will be suffered by the insolvent if the properties were sold before the debts are scaled down. On 27th September, the actual date of the sale, the insolvent filed an application before the Official Receiver in which he alleged that he was an agriculturist entitled to relief, no dividend having yet been declared, and also recited the fact of the petition already filed in the Insolvency Court; and under S. 20 of Act 4 of 1938 he prayed the Official Receiver to stay the sale. The Official Receiver did not stay the sale. The properties were knocked down to the present petitioner. Thereupon the insolvent filed the petition under S. 68, Provincial Insolvency Act, to set aside the sale.

This petition was rejected by the Insolvency Court on the ground that the insolvent was not a person aggrieved by the sale in the light of the decisions and that he was not therefore entitled under S. 68 to question the act of the Official Receiver whereby the sale was completed. There was an appeal to the District Judge against this order and the District Judge reversed the decision of the trial Court holding that, although in an ordinary case the insolvent was according to the authorities not aggrieved by the sale held in the course of administration of his estate, the enactment of Act 4 of 1938 has made a substantial difference, seeing that it confers the right upon the insolvent to apply for the scaling down of his debt, and the learned Judge goes further and says that the insolvent is entitled under S. 20 of the Act to get the proceedings stayed. It seems to me quite clear that S. 20 of Act 4 of 1938 has no application to sales by Official Receivers and cannot be invoked in favour of a person who is not a judgment-debtor seeking to stay the execution of a decree. It seems to me also clear that though S. 21 of Act 4 of 1938 lays down no procedure for scaling down debts due by the insolvent, the procedure should, as far as may be, be analogous to that prescribed for the reduction of other debts. It is apparent, therefore, that, if there was a debt embodied in a decree, the Court which passed the decree would have to be moved under S. 19 to reduce the decree and the Court which executes the decree must be moved under S. 20 to stay execution of the decree in so far as the debts of the insolvent are covered by the decrees of a Court.

There was at the time of this sale no procedure prescribed by the rules. Subsequently, rules have been enacted giving to the Court having jurisdiction a power to entertain applications for declaration of the amount due on any debt as scaled down under the Act, even though no suit has been filed therein. But as things stood when this sale was held, I have little doubt that it would be within the power of the Insolvency Court to entertain an application under S. 21 for the scaling down of those debts not covered by the decrees or suits in other Courts, and that with reference to those debts the Insolvency Court would be empowered to apply the principles of the Act and direct the Official Receiver to revise or frame the schedule in accordance with the result. One thing seems to be abundantly clear and that is that any proceedings under S. 21 of Act 4 of 1938 should not be taken behind the back of the Official Receiver by the insolvent himself. As the status of the insolvent has necessarily to be established before any relief can be obtained, it seems to me desirable that both the Official Receiver and the insolvent should be made parties to any application under this section. If an application is properly presented to the Insolvency

Court it would no doubt be within the competence of the Insolvency Court to give directions to the Official Receiver regarding the staying of realisation of assets where such realisation is legally to be effected by the scaling down process. Thus, if the Official Receiver was about to sell properties subject to mortgages which mortgages were liable to be scaled down, an application might be made to the Insolvency Court to give directions to the Official Receiver to suspend the sale until the scaling down process is completed; and, if the Official Receiver held the sale in disobedience to such directions, then, presumably, it would be a ground under S. 68 for setting aside the sale. I doubt whether the decision of the Full Bench in 49 Mad. 461[1] would necessarily stand in the way of a petition by the insolvent in such special circumstances. It would not be a case of the insolvent being aggrieved by the mere sale of the properties, but the insolvent being aggrieved by the act of the Official Receiver disregarding the directions of the Court obtained at the instance of the insolvent who is seeking the benefit of a special statutory procedure.

In the present case the procedure of the insolvent seems to have been wrong throughout. The mortgages to which the properties were subject were not all in the same position. The first mortgage was decreed. The Court which passed that decree might properly be moved under S. 19 to scale down the debt on proof that the insolvent, had he not been an insolvent, would have been entitled to the benefits of the Act. The other two mortgages had not been decreed. It is doubtful whether the Insolvency Court would have jurisdiction to scale down those secured debts and it might be argued that R. 2 of the rules framed under the Act cannot override the general law of mortgages, a matter on which I express no opinion. As to the rest of the debts, the question whether the Insolvency Court could or could not deal with them depends upon the nature of each debt, whether it was decreed or was the subject of a pending suit and if so, in what Court. It seems to me clear that the petition filed by the insolvent before the Insolvency Court to scale down all the debts, apparently including these mortgage debts, could not be maintained.

Moreover, the application to the Official Receiver under S. 20 praying for the stay of sale was clearly incompetent. An application might possibly have been made to the Official Receiver to move on behalf of the insolvent in the proper Court for the scaling down of those debts which could not be scaled down in the Insolvency Court and to move the Insolvency Court for the reduction of those debts which were within the competence of the Insolvency Court and in that application the Official Receiver might have been asked to obtain the directions of the Insolvency Court to suspend the sale pending the decision of the amount due. But it certainly does not follow from the mere fact that an insolvent's estate may claim the benefit of S. 21, that all administration of the estate must stop until there has been an adjudication on the claims nor does it necessarily follow because there is a sale being held subject to mortgages and the insolvent estate may have a right to get those mortgage debts scaled down, that the sale must necessarily await the scaling down process. It might be desirable to sell the properties subject to the mortgages, the purchaser taking a chance of the burden being reduced as a result of the scaling down process. However that may be, it seems to me clear that on the procedure adopted by the insolvent in this case there was nothing to prevent the Official Receiver from going on with the sale and that, though the sale was held by the Official Receiver with the knowledge that the insolvent had made a move in the matter of an application under S. 21 of Act 4 of 1938 it cannot be said that the Official Receiver acted illegally or irregularly in going on with the sale notwithstanding that knowledge. In this view I allow the civil revision petition with costs throughout and restore the order of the Insolvency Court.

Second Appeal No. 53 of 1939, Decided on 9th September 1941, against decree of Dist. Court, Chittoor, in A. S. No. 163 of 1937.

(a) Madras District Municipalities Act (5 of 1920), S. 3 (3) — Compound-wall more than eight feet high is building by itself within S. 3 (3) — But compound-wall less than eight feet high is not — Detached wall (not compound-wall less than eight feet high) is building within S. 3 (3).

Under S. 3 (3) "building" includes a wall other than a boundary wall which is less than eight feet in height. So, a compound wall which is more than eight feet in height is a building by itself within S. 3 (3) though there may be no building inside but a compound wall less than eight feet in height is not a building by itself under S. 3 (3). A detached wall (which is not a compound wall less than eight feet high) would be a building under S. 3 (3). [P 257*g* ; P 258*e*]

(b) Madras District Municipalities Act (5 of 1920), S. 82 (2) Proviso—Compound wall is part of building — Cost of constructing compound wall must be considered in valuing building under S. 82 (2) Proviso.

Compound walls are part of the building and the cost of constructing the compound walls therefore should also be taken into consideration in valuing a building under S. 82 (2) Proviso : 12 C.L.J. 476 and 8 C.W.N. 487, Expl.; 12 C.L.J. 525, Ref. [P 258*e*]

V. Govindarajachari — for Appellant.

N. Gopala Menon and C. S. Govindaswami — for Respondent.

Judgment.—The respondent, the Municipal Council of Tirupati, assessed the electric power house owned by the appellant. This building is not ordinarily let, and hence the respondent proceeded to fix the annual value under the proviso to S. 82, cl. (2), District Municipalities Act. Under this proviso, the annual value of the premises shall be deemed to be 6 per cent. of the total of the estimated value of the land and the estimated present cost of erecting the building less a deduction for depreciation. In fixing the "estimated present costs of erecting the building" the respondent took the costs of constructing the compound walls as well. This is objected by the appellant on the ground that the compound walls are not included in the word "building" in S. 82 of the Act and that "A compound wall" is not a building by itself as defined in S. 3, cl. (3) of the Act. Section 82 runs thus:

> Every building shall be assessed together with its site and other adjacent premises occupied as an appurtenance thereto unless the owner of the building is a different person from the owner of such site or premises.
> (2) The annual value of lands and buildings shall be deemed to be the gross annual rent at which they may reasonably be expected to let from month to month or from year to year less a deduction, (in the case of buildings only) of ten percentum of such annual rent and the said deduction shall be in lieu of all allowance for repairs or on any other account whatsoever: Provided that (a) in the case of (i) any Government or railway building or (ii) any building of a class not ordinarily let the gross annual rent of which cannot, in the opinion of the Chairman be estimated, the annual value of the premises shall be deemed to be 6 per cent. of the total of the estimated value of the land and the estimated present cost of erecting the building after deducting for depreciation a reasonable amount which shall in no case be less than 10 percentum of such cost; (b) machinery (and furniture) shall be excluded from valuations under this section.

It is urged that in cl. (1) of S. 82 the word "building" is used so as to exclude even the site on which it stands and also the adjacent premises occupied as appurtenances thereto. The argument is that unless the expression "compound wall" comes within the words "other adjacent premises occupied as an appurtenance thereto;" its value cannot be taken into consideration and that compound walls cannot be called adjacent premises. But in S. 82, cl. (1) the Legislature is laying down a rule of single assessment for the building, site, and the adjacent premises, unless the latter are owned by a different owner. Where for instance the superstructure is owned by one and the land by another, the building proper alone should be valued and the owner of the building assessed. The site and the adjacent premises will be valued under other provisions and the owner thereof assessed in respect of them. In all other cases, the building, the site and the adjacent premises form a single unit of taxation. The word "building" is defined by S. 3, cl. (3) as including > a house, outhouse, stable, latrine, shed, hut, wall (other than a boundary wall not exceeding eight feet in height) and any other such structure . . .

Under this definition, "building" includes a wall other than a boundary wall which is less than eight feet in height. So, a compound wall which is more than eight feet in height is a building by itself though there may be no building inside. The present compound wall is less than eight feet in height. Therefore, it is not a building by itself under S. 3, cl. (3). But the question for decision is whether in valuing a building under S. 82, cl. (2) proviso, the respondent can include the money spent on the compound walls which are less than eight feet in height and not whether the compound walls constitute a building by themselves even though there is no structure inside. I do not see why the compound walls should not be considered part of the building. A parapet wall is certainly included in the word "building". Why the money spent on compound walls should be excluded from the valuation of "building" it is difficult to see. Existence of compound walls certainly enhances the letting value of the building in cases of buildings which are ordinarily let. The decision of the Calcutta High Court in 12 C.L.J. 476[1] which is relied on by the appellant deals with a case of compound walls with no building inside;

1. ('10) 12 C.L.J. 476 : 7 I.C. 890 : 15 C.W.N. 84, Corporation of Calcutta v. Benoy Krishna Bose.

and these walls were sought to be assessed. That decision does not throw any light on the present question. Another decision of the Calcutta High Court relied upon is that in 8 C.W.N. 487.[2] The question was whether a detached wall built of masonry is not a "masonry building" as defined by S. 3, cl. (25) of Bengal Act, 3 of 1899. The term "building" was not defined in the then Calcutta Act but the term "masonry building" was defined as "any building other than a hut". The Judges held that the term "building" does not include a wall, i.e., that a detached wall is not a building. They took care to say this on page 488:

> We think the latter view is correct and that 'building' in the Act does not include 'wall'. The wall in question is a detached wall and cannot be said to form part of any building and it must be understood that the opinion we express in this judgment is confined to a detached wall such as we understand that to be to which this case refers.

I have underlined (here italicized) the above wording. It must be noticed that there was no building at all inside the wall or walls. This decision appears to be against the appellant. Compound walls cannot be said not to form part of the building. A compound wall is part of the building and is not a detached wall. If the building is one which is ordinarily let, the gross annual rent at which the building may reasonably be expected to let less a deduction of 10 per cent. for repairs is the annual value. If such a building has compound walls, the letting value is certainly higher than that of a building with no compound walls. There is no reason why if in the case of buildings ordinarily let, the compound walls are taken into consideration, they ought to be left out in the case of buildings which are not ordinarily let. Both the advocates rely on the way in which the word "building" or "house" is explained in different decisions. I do not consider that any useful purpose is served by adverting to these cases. Each case depends on the particular statute in which the word occurred. Thus, in 7 I.C. 436[3] the question was what all are comprised in the term "house" in the Partition Act. Compound walls would according to this decision be part of the "house". The compound walls of a house or building would certainly pass to the purchaser when the building is sold unless they are reserved.

No doubt whatever is built should not be taken to be a building by itself—a detached wall for instance. But even there, the particular statute may define a building so as to include a mere wall. Under the Madras District Municipalities Act, S. 3, cl. (3), it is conceded that a detached wall (which is not a compound wall less than eight feet high) would be a building. Having regard to the purpose and intendment of the Act and of the proviso to cl. (2) of S. 82, I hold that the compound walls are part of the building and the cost of constructing the compound walls should also be taken into consideration. The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. No leave.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 45 of 1940, Decided on 24th October 1941, against judgment and decree of Wadsworth J., in S. A. No. 542 of 1937, D/- 23rd July 1940.

Custom—Irrigation rights — Lands irrigated by water from tank—Defendant's lands remaining submerged for weeks during rains under water spread from tank — Defendant constructing bunds to prevent submersion—Erection of bunds interfering with customary supply of water to lands of plaintiff and other ryots in ayacut — Plaintiff held entitled to injunction — Principles of English common law held inapplicable.

The parties to the dispute were ryots cultivating lands in the neighbourhood of a tank. From time immemorial the lands cultivated by the defendants had been submerged for several weeks in the year after the tank had filled as the result of the rains. The withdrawal of water from the tank for the purpose of the cultivation of the lands falling within the ayacut and cultivated by the plaintiffs caused the water to recede gradually from the defendants' lands and when this had happened they were fit for cultivation. The defendants and their predecessors had accepted tenancies of these lands knowing that they would be completely submerged for part of the year. The defendants erected bunds to prevent the submersion. This caused some of the water in the tank to escape over the weir and lessened the supply which the plaintiffs in the ayacut were accustomed to receive. The plaintiffs claimed that they were entitled by prescription and custom to prevent the defendants interfering with the spread of the water in the tank:

Held that (1) the principles of English common law could not be applied in India to questions affecting the rights of ryots to their customary supply of water for the purpose of cultivation the conditions in England being entirely different, the law on such matters being determined in India by custom and

(2) the action of the defendants in reality amounted to interference with the bed of the tank because their lands for several weeks in the year formed part of the bed of the tank and since as the result of the construction of the tank generations ago the plaintiffs and other ryots of the ayacut had become entitled to have their lands irrigated from it anyone who interfered with their customary supply was interfering with rights recognized by law and therefore was subject to the injunction of the Court and the plea that the defendants were merely protecting their own property could not be accepted: 7 M. Advocate General and K. R. Rama Ayyar — for Respondents.

Leach C. J. — The parties to this appeal are ryots cultivating lands in the neighbourhood of Kadamba tank in the Tinnevelly District. The tank which is a large one is fed from a river through a channel flowing into the tank at its northern extremity. A bund running from north to south causes the water to spread during the monsoon season to a line beyond the boundaries of the lands cultivated by the appellants. It is admitted that from time immemorial these lands have been submerged for several weeks in the year after the tank has filled as the result of the rains. The withdrawal of water from the tank for the purpose of the cultivation of the lands falling within the ayacut causes the water to recede gradually from the appellants' lands and when this has happened they are fit for cultivation. The appellants and their predecessors have accepted tenancies of these lands knowing that they would be completely submerged for part of the year. In 1898 the appellants' predecessors erected bunds to prevent the submersion. This caused some of the water in the tank to escape over the weir and lessened the supply which the ryots in the ayacut were accustomed to receive. They naturally objected to the erection of these bunds and as the result of their objection the revenue authorities caused them to be demolished. Notwithstanding the action of the revenue authorities similar bunds were erected in 1899, 1904, 1907 and 1924. Except in the year 1924 the revenue authorities stepped in immediately and caused the protective earthworks to be demolished. In 1924 however, the revenue authorities refused to interfere as they considered that the bunds erected by the appellants were merely field ridges and the loss of water was inconsiderable. The question was not finally decided until 29th March 1927 when the Board of Revenue agreed with the Subordinate Revenue Officers that no substantial loss had been suffered by the ryots in the ayacut as the result of the erection of the bunds. The Board's order caused respondents 1 to 4 who are ryots cultivating lands within the ayacut to file the suit out of which this appeal arises. There are concurrent findings of the Courts below that the bunds are more than field ridges and that the respondents have in consequence suffered material diminution in their customary supply of water. It is now clear that the Board was misinformed.

The suit was filed in the Court of the District Munsif of Srivaikuntam. The plaintiffs claimed that they were entitled by prescription and custom to prevent the appellants interfering with the spread of the water in the tank. The District Munsif found against the plaintiffs and dismissed the suit. On appeal the Subordinate Judge held that the District Munsif was wrong and issued a mandatory injunction requiring the appellants to remove the bunds which they had erected. The appellants then appealed to this Court. The appeal was heard by Wadsworth J. who agreed with the Subordinate Judge, but gave a certificate which has permitted the present appeal to be filed under Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. Much has been said in the course of the litigation with regard to rights which are recognized by the English Common Law, and in this Court the learned advocate for the appellants has contended that an owner of land has always the right under the common law of England to prevent his land being submerged. Assuming this to be so, it is, however, manifest that principles which can be applied in England are not always applicable here. The conditions in England are very different from the conditions in this country and the Court must have regard to the principles which have been applied in India when questions have arisen affecting the rights of ryots to their customary supply of water for the purpose of cultivation. In many parts of the Madras Presidency the storage of water in tanks is essential if crops are to be raised, and agriculture provides the means of livelihood for the vast majority of the population. The application of English rules of law was fully discussed by Wallace J. in 36 M. L. W. 408,[1] where he stated that the whole system of tank irrigation and the rights of ryots to water for irrigation has no counterpart in a England and had no place in the English Common Law, the law on such matters being determined in India by custom and customary right. He pointed out that it would generally be found that the system is so self-contained that any attempt to alter it on behalf of an individual who may have a private grievance is almost certain to react to the detriment of the ryots as a body. He also drew attention to the fact that submersion of lands on the foreshore of a tank when it is full is no uncommon occurrence and is a feature of the recognized irrigation system. With these remarks we find ourb selves in full agreement.

It cannot be denied that if the appellants are allowed to prevent the Kadamba tank reaching its full capacity during the rains the plaintiffs and other ryots in the ayacut will suffer because the water which would otherwise spread over the appellants' lands will be forced over the weir and lost so far as the ayacut is concerned. The action of the appellants in reality amounts to interference with the bed of the tank because their lands for several weeks in the year form part of the bed of the tank. As the result of the construction of this tank generations ago the c ryots of the ayacut have become entitled to have their lands irrigated from it and anyone who interferes with their customary supply is interfering with rights recognized by law and therefore is subject to the injunction of the Court. The action of the appellants in erecting these bunds has resulted in a material loss of water to which the ryot respondents are entitled. That is the overriding factor and the plea that the appellants are merely protecting their own property cannot be accepted. The appellants agreed to become tenants of these lands possessing full knowledge that for part of the year they would be submerged and they d have no real grievance quite apart from the principles which govern the case. In the course of the arguments, the learned advocate for the appellants laid great stress on 7 M. H. C. R. 37,[2] but when the judgment in that case is fully understood it will be seen that it does not help the appellants in any way. There a tank used for the irrigation of the lands of the plaintiffs obtained part of its water from rain falling on the lands of certain of the defendants. The bund of the tank threw back the waters flowing into it on to the lands of these defendants and remained there until the water in the tank e fell sufficiently to allow it to drain off. These defendants, through the agency of the Government, constructed a channel which prevented the water over-flowing their lands, but conducted it back to the tank without loss to the plaintiffs, who, however, claimed to have the former state of affairs restored on the ground that they had a prescriptive right to throw back the water on to the defendants' lands and to keep it there until required for use. This contention was rejected. In the course of the judgment it was said that water not running in a defined stream is the absolute property of the owner of the land of which it forms part, and before it f has reached a defined stream he may drain it off or put it to what purpose he pleases, the decisions in (1856) 25 L. J. Ex. 33[3] and (1856) 25 L. J. Ex. 115,[4] being referred to. That may perhaps have been the right principle to apply in that case as the construction of the channel did not cause interference with the rights of others, but here there is interference with the rights of others and the principle there relied on is inapplicable.

Inasmuch as the appellants by their action have interfered with the rights of the plaintiff-respondents we hold that the plaintiff-respondents are entitled to reliefs granted, g which means that the appeal fails. Consequently, it will be dismissed with two sets of costs, one set to be paid to the plaintiff-respondents and one set to the Secretary of State who has been made a party to the suit and has opposed the appeal.

Appeal No. 157 of 1939, Decided on 26th September 1941, against appellate order of Sub-Judge, Trichinopoly, D/- 14th November 1938.

 (a) Hindu law—Debts—Creditor succeeding as heir to debtor—Effect — Principle of retainer applies whether heir is limited owner or absolute owner.

Under the Hindu law, when a person dies, his property vests in his heir subject to the obligation of paying the debts of the deceased. Where the heir happens to be a creditor of the deceased, there is nothing in Hindu law which says that the moment the heir succeeds to his debtor, he forgoes his debt. The principle of retainer applies and the heir may retain out of the assets which he has got in his possession, the amount of the claim for which he cannot sue. So much of the property as is available in his hands must be deemed to have been appropriated by him and only the net balance of the estate must be deemed to have vested in him. So that if any other creditor brings a claim for his debt he will be entitled to assert the right of retainer and plead that the creditor can only claim payment from and out of the balance of the assets in his hands after deduction of his debt. The fact that the heir is a limited owner would not make any difference in the application of this principle : English and Indian case law referred. [P 262*b*; P 264*b*,g,h; P 265*a*]

* (b) Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 73, 47 — Creditor who had attachment before judgment obtaining decree and succeeding debtor as heir — Decree obtained by another creditor against such heir as representative of debtor and property in his hands sold in execution — Whether heir is entitled to claim rateable distribution in sale proceeds explained.

A who had obtained an attachment before judgment got a decree against B and subsequently on death of B succeeded to him as his heir. C, another creditor of B, obtained a decree against A as heir and legal representative of B and in execution sold a property belonging to B. A who had also put in an application for execution applied for rateable distribution in the sale proceeds :

Held that though A's execution application was still pending, no order could issue thereon because he could not have execution against himself. The ground on which execution is denied is that A being the same hand to receive and to pay, the debt due to him must be deemed to have been paid from and out of the assets in his hands and therefore it must be deemed to have been satisfied. The question whether the decree has been satisfied is one which should be gone into. If B had left assets other than the property which was sold sufficient to satisfy A's decree debt, A's claim must be disallowed. But if the only asset that he left was the property which was sold, so much of the property that would be necessary to satisfy A's debt must be deemed to have been appropriated for his debt and only the balance will be available for payment to C. And though S. 73 might not apply because the decree must be held to have been satisfied and therefore execution could not issue, still A was entitled to urge his claim under S. 47, being a party to the decree and prevent C from appropriating the whole of the sale proceeds for satisfaction of his debt. Since A had chosen only to ask for a rateable distribution, his claim to that limited extent was perfectly justified. But before a rateable distribution could be ordered, an enquiry must be held as to whether B left any other estate besides the property that had been sold, so that if it be found that there were other assets of the judgment-debtor which would cover the value of A's debt, to the extent it must be deemed to be satisfied and only for the balance he could claim rateable distribution; if there were no other assets of the judgment-debtor, he (A) must be allowed to participate in the sale proceeds along with C. Judgment. — This appeal raises a question of some difficulty. The question is whether the appellant is entitled to a rateable distribution by virtue of her being the holder of a decree in O. S. No. 334 of 1934 on the file of the District Munsif of Thuraiyur against one Ramaswami Pillai from and out of the sale proceeds of property realised in execution of a decree in S. C. S. No. 340 of 1936 on the file of the said Court. The said Ramaswami Pillai was the brother of the appellant. The decree in O. S. No. 334 of 1934 was obtained by the appellant against the said Ramaswami Pillai who died subsequent to the decree, and the appellant became his heir and representative. The decree in S. C. S. No. 340 of 1936 was obtained by the respondent against the appellant as the heir and representative of the said Ramaswami Pillai in respect of a debt due by him. The respondent in execution of his decree attached the immovable property belonging to Ramaswami Pillai. The property was sold and the sale proceeds were deposited into Court. The appellant as the decree-holder in O. S. No. 334 of 1934 applied for rateable distribution. From the affidavit filed by her, it appears that she obtained an attachment before judgment of the said property in her suit and the said attachment was subsisting on the date of sale. The attachment must, therefore, have been obtained during the lifetime of Ramaswami and after the decree it would enure to her benefit under O. 38, R. 11, Civil P. C. She has stated in her affidavit that she filed an execution petition and the same was pending on the date of her application for rateable distribution. The learned District Munsif allowed rateable distribution to her; but his order was reversed by the learned Subordinate Judge of Trichinopoly. In the course of the order the learned Subordinate Judge observes thus :

As soon as Ramaswami Pillai died, the petitioner respondent (the appellant) became his heir and legal representative. In other words, in the decree which the petitioner respondent obtained against Ramaswami Pillai she became both the judgment-creditor and the judgment-debtor. The result is, I think, a total merger. . . . . That merger, I think, has taken place as soon as Ramaswami Pillai died and he died long before the petitioner respondent filed the petition E. A. No. 404 of 1937 from which this appeal arose. So on the date that petition was filed petitioner's decree was not in existence as it has become merged long before that date and thereby ceased to exist. . . . . So it follows that she was not entitled to apply for rateable share.

This appeal is against the said decision and the question is whether the view of the learned Subordinate Judge is tenable. Mr. Ramanatha Iyer on behalf of the appellant contends that the doctrine of merger on which the lower appellate Court relied is not applicable because the appellant, when she succeeded to the estate of Ramaswami Pillai as his heir, took only a limited interest analogous to that of a widow's interest under the Hindu law and further, the doctrine of merger should not be allowed to operate when there are also other creditors of the deceased besides the appellant. Mr. K. V. Sesha Ayyangar on behalf of the respondent contends that where a debtor and creditor happen to be the same person, the doctrine of merger will operate and the only remedy of the creditor who succeeds as heir to the debtor, if at all, is to file a suit for administration and get her rateable share of the debt and the remedy by way of rateable distribution is not open to her because the decree by reason of the merger was no longer executable. In order to test the soundness of these contentions it is necessary to examine the legal effect of a creditor succeeding as heir to his debtor under the Hindu law by which the parties are governed. Under the Hindu law when a person dies, his property vests in his heir, irrespective of his will. But the heir takes the property subject to the obligation of paying the debts of the deceased. Dealing with the right of an heir under the Mahomedan law their Lordships of the Privy Council in A.I.R. 1938 P.C. 169[1] at p. 173 remarked thus :

> That the right of an heir under the Mahomedan law is a share in the estate after debts and valid legacies have been provided for is undeniable . . . . But in providing that the heir takes a share in the nett estate after deduction of the debts of the deceased, the Mahomedan law is in line with other laws including the Hindu law.

(The italics are mine). Therefore the debt due to an heir is also one of the debts which will have to be deducted in finding out the net residue taken by an heir. Can it therefore be said that when a Hindu heir to whom the deceased was indebted succeeds to his property only the net balance after deduction of such a debt is taken by the heir ? Spencer J. seems to think that only the net balance would vest in him : vide the observations in 44 M.L.J. 171[2] at p. 174. In English law where the creditor of the deceased happens to be his executor, what is known as the principle of retainer is applied. What is 'retainer' is thus explained by Cotton L. J. in (1886) 30 Ch. D. 15[3] at p. 19 :

> What is retainer ? It is this, that an executor having a claim against the testator's estate is not to be put in a worse position than any other creditor, who by suing and obtaining a judgement against the executor could obtain priority, while the executor not being able to sue himself could not obtain priority. The right of retainer applies to that which the executor has in his hands, or which has been paid into Court while he was executor, and which but for that payment would have come into his hands. The word 'retainer' speaks for itself. When the personal representative is also a creditor of the estate he may retain out of the assets which he has got in his possession, the amount of the claim for which he cannot sue, and when money has been paid into Court during the life of the executor, the Court does not withdraw from the executor his right in respect of that money. The Court treats that payment into Court as in effect a payment into the executor's own hands.

In (1890) 44 Ch.D. 262[4] at p. 272 Lindley L. J. stated the origin of the principle thus :

> A man cannot sue himself, and out of that the law developed the right of an executor to retain a debt due to him from the testator.

He further explained it in (1899) 2 Q.B. 347[5] at p. 352 thus :

> The older common law authorities go far to shew that if an executor was a creditor of his deceased testator and had assets in his hands sufficient to pay his debt such debt was treated as extinguished. Sufficient assets to pay his own debt and properly applicable thereto being in the executor's hands, such assets were treated without more as applied by him to such payment. Blackstone says so distinctly. His words are 'so much as is sufficient to answer his own demand is, by operation of law, applied to that particular purpose.' Plowden goes further, and says that the property in the assets is changed.

On this principle it has been held that if the assets in his hands were insufficient to pay his debt he is entitled to retain the whole of it in satisfaction of his debt. In English law it is also well settled that an executor can assert the right of retainer until distribution of the estate; it is not lost even by a decree for the administration of assets (1 Sm. and Giff. 415) and Lindley L. J. in (1899) 2 Q.B. 347[5] at p. 353 points out when a right can be asserted by the executor and when it is lost :

> It is quite plain from these authorities that the executor's right to retain assets in his hands was, as against him, treated as enforced as soon as he could properly enforce it. It would be very strange if it were held that he had lost his right because he had done nothing to assert it before there was any occasion to do so. It is only when some one seeks to take assets out of the executor's possession that it becomes necessary for him to assert his right of retainer; and, if he asserts it then his right must be protected, unless, of course, he has released it or done something to deprive himself of it.

What happened in that case was, the executrix after collecting a sum of £1100 paid the amount to the trustee in bankruptcy. The testator was indebted to her in the sum of £600. It was held that only the balance of £1100 less the sum of £600 vested in the trustee in bankruptcy and she was entitled to be paid the £600. The same principle was applied before the Land Transfer Act to the case of an heir to whom the testator owed a specialty debt, the foundation of the rule being that he cannot sue himself: vide the observations of Cotton L. J. in (1885) 27 Ch. D. 478[6] at p. 481. The question is how far these principles can be applied to Hindu law and whether there is anything in that law which precludes the application of those principles. In a very early case in 5 ALL. 27[7] a question arose as to the legal effect of one of several joint judgment-debtors acquiring only a partial interest in the decree by right of inheritance. It was there held that the effect was not to extinguish the judgment debt in its entirety which could only happen if he acquired the whole debt but so much only as the judgment-debtor had acquired. Mahmood J. in the course of the judgment remarked thus :

> We are prepared to hold that, when on account of death a creditor becomes heir to a debtor or a debtor becomes heir to a creditor, and thus the two opposite characters of debtor and creditor become united in the same person, the obligation to pay money may be regarded as extinguished. But this rule, even though applied in its full scope to judgment-creditors and judgment-debtors, falls short of showing that when the debtor inherits the rights of only one of his judgment-creditors the effect is to extinguish the entire judgment-debt. The rule, no doubt, owes its origin to the confusion of the Roman law.

In 10 ALL. 570[8] the same learned Judge affirmed this principle. The principle of these decisions was followed in our High Court : vide 44 M. L. J. 171[2] and I. L. R. (1939) Mad. 73.[9] In 44 M. L. J. 171[2] the question arose thus. There was a decree for mesne profits in favour of the plaintiffs against defendant 1 in the suit out of which the appeal, with which the learned Judges were dealing, arose. Defendant 1 died subsequent to the decree and his mother defendant 2 succeeded to his property as his heir. Subsequently, defendant 2 surrendered the property to the plaintiffs. During the course of the litigation a person stood surety for the payment of the mesne profits and executed a surety bond. The question was whether the plaintiffs could recover the amount of the mesne profits from the surety. The learned Judges held that he could not on the ground that the plaintiffs having become the heirs of defendant 1 the debt must be deemed to have been paid out and extinguished and as the principal obligation became extinguished, the surety's obligation also became extinguished. Venkatasubba Rao J. in the course of the judgment made the following observations :

> The plaintiffs became the legal representatives of their debtor and they were, therefore, entitled to execute the decree against themselves to the extent of his property which had come to their hands and the plaintiffs must accordingly be deemed to have obtained satisfaction of their decree. The circumstance that the plaintiffs did not actually take out execution against themselves and recover the sum in execution is immaterial and I am, therefore, satisfied that the principal obligation was in this case extinguished.

Spencer J. observed thus :

> What they must be deemed to have got in succession by defendant 1's untimely death and his mother's release deed was the balance of his estate after wiping out his debt to them.

In I. L. R. (1939) Mad. 73,[9] Venkatasubba Rao J. had to deal with a case where a decree-holder became an heir of one of the judgment-debtors. After observing that O. 21, R. 16, Civil P. C., would not in terms apply, he remarked that the principle which that section would embody was that, > where the decree-holder's right and the judgment-debtor's liability became united in one and the same individual, it stands to reason that the decree should be treated as satisfied, but a distinction should be made between a partial and complete satisfaction and the decree must only be treated as satisfied pro tanto, that is, to the extent of his share. This was the view taken in the early Allahabad cases and also in the recent decision of that Court reported in 54 ALL. 448.[10] But in a case in 16 M. L. W. 678[11] Spencer J. took the view that where a creditor was a limited owner like a Hindu widow there would be no extinguishment. In that case one N died leaving a widow and a daughter. The widow succeeded to the estate of N and she was also a creditor of her husband. The widow died subsequently leaving a will by which a she assigned that debt to the plaintiff. The plaintiff brought a suit to recover the amount from the daughter who succeeded to the estate of her father after the widow's death. Held he was entitled. The ground on which the learned Judge put it was that the principle of English law of retainer which applies to executors would not apply to Hindu widows as such, that the question of merger was one of intention and that it was not for the advantage of a widow to pay off her stridhanam debt out of the income of her husband's estate as she was entitled to enjoy the whole of the income of the estate.

This principle of retainer could not be b considered to be a peculiarity of English law. It is founded on a general principle of jurisprudence, namely, where it is the same hand that has to receive and pay, he cannot sue himself and the law must infer satisfaction of the debt on the ground that the debt must be deemed to have been paid from and out of the assets in the hands of the representative whether he be the executor or heir. The fact that the heir is a limited owner would not make any difference in the application of the principle. The principle is founded on common justice. In (1932) A.C. 365[12] at p. 370 Lord Atkin refers to the case of Woodward c v. Darcy[13] for the reason underlying this principle and states thus :

> The reason for it is to be found in the report in Plowden of the opinions of the Judges of both the King's Bench and the Common pleas in Woodward v. Darcy[13] given in 1547 after discussion in several previous terms. The explanation is that without the right the executor would be bound to pay the other debts of the testator and to leave the testator's debt to himself unpaid.

In (1547) 75 E. R. at p. 284[13] the scope of the principle is thus explained in a passage which in spite of its length I shall quote as it is informing and instructive :

> If the execution of the administration should extinguish the debt, this would be derogatory to testaments, and to the souls of testators. To testa- d ments for that executors would refuse rather than lose their debts and without an executor a will is null and void; and to the souls of testators, for that if the executor takes upon him the administration which is an act of charity, then thereby the just debt due from the testator to the executor, would remain for ever unpaid, which would be dangerous for the soul of the testator. So that such a law would induce a man to omit charity and friendship, or if he did execute it, he would be ungratefully required with the loss of a just debt due to him, and would be forced to pay all the other debts of the testator, and to leave the testator's debt due to himself unpaid. But our law is not so unreasonable or uncharitable for the executor may retain assets e to pay himself, notwithstanding he may not bring an action to recover it for true it is that the action is gone by the act of administration. . . . . But the reason why the action is lost for ever is, because in judgment of law he is satisfied before, for, if the executor has as much goods in his hands as his own debt amounts to, the property of those goods is altered and vested in himself, that is, he has them as his own proper goods in satisfaction of his debt, and not as executor. So that there is a transmutation of property, by the operation of law, without suit and execution, for, inasmuch as Windham here could not have an action against himself as executor, nor have execution against himself as executor, the operation of the law is equivalent to a recovery and execution for him, and the property is as strongly altered as it could be by recovery and execution. So that the reason why the action is f gone is, because, he has full satisfaction by the alteration of the property. And although the debt was a chose in action, yet it is not so in him as executor, for his action is totally gone for the reason aforesaid, in which respect the chose in action has become converted into a chose in possession and a satisfaction executed. Wherefore Windham might well retain goods to satisfy his own debt.

No doubt, Wright J. in (1898) 1 Q.B. 282[14] doubted whether it was the law that the property in the assets was absolutely altered without something showing assent or appropriation by the executor. Lindley L. J. seemed to approve of it and Lord Atkin in referring to Woodward v. Darcy[13] did not express any doubt about it. Whether in the g case of a creditor executor the principle of alteration of property should be held to be applicable or not, I do not see why it should not be applied to the case of a property vesting in an heir. However, the basis on which the debt is said to be extinguished is clear, that is, so much of the property as is available in his hands must be deemed to have been appropriated and only the net balance of the estate must be deemed to have vested in him. So that if any other creditor brings a claim for his debt he will be entitled to assert the right of retainer and plead the creditor can only claim payment from and h out of the balance of the assets in his hands after deduction of his debt. I do not see there is anything in the Hindu law which precludes the application of this principle. In fact this principle was applied in the Indian decisions referred to above.

In 49 ALL. 645[15] dealing with a case of a dower debt Ashworth J. expressed the view in which Mukerji J. concurred, that this principle would apply to India: vide the observations of Ashworth J. at pp. 650 and 651. As remarked in Woodward v. Darcy[13] it would be unreasonable and uncharitable that an heir should forego his debt and that the other creditors should be paid. So far as I am able to see, there is nothing in the Hindu law which says that the moment an heir succeeds to his debtor, he foregoes his debt. The appellant in this case is entitled to say that it is only the net balance of the sale proceeds of the house that will be available for the payment of the debt of the respondent if the suit property was the only property left by the deceased Ramaswami. But she claims rateable distribution. The question is can she claim it? In order that a decree-holder may claim rateable distribution the following requisites are necessary; (1) he must have made an application to the Court which holds the assets before their receipt for the execution of his decree; (2) it must be a decree for the payment of money; (3) it must be against the same judgment-debtor; and (4) he has not obtained satisfaction of it. In this case, she has applied for the execution of the decree before the receipt of the assets and it is pending. It is a decree for payment of money. Though her decree was obtained against Ramaswami and the decree of the respondent was obtained against her as the legal representative of Ramaswami, it must be held to be against the same judgment-debtor. In regard to the question of satisfaction, her case is that no satisfaction of the decree has been entered up and the decree must be deemed to be subsisting. The contention of Mr. Sesha Ayyangar is, though the execution application is still pending, no order can issue thereon because the appellant cannot have execution against herself. This again brings in the theory of satisfaction because the ground on which execution is denied is that she being the same hand to receive and to pay the debt due to her must be deemed to have been paid from and out of the assets in her hands and therefore it must be deemed to have been satisfied. As pointed out in William on Executors, this remedy arises from the mere operation of law (Vol. 1, Edn. 11, page 797).

In the language of the learned Judges in Woodward v. Darcy,[13] "the operation of the law is equivalent to a recovery and execution." The question whether the decree has been satisfied is one which has to be gone into. If Ramaswami had left assets other than the property which was sold sufficient to satisfy the decree debt of the appellant, her claim must be disallowed. But if the only asset that he left was the property which was sold, so much of the property that would be necessary to satisfy her debt must be deemed to have been appropriated for her debt and only the balance will be available for payment to the respondent. Though the contention of Mr. Sesha Ayyangar may be right in so far as S. 73 may not apply because the decree must be held to have been satisfied and therefore execution cannot issue, still she is entitled to urge her claim under S. 47, Civil P. C., and prevent the respondent from appropriating the whole of the sale proceeds for satisfaction of his debt. The fact that she has chosen to claim rateable distribution should not stand in the way of her getting this limited relief which she has claimed.

In this connexion I would like to refer to 26 Mad. 792[16] which appears to me to be a case in point. The facts in that case were as follows: A succeeded to the property of his mother B. C, a creditor of B, obtained a decree against A for the amount payable from and out of the assets of the mother in his hands. C then attached in execution of his decree certain jewels in the possession of A. A admitted liability of the jewels to attachment but claimed a lien on the sale proceeds of the jewels to the extent of Rs. 1562; Rs. 361 paid by him to redeem two of the jewels which had been pledged by the mother; Rs. 110 lent to the mother for remaking jewel No. 11; Rs. 1091 paid by him in discharge of debts contracted by the mother. The District Judge took the view that A's contention that the assets in his hands must be taken to be what was left after he had satisfied his own claims against the mother's estate was unsound, and he therefore disallowed the claim. On appeal Subramania Ayyar and Divis JJ. held that A was entitled to be paid out of the sale proceeds the sums which he proves he is entitled to. In regard to the debt owing to him they remarked thus:

> In regard to the Rs. 110 said to have been advanced to the mother in her lifetime, the appellant A has a right to pay himself out of the assets as he cannot sue himself.

(The italics are mine.) It will thus be seen that the learned Judges in that case applied the principle of retainer. They set aside the order of the District Judge and remanded the case for enquiry as to whether A in fact discharged the debt of the mother and if so, to what extent. Therefore, if the ratio decidendi of this case were to be applied to the present case, it follows that the appellant could have justly claimed that the amount payable to her under the decree should be paid first out of the sale proceeds and the balance only should be available for the respondent's decree. It was open to her to prefer this claim under S. 47, Civil P. C., being a party to the decree. Since she has chosen only to ask for a rateable distribution, her claim to this limited extent is perfectly justified. But before a rateable distribution can be ordered, an enquiry must be held as to whether Ramaswami left any other estate besides the property that has been sold, so that if it is found that there were other assets of the judgment-debtor which would cover the value of the appellant's debt to the extent it must be deemed to be satisfied and only for the balance she could claim rateable distribution, if there were no other assets of the judgment-debtor, she must be allowed to participate in the sale proceeds along with the respondent. I therefore set aside the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge and remand the petition of the appellant to the learned District Munsif of Thuraiyur for disposal in the light of the observations contained in this judgment. I direct each party to bear his or her costs throughout. Leave to appeal refused.

Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras — Respondent.

O. P. No. 8 of 1941, Decided on 25th Nov. 1941.

Income-tax Act (1922), Ss. 26 (2) and 23— Profits earned before year of account cannot be included in assessment.

The Income-tax Officer cannot include in the assessment profits, secret or otherwise, which have been earned before the year of account especially when no action has been taken under S. 34 of the Act with a view to collect tax on income which had escaped taxation. [P 267c,d]

K. Bhashyam Ayyangar and T. R. Srinivasan — for Petitioners.

K. V. Sesha Ayyangar — for Respondent.

Leach C. J. — The case for the Income-tax authorities set out in the reference by the Commissioner of Income-tax cannot be accepted. The facts are very simple. In the year 1936-37 one Muhammad Ibrahim was the agent of the Standard Oil Company in Trichinopoly. There were two agencies for the Burmah Shell Company in that district, one being conducted by Ramakrishna Chettiar and the other by G. Srinivasalu Naidu respectively. They had agencies in other places in South India and there was an agreement between them that Ramakrishna was to have the profits of the business done in the town of Trichinopoly. There was a further arrangement between Ibrahim and Ramakrishna. This was to the effect that they were to carry on business jointly without competition between themselves and to divide the profits made by them in the ratio of 48 : 52. The Income-tax Officer attempted to assess these three persons as a firm, but they objected and their objection prevailed. The consequence was that for that year they were assessed separately. Ramakrishna and Srinivasalu quarrelled in the course of that year and Ramakrishna filed a suit for the dissolution of his partnership with Srinivasalu. On 1st May 1938, Ibrahim and Srinivasalu commenced to trade jointly as a firm and on 7th February 1939 a formal deed of partnership was drawn up with effect from 1st May 1938. The firm was then registered under S. 26-A, Income-tax Act.

For the year 1938-39 the firm returned a loss of Rs. 7014 in respect of the year 1937-38. The firm was not, however, liable to assessment in respect of that year because it had not carried on business in the year of account. The Income-tax Officer appears to have treated the firm as being the successor to the businesses carried on by the two partners and Ramakrishna. The firm did not object to the course adopted by the Income-tax Officer, presumably because of the alleged loss in the year of account. The Income-tax Officer, however, refused to accept the figure of Rs. 7014. He added back certain sums which appeared in the books and had been carried forward from the books kept by Ibrahim. There were large sums entered in the suspense account in Ibrahim's books and the Income-tax Officer considered that these represented secret profits made when Ibrahim, Ramakrishna and Srinivasalu were carrying on business, not in partnership, but in conjunction with one another. These sums had received the attention of the Income-tax Officer when he was assessing Ibrahim in 1937-38. He considered the whole question then and came to the conclusion that Rupees 20,000 of the sums entered in the suspense account represented secret profits. He assessed Ibrahim accordingly.

When it came to assessing the firm of Ibrahim and Srinivasalu in 1938-39, the Income-tax Officer was not satisfied that the secret profits amounted only to Rs. 20,000 and he formed the opinion that Rs. 26,699 of the monies then appearing in the suspense account also represented secret profits. It was on this basis that he made his assessment. Objection was taken on the ground that the question of secret profits had been considered and decided in the previous year when Ibrahim was assessed and that the Income-tax Officer was not entitled to reopen the matter. This reference concerns the sum of Rs. 26,699. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner accepted the decision of the Income-tax Officer, as did the Commissioner who refused to state a case to this Court under S. 66 (2). Ibrahim and Srinivasalu then applied to this Court for an order directing the Commissioner to state a case under S. 66 (3). The Court directed that this should be done and framed the question as follows :

In including the sum of Rs. 26,699 in the amount of the taxable income for the year of assessment 1938-39 were the Income-tax authorities acting in accordance with law ?

It is obvious that the Income-tax authorities were not acting in accordance with law. Even assuming that there was justification for assessing the firm under S. 26 (2) the Income-tax Officer could not include in the assessment profits, secret or otherwise, which had been earned before the year of account and the sum of Rs. 26,699 had been earned before the year of account. This sum appeared in Ibrahim's books for the year 1936-37 and was included in the balance of the year 1937-38. It is true that the objection now stated was not taken by the assessees and that they were content to base their case on the fact that the secret profits question had been investigated and decided in the previous year. At the same time, the Income-tax authorities are not entitled to include in the assessment a sum of money which the law does not allow to be included. There was no action taken under S. 34 with a view to collect tax on income which had escaped taxation. The decision was merely to treat the Rs. 26,699 as profits earned by the firm in the year of account, which was certainly not the case. The question will be answered in the negative and the Commissioner will pay the assessees' costs, Rs. 250.

C.R.K./G.N. Order accordingly.

Advocate General — In support of Notice.

V. C. Gopalaratnam — for the Advocate.

Leach C. J.—The respondent is an advocate of this Court. Two charges of professional misconduct have been framed against him. These have been investigated by a tribunal constituted under the Bar Councils Act. The tribunal having considered the evidence drew up its report, but unfortunately one of the members, Mr. T. S. Venkatesa Iyer, died before the document was ready for signature. In these circumstances, the learned counsel for the respondent has taken a preliminary objection that the report is not one which this Court can consider, having been signed only by two members of the tribunal. He says that a new tribunal will have to be constituted and the case investigated de novo. Rule 7 of the rules relating to the procedure to be followed by tribunals or District Courts in cases referred to them for inquiry under the Bar Councils Act reads as follows :

(1) The tribunal or Court, having heard the evidence for the complainant and the respondent, shall report to the High Court its finding on each charge that has been framed, giving reasons for its finding.

(2) The findings of the tribunal, if unanimous, shall be signed by all the members of the tribunal. If the members of the tribunal differ in their findings or any of them, all the findings shall be reported to the High Court, being signed respectively by the members whose findings they are. The reasons for the findings shall be reported to the High Court in one report if the members of the tribunal are unanimous and in separate reports if their findings differ, provided that, whether their findings are unanimous or not, any member may record the reasons for his findings separately and the record so made shall be forwarded to the High Court with the other report or reports of the tribunal in the case.

The direction that all the members of the tribunal shall sign their findings is mandatory. Moreover, if a member of the tribunal dies before the report has been completed, that is, drawn up and signed, the tribunal ceases to be properly constituted. In these circumstances we cannot take into consideration the report before us and another tribunal will have to be constituted to investigate the charges.

Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras — Respondent.

O. P. No. 4 of 1941, Decided on 24th November 1941: reference by Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras.

Income-tax Act (1922), S. 16 (3) (a) (iii) — Assets of married Hindu lady — There is no presumption that they are transferred to her by her husband out of love—Under S. 16 (3) (a) (iii) assessee husband must prove source of those assets—Assessee admitting that some of monies in his wife's account came from him—No proof that some of them came from other sources—Income-tax authorities held justified in including interest on monies in his income.

In the case of the assets of a married Hindu lady, there is no presumption in law that those assets are transferred to her by her husband out of love or affection. Under S. 16 (3) (a) (iii), it is incumbent upon the assessee to show the source of the monies standing in the name of his wife. Where the assessee has admitted that some of the monies appearing in the account of his wife came from him and has made no efforts to prove that some of the sums have come from other sources, it is impossible for the assessee to contend that there is no material on the record from which the Income-tax Officer could lawfully treat the interest on the monies appearing in the name of the wife as representing interest on assets transferred by the assessee to his wife otherwise than for adequate consideration. [P 269*d*,e,f]

V. Ramaswami Ayyar—for Petitioner.

K. V. Sesha Ayyangar—for Respondent.

Leach C. J. — For the year 1939-40, the assessee returned an income of Rs. 1,604-0-6 which had been arrived at after taking into account an alleged loss of Rupees 176-10-6 in respect of his moneylending business. In arriving at the figure of Rs. 176-10-6 the assessee deducted two sums, Rs. 511-12-6 and Rs. 808-4-6, said to have been paid to his two wives, Srirangammal and Kaveri Ammal, respectively. The Income-tax Officer allowed a deduction in respect of the amount paid to Srirangammal, but refused to allow a deduction in respect of Rs. 808-4-6 paid to Kaveri Ammal, the senior wife. The assessee married Kaveri Ammal some years before 1922 when an account in her name was opened in the assessee's books. From time to time moneys were paid into this account and interest was allowed on the balance in her favour. Section 16 (3) (a) (iii) provides that in computing the total income of an individual for the purpose of assessment there shall be included so much of the income of a wife as arises directly or indirectly from assets transferred directly or indirectly to her by the husband, otherwise than for adequate consideration or in connexion with an agreement to live apart. This provision was inserted in S. 16, by the Income-tax Amendment Act, 1937. Up to the time the amendment was made the Income-tax authorities were content to treat the monies standing in Kaveri Ammal's account in the assessee's books as her own monies, but the amendment of the Act altered the position very materially. If these monies had been received by the wife from her husband otherwise than for adequate consideration, the interest earned thereon became for the purposes of the Income-tax Act part of the husband's income.

The Income-tax authorities gave the assessee an opportunity of proving that the monies were her own and had not come from him in a manner which would attract S. 16 (3) (a) (iii), but beyond stating that the monies represented his wife's stridhanam the assessee took no steps. Two of the sums appearing in the account admittedly represent gifts from him. When the case was before the Appellate Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax, the assessee stated that he had no evidence to prove that the monies in the account represented sums received from her parents and not monies set apart by the assessee in her name. As the Assistant Commissioner refused to interfere with the order of the Income-tax Officer, the assessee applied to the Commissioner to state a case to this Court on certain questions which he regarded as being questions of law.

On 10th May 1940 the Commissioner wrote to the assessee pointing out that neither the Income-tax Officer, nor the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, questioned the statement that he had given monies to his wife or that she had become the absolute owner of the monies so given but the reason for including interest thereon in the assessment made on him was that under the law as it stood the interest was to be treated as his income for the purpose of income-tax and reference was made to the amendment of S. 16 by the amending Act of 1937. The letter concluded :

> Your application for a reference to the High Court is presumably based on a misapprehension of the law on the subject. Will you please let me know whether in the light of the explanation now given you wish to press the application for a reference to the High Court.

In reply to this letter, the assessee wrote to the Commissioner on 24th May through his advocate taking up the position that gifts by a husband to his wife constitute the wife's stridhanam property and the income from such monies was not taxable. In the course of this letter, the assessee's advocate observed :

> According to my client's case, the amounts consisted of various gifts by the husband to the wife on the occasion of the marriage and on other auspicious occasions and also those given by the parents and other relations which were all invested with several inums and they were collected and realised and constituted into a single fund in the year 1922. Under the circumstances it is wholly ultra vires and illegal to disallow the deduction of interest this year contrary to what has been going on consistently and uniformly from 1922 onwards.

On 25th June the Commissioner wrote to the assessee's advocate with reference to his letter of 24th May. The Commissioner asked the assessee to produce such evidence as he could to prove that the amount not admitted to have been received by the assessee's wife from himself had actually been received from her parents or other relations as alleged. On 3rd July the assessee's advocate replied stating that the Commissioner would appreciate that on the construction placed by him on the section and its operation "the question now sought to be clarified by you by production of evidence does not arise." The assessee took no steps to adduce evidence in support of his contention that his wife had received some of the monies standing in her account in his books from her parents or other relations. Therefore the question which the Court is now called upon to decide is whether there are materials on the record on which the Income-tax Officer could lawfully treat the Rs. 808 as representing interest on assets transferred by the assessee to his wife otherwise than for adequate consideration.

The position is this. The assessee has admitted that some of the monies appearing in that account came from him and he has made no efforts to prove that some of the sums have come from other sources. In these circumstances it is impossible for the assessee to contend that there is no material on the record from which the Income-tax Officer could draw his conclusion. In fact, until the case came into this Court the assessee's contentions were based on a misconception of the law and it was only at the last moment that he raised the question which is now under reference. It follows that we are of the opinion that the question referred should be answered in the affirmative, but before concluding we consider it necessary to deal with a statement made by the Commissioner to the effect that the natural presumption in the case of the assets of a married Hindu lady is that they are transferred to her by her husband out of love or affection. We do not agree that there is any such presumption. It is not an uncommon thing for a husband to put money in the name of his wife without ever intending to give it to her. We do not suggest that any monies were put in the name of the assessee's wife with ulterior motive, but it was incumbent upon him to show their source and this he has not done apart from his admission that some of them represented gifts from him. As the assessee has failed he must pay the Commissioner's costs, Rs. 250.

HORWILL J.

In re Syed Murthuza Sahib —

Petitioner.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 323 and Petn. No. 307 of 1941, Decided on 3rd October 1941, to revise judgment of Joint Magistrate, Tindivanam, D/- 24th December 1940.

(a) Madras Local Board's Act (14 of 1920), Ss. 164 (1) and (2), 159 (1) and 160 (3) — Applicability of S. 164 (2) and S. 159 (1) — Word "occupies" in S. 164 — Meaning of—Lessee of small road-side site under S. 160 (3) constructing small shed — Lessee continuing in possession inspite of notice under S. 159 (1) to remove shed—Proper notice held should have been under S. 164 (2) and not S. 159 (1) — Lessee held liable under S. 164 (1) — Defect of notice held immaterial.

Section 159 (1) governs the extension or projection of a premises over or into a public road and not the erection of some structure independently of any existing premises. The very foundation for S. 159 (1) is the existence of premises which have been extended into a public road. Occupying a land within S. 164 means "being on the land" and therefore includes continuing in possession as well as entering into possession. [P 270*c*]

The lessee was granted a lease under S. 160 (3) for a period of one year to use a small road-side site to sell his wares, and in it he constructed a small shed. He did not quit the land at the end of the period of the lease and so a notice was sent to him, purporting to be one under S. 159 (1), requiring him to remove the shed and threatening that unless he removed the encroachment within a fortnight from the date of service of that notice further proceedings under the Act would be taken against him. He ignored the notice and therefore was charged with having committed an offence punishable under S. 159 (1) read with S. 207 (1) (a) and (c) and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 25 :

Held that notice should have gone to the lessee under S. 164 (2) and not under S. 159 (1), and that the lessee was liable under S. 164 (1) for having continued in possession after the expiry of his lease without the previous sanction of the Local Board:

[P 270*e*,f]

Held further that the defect in notice did not make any material difference, because the notice made it very clear what was required of the lessee. By disobeying the lawful notice of the president, even though it was labelled S. 159 (1) and not S. 164 (2), the lessee did commit an offence.

[P 271*a*]

(b) Madras Local Boards Act (14 of 1920), S. 160 (6)—S. 160 (6) does not deal with leases —Licence and lease—Distinction — S. 160 (6) does not create punishable offence.

Section 160 (6) deals with only licences and not leases. There is a great difference between a licence and a lease, a licence being merely a permission, whereas a lease conveys certain legal rights over the land to the lessee. While, however, S. 160 (6) gives the President of the Local Board the power to remove buildings and recover the costs for doing so from the owners, it does not create a punishable offence. [P 270*g*,h]

M. S. Venkatarama Iyer — for Petitioner.

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

Order. — The petitioner was granted a lease under S. 160 (3), Local Boards Act, for a period of one year to use a road-side site of 1 or 2 cents to sell his wares, and in it he constructed a small shed. He did not quit the land at the end of the period of the lease and so a notice was sent to him, purporting to be one under S. 159 (1), requiring him to remove the shed which was on the 1 or 2 cents in Survey No. 85/1 of the local fund road and threatening that unless he removed the encroachment within a fortnight from the date of service of that notice further proceedings under the Act would be taken against him. He ignored this notice; and so the present case was instituted against him. He has been charged with having committed an offence punishable under S. 159 (1), read with Ss. 207 (1) (a) and (c), Madras Local Boards Act. He was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 25 and his conviction and sentence were upheld on appeal by the joint Magistrate of Tindivanam. It is fairly clear that the petitioner did not contravene the provisions of S. 159 (1). Section 159 (1) permits the President of a Local Board to issue a notice to the owner or occupier of any premises to remove or alter any projection, encroachment, or obstruction situated against or in front of such premises . . . . This sub-section governs the extension or projection of a premises over or into a public road and not the erection of some structure independently of any existing premises. The very foundation for this sub-section is the existence of premises which have been extended into a public road. Notice should have gone to the petitioner under S. 164 (2) and not under S. 159 (1). Section 164 (1) makes liable for payment of a penalty any person who occupies any land set apart for any public purpose without the previous sanction of the Local Board. The petitioner entered into possession of this land with the sanction of the Local Board; but he however continued in possession without the sanction of the Local Board. It is argued that continuing in possession is not occupying. Occupying a land means "being on the land" and therefore includes continuing in possession as well as entering into possession. As the petitioner did not obtain the previous sanction of the Local Board to occupy that land during the period in question, he is liable to a penalty under S. 164 (1).

Section 164 (2) empowers the President to issue notice to such a person as is referred to in Sec. 164 (1). If a person occupying the land disregards the notice under S. 164 (2), then he becomes liable under Sec. 207 (1) (a) for contravening the provisions of one of the sections specified in the first column of Sch. 8. Schedule 8 makes express mention of Sec. 164 (2). It was argued by the learned Public Prosecutor that S. 160 (6) would also apply. I do not think it would. Sections 160 (1) and 160 (2) refer to licences and S. 160 (3) to a lease. Section 160 (6) mentions only licences and not leases. There is a great difference between a licence and a lease, a licence being merely a permission, whereas a lease conveys certain legal rights over the land to the lessee. While, however, S. 160 (6) gives the President of the Local Board the power to remove buildings and recover the costs for doing so from the owners, it does not create a punishable offence.

It is next argued for the petitioner that even though the petitioner was wrong in continuing in possession after the expiry of the lease, he did not commit a punishable offence by doing so, because the notice issued to him was a faulty one. What is punished, it is argued, is not the continuing in possession but the disobedience of a notice, and that if a notice is not a proper one then the disobedience of it cannot be an offence. It is true that the notice that was sent to the petitioner did not purport to be a notice under S. 164 (2), but one under S. 159 (1), but I do not think that this makes any material difference, because the notice made it very clear what was required of the petitioner. He was ordered to remove the shed which he had been permitted to put up under the licence that was previously granted to him and he knew that the president had power to order the removal of such shed and he knew that he was wrongfully in possession of that plot of land. By disobeying the lawful notice of the president, even though it was labelled S. 159 (1) and not S. 164 (2), the petitioner committed an offence. I therefore find no sufficient reason for interfering in revision. The petition is dismissed.

Vallur China Kondayya and others — Appellants

v.

Sidavarapu Ramalinga Reddi and others — Respondents.

Appeal No. 240 of 1939, Decided on 14th August 1941, against order of Dist. Court, Nellore, D/- 10th March 1939.

(a) Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), S. 23—Sale in execution of decree set aside under S. 23 —Purchaser is entitled to profits of land between date of his obtaining possession and re-delivery of land on cancellation of sale.

Where a sale held in execution of a decree is set aside at the instance of an agriculturist under S. 23 the purchaser whether he is a stranger or the decree-holder himself is entitled to the profits of the land between the date of his obtaining possession and the date of re-delivery of possession on the cancellation of the sale under S. 23. This view finds support from the fact that S. 24 of that Act which provides for the consequences of the setting aside of a sale under S. 23 is silent on the subject of interest and profits, the natural inference being that the purchaser gets back his money without interest and that he does not incur any liability for profits. There is no express provision in the Act that the judgment-debtor should be entitled to the profits on the land the sale of which is set aside nor can any such provision be read into the Act by necessary implication from its terms. When the sale which is set aside under S. 23 was perfectly legal and the possession of the purchaser was rightful there can be no question of restitution under the Civil Procedure Code, either by the express provisions of S. 144 or on the general principle that the Court will not permit injustice and will not permit a decree-holder to retain profits to which he was not lawfully entitled. [P 272*b*,f,g]

(b) Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), Ss. 8, 19 and 23—Mode of construing Act, stated.

The Act is an expropriatory measure and the process of expropriation should not proceed beyond that which is laid down either by the express language of the Act or by necessary implication therefrom. [P 272*g*]

(c) Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), S. 23 — Decree-holder purchasing property at sale in execution of his decree—Sale set aside under S. 23 — Decree amended— Decree-holder seeking execution by resale of property —Claim by judgment-debtor that he was entitled to profits earned by decree-holder between date of his obtaining possession as purchaser and date of cancellation of sale is not claim arising out of execution— Claim held could be agitated only in separate proceeding.

The decree-holder at a sale in execution of his decree purchased the property himself and obtained possession. Subsequently, the sale was set aside under S. 23 and the decree amended under the provisions of the Act. The decree-holder applied for execution of the amended decree by resale of the same property. The judgment-debtor as an objection to execution, put forward a claim based under S. 23 that he was entitled to the profits earned by the decree-holder between the date of his obtaining possession of the property as purchaser and the date of the re-delivery of the property to the judgment-debtor on the cancellation of the sale :

Held that the claim for profits not being a claim arising in execution of the decree, but a claim based on the statutory assumption under S. 23 that the sale in execution had not taken place at all could not be put forward as an objection to execution and could be agitated only in a separate proceeding. [P 272*h* ; P 273*a*]

P. Satyanarayana Rao — for Appellants.

K. Umamaheswaran — for Respondents.

Wadsworth J.—The only question arising in this appeal is one under S. 23 of the Madras Act, 4 of 1938. Respondent 1 obtained a decree against the appellants in March 1936 and in execution of that decree a sale of the appellants' property was held on 22nd November 1937. The property was purchased by the decree-holder who on 18th February 1938 got possession of one item with which we are now concerned. Act 4 of 1938 came into force on 22nd March 1938 and thereafter the judgment-debtors filed an application under the Act to set aside the sale and to scale down the decree. The sale was set aside on 7th November 1938 and the decree was scaled down. The judgment-debtors then applied for re-delivery of the property and claimed that the profits on the land should be adjusted towards the decree as scaled down. On objection they gave up this claim to profits, stating that they would prosecute it in separate proceedings. The decree-holder then sought to execute the amended decree by the sale of the same property once more. By way of objection to this execution petition the judgment-debtors asked the Court to give credit to the amount of the profits enjoyed by the decree-holder during the interval between the delivery in February 1938 and the re-delivery and asked that these profits be treated as realisations towards the revised decree. This application has been rejected and hence this appeal.

It will be quite clear that the claim to an adjustment of the profits towards the decree cannot be entertained unless it is provided by the terms of Act 4 of 1938 or by necessary implication therefrom. The sale held in execution of the unamended decree was a perfectly legal sale and the possession of the decree-holder as purchaser in execution of that decree was rightful possession. There can be no question therefore of restitution under the Civil Procedure Code, either by the express provisions of S. 144 or on the general principle that the Court will not permit injustice and will not permit a decree-holder to retain profits to which he was not lawfully entitled. The argument is however that the last words of cl. (1) of S. 23 of Act 4 necessarily imply that a judgment-debtor shall have a right to the profits on the land during the interval between the delivery under the sale and the re-delivery after its cancellation. The words are "and thereupon the sale shall be deemed not to have taken place at all." It is argued that, if the sale is deemed not to have taken place at all, then the purchaser was in possession of properties to which he must be deemed not to have been entitled and was enjoying profits which must be deemed to have been properties belonging to the judgment-debtor.

The argument is reinforced by the further contention that, when the sale is set aside, the decree though amended, is revived and interest thereon will run up to the date on which further execution takes place and the decree is satisfied, and it is contended that it is not fair that the decree-holder should get both interest on his decree and the profits on the land of which he should be deemed not to have been the purchaser. This argument has a certain plausibility when the decree-holder is the purchaser but it cannot apply when the purchaser is a stranger. If a stranger buys lands in execution of a decree which is subsequently set aside under S. 23 at the instance of an agriculturist, the purchaser gets no interest on the money which he has paid. All he gets is a refund of the actual sum and there is no equitable reason for requiring the purchaser to forego the profits of the land which has been taken from him and in lieu of which he gets the bare sum which he has paid without interest thereon. Although the words "thereupon the sale shall be deemed not to have taken place at all" might be read as having the consequence that the person who purchases the land would be deemed to have had no right thereto, that is not the only meaning which those words could have had. It is no doubt true that, if these last words had been omitted, any third party purchaser from the Court auction purchaser would lose his title when the latter's sale was set aside. But the Legislature may well have thought it desirable to make this matter clear and this may well have been the reason for putting in the words "thereupon the sale shall be deemed not to have taken place at all." It is pointed out that in the analogous section relating to sales of moveable properties, S. 22, though there is no cancellation of the sale, that which the decree-holder is required to refund is merely the excess over his decree as scaled down and not any interest thereon. It would therefore not appear to have been the intention of the Legislature to deprive the decree-holder-purchaser of the profits which his purchase has earned in the interval between the original execution of the decree and the cancellation of the sale.

A more formidable argument against the appellants is derived from S. 24 which provides for the consequences of the setting aside of a sale under S. 23. This section provides that a purchaser shall be entitled to an order for repayment of any purchase money paid by him against the person to whom it has been paid. It is silent on the subject of interest and it is silent on the subject of profits. The natural inference is that the purchaser gets back his money without interest and that he does not incur any liability for profits. As we have often had occasion to point out, Act 4 of 1938 is an expropriatory measure and the process of expropriation should not proceed beyond that which is laid down either by the express language of the Act or by necessary implication therefrom. There is no express provision that the judgment-debtor should be entitled to the profits on the land the sale of which is set aside and it does not seem to me that any such provision can be read into the Act by necessary implication from its terms. A further objection has been raised that even if the appellants were entitled to claim profits as against the decree-holder, that claim would have to be agitated in a separate proceeding and could not be put forward as an objection to execution, the profits not being ascertained as yet and, by the very nature of the claim, the profits not being a claim arising in execution of the decree, but a claim based on the statutory assumption that the sale in execution has not taken place at all, it would appear that this objection is also valid. In the result, therefore, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Patanjali Sastri J. — I own to some doubt on the question whether a purchaser of immovable property whose sale is set aside under Sec. 23 of Madras Act, 4 of 1938 is accountable for the profits received by him before the sale is set aside. The last words of para. 1 of S. 23, namely, "thereupon the sale shall be deemed not to have taken place at all," would prima facie seem to import that the purchaser obtained no title at any time to the property and that his possession of it from the start was without any right. The consequence of this, it is arguable, must be that he is accountable for the profits received by him from the property of which he was in possession without any right or title. On the other hand, there is force in the argument for the respondents, that, when the Legislature made express provisions in S. 24 for the consequence to follow upon a sale being set aside under S. 23, it has omitted to provide expressly for the payment by the purchaser of the net profits received by him. The question is by no means free from difficulty but having regard to the considerations adverted to in the judgment of my learned brother I agree, on the whole, though not without some hesitation, with the view expressed by him.

Second Appeal No. 1119 of 1938, Decided on 24th October 1941, against decree of Sub-Judge, Chingleput, in A. S. No. 113 of 1937.

 Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), Ss. 47, 44, 34 and 28 (2) and (6) — Secured creditor not realising, abandoning or valuing his security before insolvent's discharge—There is no provable debt — Creditor is entitled to personal decree against insolvent even after his unconditional discharge : (1941) 2 M.L.J. 690=('42) 29 A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 151, OVERRULED.

By reason of the provisions of S. 47, the debt of a secured creditor is not provable until he has realised his security or has abandoned it or valued it. Until one of these events has happened there is no debt provable in the insolvency proceedings. Thus, the real position is that a secured creditor may prove in the insolvency proceedings, but his right is a contingent one and until the contingency happens he is outside the Act. If the secured creditor has not during the insolvency proceedings realised his security, or surrendered or valued it, S. 44 (2) cannot affect him, because no portion of the debt due to him has become provable and the section only applies to debts which are provable in the insolvency. Therefore he is entitled to a personal decree against the insolvent under O. 34, R. 6, Civil P. C., after the insolvent's unconditional discharge if the security has not been realised before the discharge of the insolvent. If it has and there is a deficiency the balance of the debt constitutes a debt provable in insolvency and S. 44 (2) will operate to cancel it : ('38) 25 A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 217, Approved; ('40) 27 A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 252, Dissent.; ('32) 19 A.I.R. 1932 All. 336 and ('39) 26 A.I.R. 1939 All. 401, Not approved; (1941) 2 M.L.J. 690=('42) 29 A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 151, OVERRULED. LEACH C. J. — The question for decision in this appeal is whether a mortgagee is entitled in law to a personal decree for the balance of the mortgage debt when the mortgagor has been adjudicated an insolvent and has obtained as unconditional order of discharge. The reported decisions disclose a divergence of opinion. The adjudication in this case was under the Provincial Insolvency Act, but admittedly there is no distinction to be drawn between that Act and the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act in this connexion. On 4th November 1910 the respondent mortgaged immovable property to the appellant, who on 10th October 1916 filed a suit in the Court of the District Munsif of Poonamallee to enforce his security. On 8th January 1917 he obtained a preliminary mortgage decree and on 29th January 1920 a final decree for the sale of the mortgaged property. In the meantime, to be exact, on 13th November 1919, the respondent filed a petition asking that he be adjudicated an insolvent. This application was granted on 18th September 1920. On 23rd February 1926 the respondent was given his discharge unconditionally. The appellant took no steps to enforce his security until the year following the respondent's discharge. He then instituted proceedings in execution and the property was brought to sale on 23rd March 1927. The sale proceeds fell short of the amount required to discharge the appellant's debt by the sum of Rupees 383-13-4. On 9th July 1927 the appellant applied under the provisions of O. 34, R. 6, Civil P. C., for a personal decree for the balance. His application was granted on 27th September 1927.

The respondent appealed to the District Judge of Chingleput against the order passed on the application under O. 34, R. 6, but not against the personal decree itself The District Judge held that in these circumstances the appeal did not lie and refused to allow the respondent to convert the appeal into one against the personal decree. The respondent then appealed to this Court, which allowed the appeal to the District Judge to be converted into an appeal against the personal decree and remanded the case to the District Judge for disposal on the merits. The District Judge in turn remanded the case to the District Munsif, who held that the appellant was entitled to a personal decree. The respondent challenged this decision in an appeal to the Subordinate Judge, who reversed the District Munsif's a decision. This resulted in the filing of the present appeal. In the first instance the appeal came before King J. who considered that it should be decided by a Bench in view of the conflict of authority.

The sections of the Act which call for consideration here are Ss. 28 (2) and (6), 34 (2), 44 and 47 and their provisions will be mentioned in the order most convenient to the question raised. Section 28 (2), Provincial Insolvency Act, states that on the making of an order of adjudication, the whole of the property of the insolvent shall vest in the Court or in a receiver and shall become divisible among the creditors, but sub-s. (6) says that nothing in the section shall affect the power of a secured creditor to realise or otherwise deal with his security in the same manner as he would have been entitled to realise or deal with it if the section had not been passed. Section 47 states that where a secured creditor rea- b lises his security he may prove for the balance due to him after deducting the net amount realised, or if he relinquishes his security for the general benefit of the creditors he may prove for his whole debt, or where he does not either realise or relinquish his security he may value it and prove for the balance. Section 34 (2) says that save as provided by sub-s. (1) (which has no bearing in this case) all debts and liabilities, present or future, certain or contingent, to which a debtor is subject when he is adjudged an insolvent, or to which he may become subject before his discharge by reason of an obligation incurred before the date of the adjudication, shall be deemed to be debts provable under the Act. Sub-section (1) of S. 44 states that an order of discharge shall not release the insolvent from certain specified debts, but sub-s. (2) says that subject to sub-s. (1) an order of discharge shall release the in- c solvent from all debts provable under the Act. A debt due to a mortgagee is not one of the specified debts.

By reason of the provisions of S. 47 the debt of a secured creditor is not provable until he has realised his security or has abandoned it or valued it. Until one of these events has happened there is no debt provable in the insolvency proceedings. In the course of the arguments it has been suggested by the learned advocate for the respondent that a secured debt is at all times a provable debt within the meaning of S. 44 (2) and in support of this argument he has pointed to S. 34 (2). The argument overlooks, however, the provisions of S. 28 (6) and S. 47 which are the governing provisions so far as the secured creditor is concerned. If the argument were to be accepted, it would mean that once an d insolvent had obtained his discharge unconditionally the secured creditor would be deprived of the benefit of his security. He could not retain the security if the mortgagor were released from all liability under the mortgage. This could never have been the intention of the Legislature in inserting sub-s. (2) in S. 44. The real position is that a secured creditor may prove in the insolvency proceedings, but his right is a contingent one and until the contingency happens he is outside the Act. If the secured creditor has not during the insolvency proceedings realised his security, or surrendered or valued it, S. 44 (2) cannot affect him, because no portion of the debt due to him has become provable and the section only applies to debts which are provable in the insolvency. This means that he is entitled to a personal decree if the security has not been realised before the discharge of the insolvent. If it has and there is a deficiency the balance of the debt constitutes a debt provable in the insolvency and S. 44 (2) will operate to cancel it. Turning now e to the reported cases, the Allahabad High Court in 54 All. 428[1] held that an order of discharge has no more effect upon the rights of a secured creditor than an order of adjudication and consequently he is entitled to a personal decree whenever he has realised his security. The basis of this decision was the opinion that the debt due to a secured creditor is not a debt provable in insolvency and the order of adjudication and the subsequent order of discharge cannot affect the rights of the secured creditor which flow from the mortgage contract. The report does not, however, show at what stage the order of discharge was obtained. The question was again raised in the Allahabad High Court in I.L.R. (1939) All. 492.[2] The report here mentions the date of the order of discharge, but the date of the realisation of the property is not given. The judg- f ment in 54 All. 428[1] was however followed. It would appear that the opinion of the Allahabad High Court is that the secured creditor is at all times outside the Act and may obtain a personal decree even if the property has been realised before the passing of the order of discharge. In our opinion this is going too far.

The Lahore High Court in A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 217[3] held that where a creditor of an insolvent holding a mortgage decree realizes the security before the mortgagor obtains his discharge the order of discharge prevents the mortgagee obtaining a personal decree. It follows from what we have said that we regard this case as having been rightly decided. In I. L. R. (1940) Nag. 512,[4] the Nagpur High Court, however, held that a secured creditor is debarred from obtaining a personal decree when the mortgaged property has been realized after the discharge g of the insolvent. In this case part of the property was realized on 23rd February 1929, but the remainder was not sold until 21st March 1930 and until all the properties had been sold the mortgagee creditor could not ask for a personal decree. Before 21st March 1930, the insolvent had obtained his discharge. It also follows from what we have said that we are unable to agree with this decision. At no stage of the insolvency proceedings was there a provable debt. After the present case had been referred to a Bench by King J. the question was considered by Venkataramana Rao J. in the unreported case in S. A. No. 257 of 1939.[5] Venkataramana Rao J. accepted the opinion of the Nagpur High Court, but as already indicated we do not share this opinion. In the present case there was no surrender or valuation of the security and it was not realised during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings. h Therefore, during the pendency of those proceedings there was no provable debt and S. 44 (2) could have no application. Consequently, we hold that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in reversing the decision

In re Thandra Narasimhappadu Petitioner.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 329 of 1940 (Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 318 of 1940), Decided on 18th October 1940, to revise judgment of Court of joint Magistrate, Chicacole, D/- 15th April 1940.

Penal Code (1860), S. 188 (2) — Crop raised and removed prior to order for possession under S. 145, Criminal P. C. — Person removing crop is not guilty under S. 188, Penal Code.

Where the crop has been raised and harvested by a party to S. 145, Criminal P. C., proceedings before possession has been restored to the opposite party, there is no disobedience of the order prohibiting the party from interfering with the possession of the opposite party and hence the conviction of the party under S. 188 (2), Penal Code, is unsustainable. [P 275*d*,e]

K. S. Jayarama Iyer and C. V. Dikshitalu — for Petitioner.

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

FACTS. — The petitioners in this criminal revision petition were the counter-petitioners in proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C., on the file of the First Class Magistrate, Chicacole. By a preliminary order, dated 17th August 1938, both the parties were restrained from interfering with the lands. After a contest a final order under S. 145 (6) was passed on 23rd November 1938 and in and by the said order possession of the lands in dispute with the crops, if any, standing thereon was restored to the petitioner in the proceedings under S. 145 and the counter petitioners were forbidden from disturbing their possession except by proceedings through a competent Court.

It was in evidence that the counter petitioners had sown paddy in a portion of the land in June and that the said crop were ripe for harvest at the time the order dated 27th November 1938 was made. The final order was served on the counter petitioners only after the crop was cut and removed by them. The petitioners complained against the counter petitioners alleging that by cutting and removing the crop they had committed an offence under Ss. 188 and 379, Penal Code, and the First Class Magistrate sanctioned the prosecution of the counter petitioners. The Sub-Magistrate found the counter petitioners guilty of an offence under S. 188 (2), Penal Code, and sentenced them and the said finding and sentence of the Sub-Magistrate was confirmed by the appellate Magistrate. Against this conviction and sentence, the present revision petition has been filed by the counter petitioners who were the accused in the case under Ss. 188 and 379, Penal Code.

ORDER.—The crop was raised by the petitioner and it was harvested by him before possession was restored to the opposite party. There was therefore no disobedience of the order prohibiting the petitioner from interfering with the possession of the opposite party and the conviction under S. 188 (2), Penal Code, is unsustainable. The conviction and sentence of the petitioner are, therefore, set aside, and his bail bonds will be cancelled.

Referred Trial No. 23 of 1941 (Criminal Appeal No. 108 of 1941), Decided on 19th March 1941, referred by Addl. Sess. Judge, Coimbatore Division, for confirmation of sentence, D/- 17th January 1941.

(a) Penal Code (1860), Ss. 302 and 201—Question for decision whether accused was guilty of murder — While convicting accused of murder it is not desirable to convict him for concealing evidence though such course is legal.

Where the whole question is whether the accused person was guilty of murder without there being any suggestion that anybody else committed it, it is highly unusual and undesirable to convict the accused for concealing the evidence whilst convicting him of murder though as a strict question of law it may not be wrong to do so. [P 275*h*; P 276*a*]

(b) Penal Code (1860), S. 302 — Deliberate murder with attempt at concealment — Death sentence is justified.

In the case of a deliberate murder with a deliberate attempt at concealment sentence of death is appropriate. [P 275*h*]

K. S. Jayaram — for Accused.

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

MOCKETT J. — The appellant has been convicted of the murder of his cousin and has been sentenced to death by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Coimbatore. There is no question that on 24th September last Parama Goundan was murdered. His body was exhumed on 2nd October from the garden of the accused. (After discussing the evidence, his Lordship proceeded.) In these circumstances we think that the learned Sessions Judge quite rightly drew the inference from these facts that the accused deliberately murdered his cousin and quite rightly rejected the story told at a somewhat late stage and only when the body was revealed that it was done in a manner which might have reduced this offence to some lesser offence.

The whole of the circumstances in this case point to the fact that for some reasons which may not ever be ascertained this was a deliberate murder and a deliberate attempt at concealment. We therefore confirm the conviction and dismiss the appeal. Similarly, in a case of this sort the sentence passed was the appropriate sentence and that also is confirmed.

We notice that the learned Judge whilst convicting of murder has also convicted the appellant and sentenced him to seven years rigorous imprisonment for concealing the evidence. Whilst as a strict question of law this may not be wrong; it is in our view highly unusual and undesirable. This is a case where the whole question was whether this man was guilty of murder. It was not suggested, the murder was committed by anybody else and we think that the procedure in the lower Court should not be treated as a precedent in that Court.

 Income-tax Act (1922), S. 54—Account book of firm produced before Income-tax Officer in course of income-tax proceedings—Even partners are not entitled as of right to production or inspection of it from Income-tax Officer.

Where an account book in possession of an Income-tax Officer has been produced in the course of proceedings under the Income-tax Act, even partners in the firm with persons who deposited the books are not entitled to production or even to an examination as of right of the book which the Income-tax Officer has : ('40) 27 A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 768 (F.B.), Ref. [P 276*f*]

T. M. Kasturi for K. Subramaniam — for Applicants.

K. Varadachari for V. Radhakrishnayya — for Respondents.

K. V. Sesha Iyengar — for Income-tax Officer.

ORDER.—The applicants are the plaintiffs in the suit which was referred to the learned Official Referee for inquiry. They served upon the Income-tax Officer a subpœna requiring him to produce some account books in his possession which are said to have belonged to the firm of Cunniappa Nayagar for the year 1930 and 1934-35. The Income-tax Officer does not produce them. The present application is made by the plaintiffs against the Income-tax Officer calling upon him to show cause why he should not be directed to produce the account books mentioned in the subpœna. In his affidavit, the Income-tax Officer says that of the account books mentioned in the subpœna he has only one book containing the monthly trial balance for the year 1930 and further he says this book was produced in the course of proceedings under the Income-tax Act for the year 1938-39. Learned counsel on his behalf claims that the Income-tax Officer is entitled to refuse to produce the books either in pursuance of the subpœna served upon him or under any order of Court. This claim is made under the provisions of S. 54 (1), Income tax Act, which are as follows :

" All . . . accounts . . produced . . in the course of any proceedings under this Act . . . shall be treated as confidential, and notwithstanding anything contained in the Evidence Act, 1872, no Court shall, save as provided in this Act, be entitled to require any public servant to produce before it any such . . . . . accounts."

Sub-section (2) gives a number of exceptions to sub-s. (1) ; but learned counsel for the applicants conceded that he cannot bring himself within any of these exceptions. The seriousness with which the Legislature considers the provisions in sub-s. (1) is reflected by sub-s. (2) of the section which renders any public servant liable to punishment with imprisonment for six months in the event of his disclosing any particulars contained in any accounts which are produced as contemplated in sub-s. (1). It is argued on behalf of the applicants that, inasmuch as they are partners in the firm with the persons who deposited these books as such, they are entitled to inspect and to obtain an order requiring their production in Court. The wording of S. 54 (1) is perfectly clear. It is emphatic in its language and mandatory in its provisions. It may be that, as a matter of practice, the income-tax authorities may allow a partner to inspect the books of his firm which have been deposited with them as would appear to be the case from the observations in the course of the opinion expressed in (1940) 2 M. L. J. 257[1] at p. 267 in which the learned Chief Justice referred to para. 5 of the Notes of Instructions compiled for the guidance of Income-tax Officers. In no way is this any departure or exception to the provisions of S. 54, Income-tax Act. There is no dispute regarding the statement of the Income-tax Officer in his affidavit that the account book in his possession was produced in the course of proceedings under the Income-tax Act. That being so, in my view, the applicants are not entitled to production or even to an examination as of right of the book which the Income-tax Officer has. The protection which is given by S. 54 covers the present case and in consequence this application must be dismissed with costs of the Income-tax Officer.

Crown Prosecutor — for the Crown.

FACTS. — The petitioner was charged with an offence under S. 16, Motor Vehicles Act, for a breach of R. 138 under the Act by permitting his car to be used as a contract carriage without a permit. It was admitted by the accused that he had allowed a third person to use the car on payment of Rs. 50 per month for the expenses, that it was not intended for public use and that it was not let out to anybody else. The Magistrate convicted the accused. a Against this order the present revision is filed.

ORDER. — The car of the petitioner was used for carrying passengers for reward under a contract for the use of the vehicle for an agreed sum, and possession of the car was not transferred within the meaning of the explanation to R. 4, cl. (iii), Madras Motor Vehicles Rules, 1938. The car would therefore be a 'contract carriage' as defined in R. 4, cl. (iii) and the petitioner had no permit to use it. as a contract carriage. The conviction is therefore correct but the fine is excessive and it is reduced to Rs. 20; otherwise this petition is dismissed.

Hindu law — Succession — Murderer cannot succeed as heir of person whom he murdered — No title can be claimed through murderer — Inheritance vests in those entitled to it if murderer was out of way — Test of disqualification is not relationship but whether title is traced through murderer.

Under the Hindu law a murderer cannot succeed as heir of the person whom he murdered nor can c title be claimed through the murderer. The murderer should be treated as non-existent and not as one who forms the stock for a fresh line of descent. The inheritance vests in those who would be entitled to it were the guilty heir out of the way. JUDGMENT. — The question for decision in this second appeal lies in a narrow compass. One K. Narayanayya was the last male owner of the property involved in the suit out of which this appeal arises. He died leaving him surviving his widow Nagamma and a daughter Lakshmi. Nagamma was murdered on 27th September 1928 by her daughter Lakshmi and her son-in-law. Defendants 1 to 5 are the sons of Lakshmi and defendants 6 to 13 are the lessees under Nagamma in respect of the suit property. The plaintiffs are the sons of K. Ramakrishnayya, the deceased divided brother of K. Narayanayya. The question in controversy is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed to the suit property in preference to defendants 1 to 5. The case for the plaintiffs is that as the defendants are the sons of the murderess e Lakshmi, they are disentitled to succeed to the suit property and that they as next heirs are entitled to it. The learned District Munsif gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff, but the learned Subordinate Judge reversed this decision. The question is which view is tenable. It is now settled by the Privy Council that a murderer cannot succeed as heir of the person whom he murdered. This proposition was laid down in 48 Bom. 569[1] affirming the decision in 45 Bom. 768.[2] After stating that the murderer was disqualified, Lord Phillimore, who delivered the judgment of the Board proceeded to state the legal consequence of this doctrine in regard to the devolution of the estate of the murdered man as follows :

"The second question to be decided is whether title can be claimed through the murderer. If this f were so, the defendants as the murderer's sisters, would take precedence of the plaintiff, his cousin. In this matter also, their Lordships are of opinion that the Courts below are right. The murderer should be treated as non-existent and not as one who forms the stock for a fresh line of descent. It may be pointed out that this view was also taken in the Madras case just cited."

The Madras case referred to is 27 Mad. 591.[3] The view that the learned Lord was referring to was, I believe, the view expressed at page 601, namely, "the beneficial interest in the inheritance vests in those who would be entitled to it were the guilty heir out of the way." In an earlier passage their Lordships pronounced the view expressed by the High Court in 27 Mad. 591[3] that the legal estate might vest in the heir though the beneficial interest would not, as unsound on the ground that g the theory of legal and equitable estates is no part of Hindu law. What their Lordships must be deemed to have approved is the view, in so far as it states that the inheritance vests in those who would be entitled to it were the guilty heir out of the way without the qualification of the "beneficial interests." In the case before the Privy Council, there was a dispute as to who should succeed as heir of the last male owner—the sisters of the murderer, who were also the father's brother's daughters of the last male owner or the father's sister's son. Their Lordships said that if the murdered man was regarded as the stock for a line of descent, then the sisters would certainly take the estate in preference to the father's sister's son but as he could not be considered to be a fresh stock of descent and title cannot be traced through him, the sisters could not succeed on that ground. Their h Lordships considered, however, the question that though they were related to him, whether they could not still succeed in their own right, as the father's brother's daughters of the last owner ; and they were held not entitled to succeed on the application of another rule of law, namely, that a male bhandu succeeds in preference to a female bhandu. The principle that is clearly deducible from this decision is that the test of disqualification is not relationship but whether the title is traced through the murderer. This is also made clear by their observations with reference to the decision in 32 Bom. 275.[4] This is how their Lordships explained that decision :

"In that case, the wife of a murderer was held entitled to succeed to the estate of the murdered man ; but that was not because the wife deduced title through her husband, but because of the principle of Hindu family law that a wife becomes a member of her husband's gotra, an actual relation of her husband's relations in her own right, as it is called in Hindu law a gotraja sapinda."

If this observation is read with the observation made by Chandavarkar J. in the same case, 32 Bom. 275,[4] with reference to the title based on the wife being gotraja sapinda, the matter is placed beyond doubt. This is how Chandavarkar J. observed at page 294 :

"It is no doubt because she is the husband's wife that she becomes a gotraja sapinda of the deceased. In other words, her status as wife is the cause of her status as gotraja sapinda. This former is the cause; the latter is the effect . . . . . But the sapindaship is an entity by itself, distinct from, though arising out of, the cause. And it is the sapindaship which is the immediate cause of her heirship."

If the principle of the Privy Council decision is applied to the present case, defendants 1 to 5 would be entitled to inherit to their grandfather's estate in spite of the fact that their mother murdered Nagamma. Though they are related to her, they do not trace title through her. The mother should be treated as non-existent and further she could never become a fresh stock of descent. Considerable reliance was placed by Mr. Adiga on two decisions of the Lahore High Court reported in 3 Lah. 103[5] and 3 Lah. 242,[6] which took a contrary view. But those decisions cannot be held to be correct in view of the decision of the Privy Council in 48 Bom. 569.[1] (Vide the criticism of the learned editor of Mayne's Hindu Law, page 729, Foot-Note 3.) It seems to me that the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge is sound. In the result the second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Leave to appeal refused.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 684 of 1941, Decided on 2nd May 1941, to revise order of Sub-Judge, Bapatla, D/- 2nd July 1938.

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), S. 23—S. 23 applies to sales held between 1st October 1937 and 22nd March 1938—It does not apply to sales held after Act.

Section 23 was drafted with reference to the point of time at which the Act came into force and therefore the section only relates to sales held between 1st October 1937 and 22nd March 1938, and has no application to sales held after the Act came into force. [P 278*g*; P 279*a*]

K. Kotayya — for Petitioner.

K. Raghuramiah — for Respondent.

WADSWORTH J. — This civil revision petition raises a question regarding the effect of S. 23 of Madras Act, 4 of 1938 on which there appears to be no decided case. The sale which the petitioner sought to set aside was held on 29th March 1938, that is to say, just one week after Act 4 of 1938 came into force. Section 23 applies in terms to sales held on or after 1st October 1937 and the only future limit which is expressly laid down relates to the date within which an application is to be made, which is within 90 days of the commencement of the Act. It is argued that within these 90 days any judgment-debtor entitled to the benefits of the Act may apply for a sale to be set aside even though that sale has been held after the Act came into force. The only materials for deciding whether this view of the section is correct or not are the use of the tenses in the terms of the section and the alternative provisions found in the Act to relieve agriculturists whose property is brought to sale after the commencement of the Act. The essential words of S. 23 are :

"Where in execution of any decree any immovable property, in which an agriculturist had an interest, has been sold or foreclosed on or after 1st October 1937. . . . . any judgment-debtor, claiming to be an agriculturist entitled to the benefits of this Act, may apply to the Court within 90 days of the commencement of this Act to set aside the sale or foreclosure."

Looking at the three verbs used in this passage we find that it contemplates an interest vesting in an agriculturist at some past time, a sale held after 1st October 1937 but before the point of time with reference to which the section is drafted and a future application to the Court to be made within 90 days of the commencement of the Act. What is the point of time which the Legislature had in mind in drafting this section ? It cannot be the time of the application for that is expressly in future, as is shown by the words 'may apply.' The logical inference from the wording of the section is that the section was drafted with reference to the point of time at which the Act came into force and, if this be so, it would follow that the section only relates to sales held between 1st October 1937, and 22nd March 1938. That this is the correct view is indicated by the other provisions of the Act. The Act contemplates that when there is a decree for the repayment of a debt due from an agriculturist, the judgment-debtor shall apply to the Court under S. 19 to have that debt scaled down in accordance with the provisions of the Act. If that decree is actually in process of execution a remedy is provided by S. 20 whereby the judgment-debtor can get execution stayed for such time as is necessary to prefer an application under S. 19. If therefore a decree has been passed and is being executed after the Act comes into force, the judgment-debtor has ample opportunity for preventing the sale of his property in execution of that decree for such a time as is necessary to get the decree modified in accordance with the Act. It is most unlikely in view of this provision that the Legislature would also have contemplated a power in the judgment-debtor to stand by while execution is going on after the Act has come into force and while third parties are acquiring interests in property sold, and thereafter to claim to have such a sale set aside. It seems to us clear that the view of the learned Subordinate Judge that S. 23 has no application to sales held after the Act came into force, is correct. In this view we dismiss this civil revision petition with costs.

Criminal Revn. Cases Nos. 317, 318 and 335 of 1941 and Petns. Nos. 301, 302 and 318 of 1941, Decided on 19th August 1941, to revise judgments of Sub-Magistrate, Mangalagiri, D/- 30th November 1940.

(a) Madras Local Boards Act (14 of 1920), S. 159 — Applicability — Person disobeying panchayat President's order is liable to fine— Fact that president and person making encroachment are of opposite faction in panchayat is irrelevant.

The application of S. 159 does not depend upon the extent to which an encroachment is objectionable. The president has a right to have the encroachment removed; and if the person who encroaches upon the land of the panchayat refuses to obey the President's order, he makes himself liable to a fine by a criminal Court. The fact that the President of the panchayat board and the person making the encroachment are of opposite factions in the panchayat is irrelevant. The powers of the president are none the less because he dislikes the person making the encroachment. [P 279*d*,e]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 439 — Acquittal —High Court will interfere only in very exceptional circumstances—Proper course is Crown appeal.

The High Court, except under very special circumstances, does not interfere in revision with an order of acquittal. The proper course in such a case is to move the proper authorities to prefer a Crown appeal. [P 279*e*]

S. Vepa and J. Krishnamurthi — for Petitioner.

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

ORDER.—Three revision petitions have been filed by the President of the Panchayat Board, Mangalagiri, against the order of acquittal of the Sub-Magistrate of Mangalagiri of three persons alleged to have encroached upon the lands of the Panchayat Board. In two out of the three cases, the accused admitted the encroachment, and yet the Magistrate refused to fine them. The reasons he gave for his order were that the Panchayat Board had not proved that the encroachment was objectionable and that it was "an instance of local influences and factions playing a large part with the Local Boards." The learned Magistrate has entirely misconceived the scope of the sections of the Madras Local Boards Act relating to encroachments. The application of S. 159, which empowers the president of the Local Board to require the owner or occupier of any premises to remove an encroachment, does not depend upon the extent to which such encroachment is objectionable. The president has a right to have the encroachment removed; and if the person who encroaches upon the land of the panchayat refuses to obey the president's order, he makes himself liable to a fine by a criminal Court. The learned Magistrate should therefore have taken action under S. 207 (1) and punished the offenders. The fact that the president of the Board and the person making the encroachment are of opposite factions in the panchayat, even if true, is irrelevant. The powers of the president are none the less because he dislikes the person making the encroachment. The proper course for the Panchayat Board to have adopted was to have moved the District Magistrate to prefer a Crown appeal. This Court, except under very special circumstances, does not interfere in revision with an order of acquittal. I understand that the Panchayat Board will be satisfied if the order of this Court makes it clear that a person making an encroachment is liable to punishment whether he belongs to the faction opposed to the president or not and whether the Court thinks the encroachment objectionable or otherwise. The revision petitions are dismissed.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 192 of 1940 (Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 184 of 1940), Decided on 26th September 1940, to revise judgment of Bench Magistrate, Dindigul, in S. T. No. 1697 of 1939.

Madras District Municipalities Act (5 of 1920), Ss. 249, 313—Acquittal on ground of refusal not valid is not sustainable.

Where the executive authority has declined to renew the license, the acquittal of the accused on the ground that the order of refusal was not valid cannot be sustained. [P 280*a*]

V. T. Rangaswami Ayyangar and A. S. Srinivasa Iyer — for Respondent.

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

FACTS.—The petitioner Municipality prosecuted the respondent for an offence under Ss. 249 and 313, Madras District Municipalities Act, 1920, for running a coffee hotel and preparing and selling sweets in unlicensed premises in East Car Street, Dindigul, after his application for renewal of the license for 1939-40 was rejected. The Stationary Sub-Magistrate who tried the case held that no valid order was passed within thirty days of the receipt of application which was on 1st March 1939 and the order rejecting the renewal was passed only on 1st June 1939 and hence under S. 321 (11) the application should be deemed to have been allowed for the year subject to the conditions ordinarily imposed. a He therefore found the respondent not guilty and acquitted him. Against this order the Municipality filed the revision petition.

ORDER. — The executive authority declined to renew the license and the acquittal of the accused on the ground that the order of refusal is not valid is unsustainable. The order of acquittal is therefore set aside and there will be a retrial in accordance with law by the District Magistrate or such other Magistrate as he may direct.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 253 of 1940, Decided on 7th November 1941, to revise decree of Dist. Court, Anantapur, in A. S. No. 25 of 1939.

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), Ss. 9 and 8—S in 1931 executing note in favour of P undivided brother of F—Partition between P and F in 1932 — In 1933 S executing fresh note in favour of F in discharge of note of 1931 — F assigning note of 1933 to P in 1937 — Suit by P on note of 1933 — Debt under suit note held could be scaled down under S. 9—Note of 1933 held not renewal of note of 1931, creditor not being same — Dismissal of suit on account c of P's failure to produce note of 1931 held erroneous — Error held justified interference in revision.

The plaintiff sued on a note executed by defendant 2 in favour of his undivided brother, defendant 1, on 14th April 1933 which was assigned to the plaintiff on 2nd August 1937. The suit note of 1933 actually discharged an earlier note of 1931 executed in favour of the plaintiff himself at a time when the family was undivided, the partition being in 1932. The trial Court found that defendant 2 was an agriculturist and scaled down the debt on the basis of the suit note under S. 9. The District Judge in appeal found that the creditor had not fulfilled his duty of putting before the Court the materials necessary for scaling down the debt because of the non-production of the prior document of 1931 and in the absence of proof of the docu- d ments necessary in order to ascertain the original principal, no decree could be given against defendant 2. The appeal was therefore allowed and the suit dismissed with costs :

Held that (1) as the suit note was executed in favour of defendant 1 in discharge of an earlier note executed in favour of the plaintiff, the fact that the suit note was subsequently assigned to the plaintiff would not make the note a renewal of an earlier debt in favour of the same creditor ; [P 281*a*,b]

(2) as the first note was executed in favour of the plaintiff as representing the joint family and the second note was executed in favour of defendant 1 as a member of that family to whom the debt had been assigned on partition, it could not be said that the creditors were the same in the two transactions : ('40) 27 A. I. R. 1940 Mad. 356, Rel. on ; [P 281*b*]

(3) it was open to defendant 2 to plead and prove that the note of 1931 was assigned by the plaintiff e to defendant 1 before it was discharged by the note of 1933, in which case there would clearly be a renewal in favour of the same creditor; but no such case was pleaded ; [P 281*b*]

(4) in a case in which it could be shown that the creditor had wilfully failed to produce earlier documents which ought to be looked into for the purpose of scaling down the debt, the Court would be entitled to draw an inference adverse to the creditor from the non-production of those documents. No attempt was made by defendant 2 to require the plaintiff to produce the earlier note and the earlier note being irrelevant for the purpose of scaling down the debt the District Judge was grievously in error in dismissing the suit solely for the reason that the plaintiff had not produced the materials necessary to scale down the debt : (1940) 2 M. ORDER. — The plaintiff, who is the petitioner here, sued on a note executed by defendant 2 in favour of the plaintiff's undivided brother, defendant 1, on 14th April 1933 which was assigned to the plaintiff on 2nd August 1937. The trial Court found that defendant 2 was an agriculturist and scaled down the debt on the basis of the suit note under S. 9 of the Act, 4 of 1938. It was in evidence that the suit note of 1933 actually discharged an earlier note of about the year 1931 executed in favour of the plaintiff himself at a time when the family was undivided, the partition being in 1932. On these facts, the learned District Judge in appeal g found that the creditor had not fulfilled his duty of putting before the Court the materials necessary for scaling down the debt because of the non-production of the prior document of 1931 and in the absence of proof of the documents necessary in order to ascertain the original principal, no decree could be given against defendant 2. The appeal was therefore allowed and the suit dismissed with costs. An attempt has been made to support this judgment by reference to a short note of the case of Suryanarayana v. Viswanadham (C. R. P. No. 331 of 1939) found at p. 27 of the Notes of Recent Cases in (1940) 2 M.L.J. The short note states:

"Where a creditor becomes entitled to a promissory note belonging to a joint Hindu family at a partition with his other coparceners and fresh promissory notes are executed in his favour by the debtor, he cannot content himself with producing h the promissory notes executed in his favour alone and is bound to produce, if available, the promissory notes anterior to the date of partition as also the account books of the joint family, to enable the debtor to establish a claim to relief under Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act."

As I was a party to the decision in question which, if correctly reported, would be very difficult to reconcile with other decisions of the same Bench, I have sent for the original judgment in the case and find that the brief report bears little or no relation to the actual judgment. What we decided in the judgment was that the lower Court ought not to have refused permission to summon from the plaintiff's custody earlier promissory notes or accounts which tend to prove that the suit can be traced back to the earlier notes in favour of the same creditor or one of whom this creditor is the legal representative. We expressly stated that nothing was said about the effect of the partition in the creditor's family but we confined ourselves to holding that the lower Court was wrong in shutting out evidence regarding documents executed before this partition.

It will be clear that the actual judgment in this case gives no support whatever to the position taken up by the learned District Judge. No doubt, in a case in which it can be shown that the creditor has wilfully failed to produce earlier documents which ought to be looked into for the purpose of scaling down the debt, the Court would be entitled to draw an inference adverse to the creditor from the non-production of those documents. But, in the present case, we have the suit note executed in favour of defendant 1 in discharge of an earlier note executed in favour of the plaintiff. The fact that the suit note was subsequently assigned to the plaintiff would not make the note a renewal of an earlier debt in favour of the same creditor. And if the first note was executed in favour of the plaintiff as representing the joint family and the second note was executed in favour of defendant 1 as a member of that family to whom the debt had been assigned on partition, it could not be said in view of the decision in (1941) 1 M.L.J. 39,[1] and other similar cases that the creditors were the same in the two transactions. No doubt it might be possible for defendant 2 to plead and prove that the note of 1931 was assigned by the plaintiff to defendant 1 before it was discharged by the note of 1933, in which case there would clearly be a renewal in favour of the same creditor; but no such case was pleaded and no attempt seems to have been made by defendant 2 to require the plaintiff to produce the earlier note and the earlier note was, so far as our information goes, irrelevant for the purpose of scaling down the debt. That being so, it seems to me that the learned District Judge was grievously in error in dismissing the suit solely for the reason that the plaintiff had not produced the materials necessary to scale down the debt. I am also of opinion that the error of the learned District Judge is one which justifies interference in revision. In the result, therefore, I allow the revision petition with costs throughout and restore the decree of the trial Court.

Madras District Municipalities Act (5 of 1920), Ss. 249, 313 — Plea held misunderstood.

A person was tried for an offence under Ss. 249 and 313 for running a hotel without licence. The accused stated that he had deposited the licence fee and made an application for renewal and he must be deemed to have licence :

FACTS — The revision is against the conviction of the petitioner for an offence under Ss. 249 and 313, District Municipalities Act, for running a hotel without the licence. In the lower Court the petitioner appeared and stated that he has deposited the licence fee and made an application for renewal and he must be deemed to have licence. The Bench Magistrates thought that the petitioner admitted that he is running a hotel without a licence, found him guilty and sentenced him to pay a fine.

ORDER.—The plea of the petitioner was misunderstood and the conviction cannot be sustained. It is therefore set aside and there will be a retrial in accordance with law. The fine if levied will be refunded.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 367 of 1941, (case referred No. 18 of 1941), Decided on 30th July 1941, referred by District Magistrate, Tinnevelly, in his letter dated 1st April 1941.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 349 (2)—Magistrate under S. 349 (2) must dispose of case himself—He has no power to remand it.

Under S. 349 (2) the Magistrate to whom proceedings are submitted under S. 349 (1) is bound to dispose of the case himself and has no power to remand the same for disposal to the Magistrate by whom the proceedings were submitted. The Magistrate acting under S. 349 (2) is not obliged to pass an order of the nature considered appropriate by the Magistrate who submitted the proceedings. [P 281*h* ; P 282*a*]

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

ORDER. — The Stationary Sub-Magistrate of Srivaikuntum found the accused before him guilty of an offence under S. 324, Penal Code; but as he thought that an order under S. 106, Criminal P.C., had to be passed against the accused and he had no power to do so himself, he acted under S. 349 (1), Criminal P. C., and he submitted his proceedings and forwarded the accused to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to whom he was immediately subordinate. The joint Magistrate, instead of acting under S. 349 (2), Criminal P. C., and disposing of the matter himself, considered the proposal of the Sub-Magistrate that proceedings should be taken under S. 106, Criminal P. C., and came to the conclusion that it was not necessary. He thereupon sent the case back to the Sub-Magistrate for disposal. That he had no power to do. Section 349 (2) says :

"The Magistrate to whom the proceedings are submitted may, if he thinks fit, examine the parties . . . shall pass such judgment, sentence or order in the case as he thinks fit, and as is according to law."

It is thus seen that the Magistrate was bound to a dispose of the case himself; although he was not, of course, obliged to pass an order of the nature considered appropriate by the Stationary Sub-Magistrate. The order passed by the Joint Magistrate dated 12th February 1941 remanding the case to the Sub-Magistrate for disposal is therefore set aside and the Joint Magistrate ordered to dispose of the case according to law under Section 349 (2), Criminal P. Second Appeals Nos. 346 to 356 of 1939, Decided on 4th September 1941, against decrees of District Court, Chingleput, in A. S. Nos. 36 to 46 of 1937.

(a) Madras Estates Land Act (1 of 1908), Ss. 111 and 112 — More than one landholder — One cannot initiate proceedings under Ss. 111 and 112 without joining others.

In the case of more than one land-holder, the expression "land-holder" in Ss. 77 (a) and 111 should be read as "land-holders." If there is more than one land-holder, particularly, where the land-holder's interest is vested in several sharers, it c would not be competent for one land-holder to exercise the power of sale or initiate proceedings in regard thereto without the other land-holder or land-holders being made parties to such proceedings. The English Common Law rule whereby one cosharer can distrain the tenants on behalf of the other cosharer for arrears of rent cannot be applied in the face of the provisions of the Estates Land Act by which the case must be decided. [P 283*d*,e]

(b) Hindu law—Minor— Guardian — Father or mother is natural guardian—Brother cannot act for his minor divided brother unless he gets himself appointed as guardian under Guardians and Wards Act.

Under the Hindu law a father or mother is the natural guardian of his or her minor child and, therefore, unless a person gets himself appointed as d guardian of his minor divided brother under the Guardians and Wards Act he cannot act for his minor brother :('40) 27 A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 33 (F.B.), Rel. on. [P 283*e*]

JUDGMENT. — This is a batch of appeals arising out of suits filed by the tenants of Zamin e Devaranjeri village, Ponneri Taluk under S. 112, Madras Estates Land Act, for raising the attachment of the holdings effected by the appellant. Several grounds were alleged in the plaint of which three require notice. (1) There was no proper exchange of patta and muchilika between the plaintiff and the defendant for the fasli 1343 and there was no proper tender of patta. Therefore, the attachment proceedings were not proper and valid. (2) It is not competent for the appellant to initiate the proceedings for sale under the Estates Land Act on the ground that he was not the sole proprietor of the village and that there were other cosharers who ought to have joined in the proceedings. (3) The merais claimed in the demand notice were not legally enforceable. The defendant in the written statement urged that there were valid pattas and f muchilikas in force, that he was competent to take proceedings under the Estates Land Act and bring the holdings of the tenants to sale and that the merais were legally enforceable.

The Deputy Collector who tried these suits held that pattas and muchilikas were exchanged in some cases and tendered in other cases and, therefore, he would hold that there was exchange of pattas and muchilikas continuing in force and that though the defendant had a brother, Kesava Mudaliar, he was only a minor and that the defendant was competent to take proceedings without joining his brother. With regard to the merais he held some of them enforceable and some not. Appeals were preferred against these decisions in the various suits. The learned District Judge of Chingleput reversed the decisions and disposed of the suits on two grounds, viz., (1) that the managing member of a g joint undivided Hindu family was not competent to tender a patta without his undivided brother being also a party to the tender and (2) that he would not be competent to exercise the right of sale under the Estates Land Act without his brother joining in the proceedings.

When these appeals were argued before me, I wanted to find out what were the various pattas which must be deemed to be in force in the several suits, on the strength of which the learned District Judge came to the conclusion which he arrived at. In the course of the hearing, the deposition of D. W. 3 was brought to my notice in which reference was made to a suit for partition in the family of the defendant and the appointments of receiver or receivers in that suit. As the suit was one on the file of this Court (C. S. No. 307 of 1928), I caused the papers to be produced, as without reference to them it would not be satisfactory to dis- h pose of these appeals. On a reference to them I found that the suit was one for partition of the joint family properties instituted by the defendant against his father Venugopala Mudaliar and his undivided brother Kesava Mudaliar. There was a preliminary decree for partition in and by which all the properties of the joint family including the suit village were directed to be partitioned and each of the parties was held entitled to share therein. There was a final decree subsequently in the same suit in which the properties including the suit village were partitioned in two equal shares because at that time the father was dead. So far as the suit village is concerned, the appellant herein and Kesava Mudaliar were each given one-half share in it. One Kumariah was appointed a receiver in that suit and thereafter one Panchakshara Mudaliar was appointed. These facts establish that the assumption on which the learned District Judge decided, viz., that the parties were members of a joint Hindu family, was wrong. Therefore the question arises as to whether one co-sharer can tender a patta without the consent of the other. On a reference to evidence in the suits, I find that some pattas were tendered by the receiver and muchilikas in his favour executed by the tenants, and that subsequent to the partition suit, pattas were tendered in some faslis by the appellant and refused by the tenants. On these facts the question which naturally arises is whether the patta tendered by the receiver could not be said to be continuing in force if no patta was subsequently exchanged between the parties. Mr. K. Rajah Ayyar's contention is that the pattas issued by the receiver must be deemed to be in force if no subsequent pattas were issued or if the pattas were issued such pattas are held to be invalid. But specific attention was not directed to this aspect of the matter in the lower Courts and the learned Deputy Collector simply stated that there were valid pattas issued in force without specifically adverting to the evidence in the case. If the matter had rested there, I should have set aside the finding of the learned District Judge and remanded the suits for rehearing. There was another question in the case, namely, whether the proceedings initiated by the defendant in bringing the holdings of the tenants to sale were valid, and if they were not valid whether the tenants had not the right to set aside the attachment under S. 112, Estates Land Act. The learned District Judge gave a decision against the appellant and decreed the suits. Therefore this question arises pointedly for consideration.

Mr. Rajah Ayyar contends that Kesava Mudaliar being a minor it would be competent on the part of the appellant alone to take proceedings and at any rate he must be deemed to have done so as the guardian of Kesava Mudaliar. It cannot be said that the appellant can be the legal guardian of Kesava Mudaliar in view of the Full Bench decision in I. L. R. (1940) Mad. 358.[1] But however I find in 1936 that so far as Kesava Mudaliar is concerned, his name was registered as represented by the appellant herein as his legal guardian. In that case it might be that apart from the Full Bench decision, for the purpose of the Estates Land Act, it would be competent for the appellant to tender a patta or initiate proceedings for sale on behalf of his brother as his guardian. That question however does not fall to be decided in these suits because proceedings were taken before 1936. Mr. Rajah Iyer relied on the Common Law rule in England whereby one cosharer can distrain the tenants on behalf of the other cosharer for arrears of rent. The said rule cannot be relied on in the face of the provisions of the Estates Land Act by which the question has to be decided. Under Ss. 77 and 111 of the Act it will be competent for the landholder to proceed against the ryot for the recovery of arrears of rent by the sale of his holding. Both the sections use the expression "landholder" but the singular would include the plural. If there is more than one landholder we must read in the section for the expression "landholder," "landholders." If there is more than one landholder, particularly in this case where the landholder's interest is vested in several sharers, it would not be competent for one landholder to exercise the power of sale or initiate proceedings in regard thereto without the other landholder or landholders being made parties to such proceedings.

Mr. Rajah Iyer pointed out several inconveniences and anomalies which might result by adopting this view. I have to construe the provisions of the statute as they are. Such anomalies have to be met by an amending legislation. I must point out in this connexion that in such cases as the present there apparently appears to be no provision by which one of the cosharers can get himself recognized as a landholder within the meaning of S. 3 (5) of the Act. Taking this specific case the Full Bench of the Madras High Court has held in I. L. R. (1940) Mad. 358[1] that none but a father or mother can be the natural guardian of his or her minor child and therefore unless the appellant gets himself appointed as guardian of his brother under the Guardians and Wards Act he cannot act for his brother. The plain language of S. 3 (5) indicates that the Collector can recognize one person as a landholder if there is more than one landholder only if there is a dispute. Mr. Jagadisa Iyer contends that it is open to the Collector to register a person as a landholder even if there is no dispute between the landholders, but the dispute raised was only by a ryot and he relied upon a decision in 29 I C 31[2] in support of this contention. The case does not lay down any such proposition. The facts are entirely different. To hold in favour of the contention urged by Mr. Jagadisa Iyer would be against the plain language of the section which says that the dispute must be between the landholders. At any rate the section needs an amendment in the interests of the landholders and ryots. In the result on the view I have taken, viz., it is not competent for the appellant to initiate the proceedings to exercise the power of sale under Ss. 111 and 112, Estates Land Act, I dismiss these appeals. But in the circumstances of the case I direct each party to bear his own costs.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 694 and Petn. No. 652 of 1941, Decided on 17th September 1941, to revise order of Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Musiri, in C. C. No. 19 of 1941.

(a) Companies Act (1913), S. 4 (5) — Magistrate finding that he ought not to have taken cognizance of offence under S. 4 (5) — He can drop proceedings.

There is no legal objection to the proceedings being dropped by the Magistrate if he finds that he ought not to have taken cognizance of the offence under S. 4 (5). [P 284c]

(b) Companies Act (1913), S. 4 (5)—S. 4 (5) relates to S. 4 (1) and (2)—Company formed in contravention of S. 4 (2) before S. 4 (5) came into force — Members can be punished for continuing to be members after S. 4 (5) came into force.

Sections 4 (1) and 4 (2) are the only sub-sections to which the wording of S. 4 (5) can be applied. Section 4 (5) does not punish a person for having been a member, prior to its enactment, of an illegal association, company or partnership formed in contravention of S. 4 (2). But S. 4 (5) is applicable to persons who continue to be members of such illegal association, company or partnership after the enactment of S. 4 (5) even though the illegal association, company or partnership was formed before the enactment of S. 4 (5). As there are no provisions to the contrary in the Companies Act, the taking cognizance of an offence under that Act must be governed as in the case of an offence under the Penal Code, by S. 190, Criminal P. C. One of the methods of taking cognizance of an offence is by receiving a complaint of the facts which constitute such an offence. There is no restriction in the terms of S. 190, Criminal P. C., with regard to the person who may lay a complaint. Consequently, a private person can complain where an offence punishable under the Companies Act has been committed. Sections 137, 138, 141 and 141A refer to offences by registered companies and to offences discovered by a particular procedure. ORDER.—This is an application by the accused in C. C. No. 19 of 1941 on the file of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Musiri to quash the proceedings against them. The offence with which they have been charged is under S. 4 (5), Companies Act, with being members of an association formed in contravention of S. 4 (2), which requires that no company of more than 20 persons shall be formed unless it is registered. It is admitted that the company was formed in 1922-1923, at a time when sub-ss. (1) and (2) to S. 4 had been enacted, but not sub-ss. (3) to (5), which were enacted only in 1936. Mr. V. T. Ramaswami Ayyangar for the petitioners has raised three contentions: The first is that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was wrong in holding that he could not drop proceedings when once he had initiated them. The second is that S. 4 (5), which was enacted in 1936, has no retrospective effect and cannot affect the petitioners who formed their association in 1922 or 1923. The third is that the complainant in this case has no locus standi to file a complaint and that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was therefore wrong in taking cognizance of this case on such a complaint. I have not been able to find any legal objection to the proceedings being dropped by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate if he finds that he ought not to have taken cognizance of this offence. The second question is whether the accused are legally punishable for having formed themselves into an illegal body in 1922-1923 when the punitive section did not exist. Section 4 (2), Companies Act, says that:

"No company, association or partnership consisting of more than 20 persons shall be formed for the purpose of carrying on any business that has for its object the acquisition of gain by the company, association or partnership . . . . . unless it is registered as a company under this Act . . . . ."

It cannot be denied that the original members of this association, whether we call it a company or partnership, did an illegal act in forming themselves into this association; and they continued to be members of an illegal body throughout the whole of the period from 1923 to 1936, when sub-ss. (3), (4) and (5) were enacted. They had contravened the provisions of the Act, but they could not be punished for doing so. Sub-section (5) says:

"Any person who is a member of a company, association or partnership, formed in contravention of this section, shall be punishable with fine not exceeding Rs. 1000."

The members of this association cannot therefore be punished under this sub-section for having formed themselves into a company, association, or partnership in contravention of S. 4 (2); but they can be punished for continuing to be members of it. Mr. V. T. Rangaswami Ayyangar's argument that S. 4 (5) has no retrospective effect would have some force if the forming of a company in contravention of S. 4 (2) had been made punishable, for the petitioners had formed the company before it became a crime to do so. There was however nothing to prevent them from resigning from the association as soon as S. 4 (5) was enacted. If they had done so, they could not have been punished for having been members prior to the amendment. Mr. V. T. Rangaswami Ayyangar contends that S. 4 (5) does not relate to S. 4 (2) at all; but Ss. 4 (1) and 4 (2) are the only sub-sections to which the wording of S. 4 (5) could be applied. I therefore cannot agree that, on the facts of the complaint, no offence has been made out.

The remaining question is with regard to the locus standi of the complainant. It is argued that the proper person to institute a complaint is the Registrar of Companies. As there are no provisions to the contrary in the Companies Act, the taking cognizance of an offence under this Act must be governed, as in the case of an offence under the Penal Code, by S. 190, Criminal P. C.; and one of the methods of taking cognizance of an offence is by receiving a complaint of the facts which constitute such an offence. There is no restriction in the terms of S. 190 with regard to the person who may lay a complaint. I respectfully agree with 13 Bom. 600,[1] that the wording of S. 190 leaves no room for doubt on this matter. The Companies Act deals with the question of initiating proceedings only in S. 137 et seq. Section 137 gives power to the Registrar to call for documents from a company and, if he finds on a perusal of them that there is any contravention of the Act, he may report the matter to the Local Government. Under S. 138, Inspectors can be appointed for certain purposes under the Act, and S. 141 makes provision for the reporting to the Local Government of any irregularities discovered by the Inspectors. Then, under S. 141-A, if the Local Government is of opinion upon the report of the Inspector that an offence has been committed, they shall refer the matter to the Advocate-General or the Public Prosecutor, who are empowered under this section to take such steps for the prosecution of the offenders as may be necessary. These sections refer to offences by registered companies and to offences discovered by a particular procedure. They impose no restriction on the manner in which offences may be taken cognizance of. In I. L. R. (1940) 1 Cal. 575,[2] it was held that a private person can complain where an offence punishable under the Companies Act has been committed. My attention has however been drawn to two Notifications of Government—No. 518 dated 6th June 1916 and G. O. Mis. No. 3070 dated 23rd August 1932—published in the Fort Saint, George Gazette which permit the Registrar or the Assistant Registrar to institute prosecutions under the Act for defaults on the part of companies or persons in furnishing returns, documents or notices or for any other non-compliance with the provisions of the Act. These Notifications merely permit the Registrar to do what before was not a part of his duty, viz., to lay complaints. They do not purport to restrict a Magistrate in the exercise of his powers under S. 190, Criminal P. C.

Mr. V. T. Rangaswami Ayyangar argues that even though there may be no legal bar to a Magistrate's taking cognizance of an offence on a private complaint, it is not expedient, that any "Tom, Dick or Harry"—to use Mr. V. T. Rangaswami Ayyangar's words—should be permitted to harass members of companies out of motives of private spite or enmity. That argument might be applied just as well, however, to offences under the Penal Code or any other enactment. I therefore find no reason to quash the proceedings before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and I accordingly dismiss this petition.

MOCKETT J.

In re Karichiappa Goundan —

Appellant.

Criminal Appeal No. 203 of 1941, Decided on 25th April 1941, against conviction and sentence of Court of Session, Coimbatore Division, D/- 18th February 1941.

(a) Penal Code (1860), S. 376—Rape — Proof — Essentials of.

It is an essential part of the proof in rape that there should have been not only an assault but actual penetration. The only witness who can prove that is the woman. In practice, a conviction for rape almost entirely depends on the credibility of the woman so far as the essential ingredients are concerned, the other evidence being merely corroborative. Her testimony is vital in a case where the woman is married and the medical evidence in no way corroborates the charge of rape. The presence of spermatozoa indicating semen found in the woman's genitals or on her saree is by no means final in the case of a married woman.

(b) Penal Code (1860), S. 376 — Rape— Sessions case— Member of Bar should be appointed as amicus curiæ.

It would be well in Sessions Cases in cases of rape, at least in some of them, if the Sessions Judges appointed a member of the Bar as amicus curiæ. [P 287*a*]

G. Gopalaswami — for Appellant.

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

JUDGMENT. — The appellant has been convicted of the offence of rape under S. 376, Penal Code. The woman on whom he is alleged to have committed rape is named Subbammal. She lived at a village Poovanallur which is nine miles from Kangeyam and the offence is said to have been committed on 9th December 1940 at lamp-lighting time, which may approximately be said to be about 6 o'clock. The allegation is that Subbammal had gone to Kangeyam where the shandy was and was returning in the evening when she was raped by the appellant. The learned Sessions Judge has accepted the case for the prosecution, has taken a very grave view of the offence which, he considered was committed with considerable brutality, and sentenced the appellant to rigorous imprisonment for five years and to receive 25 stripes under S. 4, Whipping Act. The occurrence, as I have said, is alleged to have taken place at about, 6 P. M., on 9th December. The first information report reached the police at Kangeyam on the next day at about 7-40 A. M. It is a most important document and I will set it out in full :

"Yesterday while I was returning from the Kangeyam shandy with Meenakshi Ammal, Palani Chetty, Subbaraya Chetty, Palaniswami Goundan and Karichiappa Goundan (appellant)—these also came along with us from the shandy. As we were nearing the itteri to the north of Molapalayam, Samiappa Goundan, his younger brother Ponnuswami Goundan, Sellappa Goundan, Muthuswami Goundan and Sundara Goundan—these were sitting in the itteri. On seeing us they observed : 'Why delay ? Look sharp' and immediately Karichiappa Goundan (appellant) who was coming with us, caught me, pushed me down, untied my saree and threatened to stab if I raised any alarm by showing a knife in his hand. The said Palaniswami Goundan, caught hold of Meenakshi Ammal who was coming along with me. Karichiappa Goundan ravished me and threatened to stab if I did not give up my jewels."

"Palaniswami Goundan, left off Meenakshi Ammal, pushed me down and raped me. Then Karichi Goundan and Palaniswami Goundan these went away to Molapalayam with those five who were sitting in the itteri. We returned to the village. Out of fear we stayed in the village itself for the night and today I came and have reported to you."

So it will be seen that this woman alleged the next day that she was threatened with a knife, robbed of her jewellery and raped by the appellant and that Palaniswami Goundan also raped her. At the Sessions she told another story, a very remarkable story. There her version as P. W. 5 was this : On her return home she passed the appellant at the toddy shop at Sambavalasu. He followed. There were three Chettis in front and she and her sister were walking. The appellant, she said, was walking behind drunk. As they were passing Kannakkankadu, the appellant came in front and told her to stop. As to what happened thereafter this is what she said :

"Then he pushed me down and I shouted out. My sister came towards me but the accused pushed me down on some thorns, pulled up my sari and raped me on the spot. My sister shouted out to the accused and he then threatened to stab her if she remained there much longer. When the accused first struggled with me he showed me a knife and this he showed to the Chettis, P. Ws. 7 and 8, as they came up and they turned tail and went off as soon as they saw it. My sister ran away at the threat and I got up as soon as the accused finished raping."

This is important because those words mean and can only mean that this man had completed the act of intercourse. She proceeds :

"As I was arranging my cloth, the accused caught hold of me and dragged me across the field about 80 yards and again threw me down and raped me. I dared not raise any alarm as he threatened me with the knife. I begged him to let me go, but again he dragged me across the field for about 100 yards, again threw me down and ravished me a third time."

She describes how she went home. Now it will be noticed that there is no word with regard to any robbery, but that she explains. She says that she after getting home that evening reported to her relations and they told her that she must complain of having had her jewels stolen to make her case stronger. That part of her complaint was false. She says she does not remember anything about a second man having ravished her. She had apparently forgotten the relatively minor incident which she described in Ex. G of how Palaniswami Goundan had raped her. At the Sessions the appellant was charged with rape only and Palaniswami Goundan was charged with nothing. The rest of the evidence is as follows : The evidence of P. W. 6 is that she was in this party, that she heard a shout and that she saw her sister being thrown down and that the appellant was on the top of her raping her. She says that the Chettis asked the appellant how he dared to do such a thing, but that he threatened them with a knife and that they at once ran back. These Chettis, who were P. Ws. 7 and 8, are brothers and are cousins of Subbammal. She says that she was threatened not to stay there and so she went back to Malapalayam about ¾ mile, raised an alarm and three Goundans came back with her. They are P. Ws. 9 to 11. The learned Sessions Judge took a very remarkable view in my opinion of this case, because he said that "if the case depended to any great extent on the testimony of this woman, the accused would be entitled to an acquittal since she has shown herself to be largely unworthy of credit by making these false allegations in her complaint."

Now I consider that on that statement alone the appellant was entitled to an acquittal. It is an essential part of the proof in rape that there should have been not only an assault but actual penetration. The only witness who can prove that is the woman. In practice, a conviction for rape almost entirely depends on the credibility of the woman so far as the essential ingredients are concerned, the other evidence being merely corroborative. Her testimony is vital in a case like this where the woman is married and the medical evidence in no way corroborates the charge of rape. There was no violence revealed in the genital organs (which might be natural in a woman of this age who was several times a mother) and the Chemical Examiner's report takes the case no further. Even had there been spermatozoa indicating semen found in the woman's genitals or on her saree, it would have been by no means final in the case of a married woman. The minor injuries found upon her are in my opinion far too trifling to substantiate a charge of rape and cannot be said to lend truth to her story. Taking the evidence therefore at its highest, nothing more was proved than that some form of violence was used to this woman. If her evidence cannot be believed as a whole, it is quite impossible to say that it can be accepted with regard to the vital part, namely, that she was subjected to an act of sexual intercourse against her will. The examination-in-chief which should have elicited those intimate but essential details necessary to prove rape was content to elicit the replies "I was raped, I was ravished." But the case does not rest there. I have had the advantage in this case of an argument from Mr. G. Gopalaswami and also from the Public Prosecutor. Mr. G. Gopalaswami has pointed out a number of defects. It has been pointed out that the first information report mentions one rape by the appellant and one by Palaniswami Goundan, whereas in her evidence she alleges that she herself was raped three times by the appellant and not by Palaniswami at all. It is most unfortunate in this case that this man was not defended, and I notice that no questions were put in cross-examination by the Court with regard to various matters which called for explanation. A lady doctor was examined and so was Dr. P. S. Vaidhyanathan; and I think he might well have been asked whether in his opinion it was possible for a man—a drunken man—to commit the offence of rape three times within a few moments. He was never asked this. The learned Judge, having virtually rejected the chief and vital witness for the prosecution, says that he can accept the evidence of her sister and two of her three companions supported by that of the three Goundans who formed the "rescue party."

Now as to that, the Public Prosecutor who has most properly in the carrying out of his duty indicated that he cannot support this conviction, has emphasised that this woman went with a false story of robbery to the police and that she went accompanied by P. Ws. 6, 7 and 8. He has pointed out that all these people were examined together, and I think it is quite clear that they were acting together throughout. But if there is any question as to whether the evidence of P. Ws. 7 and 8 can be accepted, let us examine their conduct. The woman who had been raped was their cousin. They came upon the scene and saw what must have been a sexual assault or at least an assault. But they say that being threatened with a knife they ran to their village. That possibly is credible, although it does not show a high standard of courage. Having got to their village and having seen their cousin being assaulted, what did they do ? The answer is nothing whatever. But apparently quite casually they went later to P. W. 5's house and were then informed by her—what I decline to believe—that she had been raped three times by the appellant. They themselves reported the matter to no one that afternoon. I consider their evidence wholly unreliable and a fulsome prop to the evidence of the woman who was admittedly telling a false story of robbery and whose evidence on the face of it is incredible. P. Ws. 9 and 10, however, appear to have been relied upon. After hearing that there had been this attack, they went to the scene, saw the appellant there and went back to their village and made no report to any one. I decline to believe that these four persons—P. Ws. 7 to 10—if they had really seen or heard that the woman was being raped by an armed man, would not have made a complaint, if not to the village munsif, at least to some of the villagers and gone out in force to deal with the matter.

* * * * *

Before leaving this case, I should like to express an opinion, namely, that it would be well in Sessions cases in cases of rape—at least in some of them —if the Sessions Judges appointed a member of the Bar as amicus curiae. The Bar have never failed to co-operate with the Bench in matters of that sort. I have to-day had the advantage of Mr. G. Gopalaswami's assistance. Rape has been often described as the easiest charge to make and the most difficult to refute. Experience shows that the conduct of defences in these cases is of special difficulty. In England almost as a matter of practice, unrepresented persons charged with rape and other sexual offences are defended under the Poor Prisoners Defence Act. The reason is that cross-examination is of the utmost importance in order to test the complainant's story, especially when the medical evidence is negative. It is lamentable to see in this case that this inarticulate agriculturist was quite undefended. There was virtually no cross-examination at any time of any of the witnesses; and no questions appear to have been asked by the Court. I consider this conviction was wholly unsustainable. The appeal will be allowed, the conviction and sentence set aside and the appellant released.

In re Peri Rameswara Sarma and others Petitioners.

Criminal Revn. Cases Nos. 698, 699, 700 and Petns. Nos. 656, 657 and 658 of 1941, Decided on 15th October 1941, to revise judgment of Sub-Divisional First Class Magistrate, Amalapuram, in C. A. Nos. 22, 17 and 19 of 1941.

(a) Madras Gaming Act (3 of 1930), Ss. 5 and 10 — Money seized from persons in gaming house—Under S. 5 prosecution need not prove that money was or even intended to be used for gaming—Magistrate can confiscate it if satisfied that it was seized on reasonable suspicion.

Under S. 5 there is no necessity on the part of the prosecution to prove that the money seized from the persons in the gaming house was used or even intended to be used for gaming; because the Police under S. 5 are entitled to seize on reasonable suspicion. The Magistrate, if he considers that the articles were seized on reasonable suspicion, is entitled to order them to be confiscated under S. 10. [P 287*f*,g]

(b) Madras Gaming Act (3 of 1930), S. 5— Person from whom money is seized need not be shown to have been gaming.

The person from whom money is seized under S. 5 need not be shown to have been gaming at that moment; as under S. 5, he may be presumed to have been there for the purpose of gaming. [P 287*h*]

V. Viyanna — for Petitioners.

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

ORDER. — The petitioners were found in a common gaming house and all of them with the exception of the 14th—and possibly of the 28th—accused, were found gaming. At the time of the search, all the money found on their persons was seized by the police; and the Magistrate ordered the confiscation of all that money. That order was upheld on appeal. These petitions were admitted on the question as to how far the Magistrate was justified in ordering the confiscation of the money found on the persons of the petitioners. Section 5, Madras Gaming Act, authorises the police officer making the search "to seize all instruments of gaming and all monies and securities for money and articles of value reasonably suspected to have been used or intended to be used for the purpose of gaming which are found therein. . . . ."

Under S. 10 of the same Act, the trial Magistrate may order all or any of the articles seized or the proceeds of the same to be forfeited. It is thus seen from these two sections that there is no necessity on the part of the prosecution to prove that the money seized from persons in the gaming house was used or even intended to be used for gaming; because the police are entitled to seize on reasonable suspicion. Where the Magistrate considers that the articles were seized on reasonable suspicion, he is entitled to order them to be confiscated. It is extremely difficult to be sure in any case whether or no money found on a person in a gaming house is intended to be used for purposes of gaming. A man might take a large sum of money in his pocket hoping to win, and therefore to use very little money. Yet he may be prepared, if necessary, to stake the whole of what he has in his possession, rather than leave the gaming house a loser. Both the Magistrates have brought their minds to bear on this question and they were satisfied that all the petitioners intended to use the money found on their persons for the purpose of gaming. I am unable to say that there is no foundation for such a finding. A special plea has been made with regard to accused 14 and 28, who were said not to have been gaming at the time. The judgment discloses that accused 28 was found gaming; but even if he was not, I find it difficult to distinguish the case of these two petitioners from the others. It may be true that they were not gaming at that moment; but under S. 5, they may be presumed to have been there for the purpose of gaming. If so, they may have won that money just before the raid was made or may have intended to play with that money afterwards. Under these circumstances, I do not find any reason to interfere with the very wide discretion which the Magistrate has in a matter of this kind. The petitions are dismissed.

Chali Parambil Ezhuvan Vellappan's son Appu alias Theyyan — Plaintiff — Respondent.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 1157 of 1937, Decided on 7th August 1940, to revise decree of District Munsif, Alathur, in S. C. S. No. 30 of 1937.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 2 (17) — Scope — Adhikari.

An adhikari receiving money towards arrears of revenue comes within the definition of a "public officer." [P 288*d*]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 80 — Scope and object—Suit against person who was public officer at time of cause of action but ceasing to be so at time of suit—Notice is not necessary.

Notice under S. 80 is not necessary in a suit instituted against a person who was at the time of the cause of action a public officer and is sued in respect of his act as such public officer, but has ceased to be a public officer by the time the suit was instituted.

(Object of section explained.) [P 288*c*,e,f]

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 2 (17) — Scope — Person who has ceased to be in Government employ.

There is nothing in the definition of a "public officer" in S. 2 (17) to justify the inference that it includes a person who was once in the employ of Government but is so no longer. [P 288*e*]

S. R. Subramanian — for Petitioner.

K. P. Ramakrishna Aiyar — for Respondent.

ORDER. — This revision petition raises the question whether notice under S. 80, Civil P. C., is necessary in a suit instituted against a person who was at the time of the cause of action a public officer and is sued in respect of his act as such public officer, but has ceased to be a public officer, by the time the suit was instituted. The petitioner was an acting adhikari in which capacity he attached the respondent's land for arrears of revenue. To raise the attachment, the respondent paid a sum of money. The present suit is to recover an amount alleged to be in the hands of the petitioner in excess of the amount due towards revenue. There is no doubt that the petitioner at the time of the receipt of this money came within the definition of a public officer, and that his act in receiving the money from the plaintiff was one which he purported to do in his official capacity. If therefore he is to be made to refund an excess collection, the suit is one which would require notice under S. 80, Civil P. C., if the petitioner was at the time of the suit a public officer. It is however contended that under S. 80 notice is required of a suit against a person who was a public officer at the time of the official act which gave rise to the claim even though he is no longer a public officer when the suit is filed. No authority has been quoted for or against this contention; but I am of opinion that on the plain words of the section, the contention must fail. Granted that the section contemplates an act done by a public officer in his official capacity as forming the basis of a suit for which notice is required, one must remember that the opening words of the section are: "No suit shall be instituted against . . . . . a public officer" and to read those words as including a suit against a person who is not a public officer, but was a public officer at the time of the cause of action would be to extend the section beyond its apparent purport. The object of this section is to give time for a public officer threatened with a suit in respect of his official acts to take the orders of his superiors on the question whether the suit shall or shall not be defended and to get permission to use the services of the law officers of the Crown, if necessary. Such considerations would not ordinarily arise in the case of a person who has ceased to be in the employ of the Government at the time of the suit. There is nothing in the definition of a 'public officer' in S. 2 (17), Civil P. C., to justify the inference that it includes a person who was once in the employ of Government but is so no longer. I am of opinion that the learned District Munsif was right in holding that notice under S. 80 was not necessary in this case. The revision petition is therefore dismissed with costs.

In re Packirisami Pillai—Accused — Appellant.

Criminal Appeal No. 240 of 1941, Decided on 1st September 1941, against order of Court of Session, East Tanjore Division at Negapatam, D/- 8th March 1941.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 162—Statement to police under S. 162 is not substantive evidence—Use of.

A statement made by a witness to the police under S. 162 is not substantive evidence at all and can be used only to contradict statements made during the trial. [P 289*c*]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 172 and 174 — Case diary—Use of—Absence of statement from diary is not in itself evidence that statement was not made — Proper way to prove omission stated.

Where the record made in the case diary does not purport to be either thorough or complete, the absence of a statement in the case diary is not in itself evidence that such a statement was not made. The proper way to prove an omission is to question the police officer who wrote the diary whether a particular statement was made to him. He may be able to say that it was not made to him because he feels sure that if it had been made it would have found a place in the case diary. If he cannot say so, an omission cannot be proved by filing the case diary. [P 289*d*]

V. T. Rangaswami Ayyangar—for Appellant.

A. S. Sivakaminathan for Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

JUDGMENT. — Accused 1 and 2 in the Court of the Sessions Judge of East Tanjore were charged under S. 304 (1), Penal Code, with causing serious injuries to the person of one Sivaswami Servai which led to his death. They were charged under S. 304 (1) and not under S. 302, Penal Code, because the evidence was thought to show that the deceased had given a blow to accused 1 which justified them in causing such injury to the deceased as would be sufficient to prevent him from causing the necessary further injury. Accused 2 was acquitted because the learned Sessions Judge thought that the circumstances of the case made it probable that he was not present at the scene of the offence when the crime was committed. The appellant was sentenced to 18 months' rigorous imprisonment. Accused 3 was charged with abetting the offence under S. 304 (1); but it was found that he had taken no part in the attack on the deceased and had not instigated the appellants. So he too was acquitted. The occurrence is spoken to by many witnesses including P. W. 4, the wife of the deceased P. Ws. 5 to 8, who are persons distantly connected with the deceased and whose stories developed at different stages to such an extent that the learned Sessions Judge thought it not safe to rely on their testimony.

The learned Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that the deceased stabbed accused 1 upon his eye with a penknife before accused 1 stabbed him; but there is no evidence on the record to show that the deceased used such a weapon, save that there was a cut on the eyebrow which was 1½ inches long and ¼ inch deep. This could have been caused by a sharp weapon; but the fact that it was surrounded by a highly contused area makes it more probable that the injury was caused with a blunt weapon. The doctor who examined him (P. W. 2) says that it could have been caused by a blunt weapon. He adds that it could have been caused by a sharp weapon, but presumably in that case the contusion was caused by a separate blow. The circumstance on which the learned Sessions Judge seems to base his conclusion is a statement made by P. W. 6 to the police under S. 162, Criminal P. C., which was filed to contradict a statement of his in the Sessions Court. Such a statement is of course not substantive evidence at all and can be used only to contradict statements made during the trial. However, whether the injury was caused by a small knife or with a stick, matters little. The blow given by the deceased caused a reasonable apprehension that further injury was possible; but the accused clearly exceeded his right of private defence of his person in causing such severe injuries as he did to the deceased. The sentence imposed by the learned Sessions Judge is a very lenient one. The conviction and sentence are therefore affirmed and the appeal dismissed. The learned Sessions Judge filed a number of statements recorded in the case diary to prove omissions. Although in some extreme cases that might be permissible, it was certainly not proper in the present case. The record made in the case diary does not purport to be either thorough or complete. The absence of a statement in the case diary is not in itself evidence that such a statement was not made. The proper way to prove an omission is to question the police officer who wrote the diary whether a particular statement was made to him. He may be able to say that it was not made to him because he feels sure that if it had been made it would have found a place in the case diary. If he cannnot say so, an omission cannot be proved by filing the case diary.

Criminal Misc. Petn. No. 765 of 1941, Decided on 4th July 1941, to quash order of attachment.

Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 87 and 88—Condition precedent to issue of proclamation under S. 87 and attachment under S. 88 stated — Arrest warrant issued — Magistrate informed that accused had already left India — Issue of proclamation under S. 87 and attachment under S. 88 is without jurisdiction.

Before a proclamation under S. 87 or an attachment under S. 88 can be issued, it must be shown that the accused is absconding or concealing himself so that the warrant for his arrest cannot be executed. Where after the issue of the warrant the Magistrate is informed that the accused had already left India before the warrant was issued, the orders for attachment and proclamation are without jurisdiction inasmuch as since the accused could not have known of the warrant which was issued after he had left India he cannot be said to be wilfully absconding knowing of the warrant. [P 289*h*; P 290*a*]

N. Sivaramakrishna Iyer — for Petitioner.

A. S. Sivakaminathan for Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

ORDER.—The Public Prosecutor showed me a copy of the Amin's return on the warrant which was issued for the arrest of accused 2. The return mentions that the Amin was informed that accused 2 had gone to Epoh. Epoh is in the Federated Malay States, and according to the affidavit filed on behalf of the petitioner he left India in March, and that is not contradicted by the complainant in the affidavit which he has filed to-day before me. What is said is that he originally preferred a complaint on 1st February 1941, that the Magistrate forwarded the same to the police for enquiry, that the Court took it on file ultimately and that in the month of April, the complainant got information from the Magistrate that he had already issued notice to the accused on the police report. The complainant states further that on one day which is said by the petitioner's advocate to be 31st May 1941, the complaint was dismissed on the ground that the complainant was absent when called. A fresh complaint was filed on 2nd June 1941, and it is on this fresh complaint that the warrants of attachment and proclamation were issued on 20th June 1941. It is obvious that when the Magistrate was informed that the petitioner had already left India the orders for attachment and proclamation are without jurisdiction, unless he was satisfied that the accused was wilfully absconding, knowing of the warrant. He could not have known of the warrant which was issued after he had left India. When it was clear that the accused had left India in March, it could not possibly be said that he absconded or that he is concealing himself so that the warrant cannot be executed, which is a condition precedent under a S. 87, Criminal P. C., for the issue of a proclamation. It is also a condition precedent for the issue of attachment under S. 88. It was at first said that the petitioner was still in India and that he is concealing himself somewhere in India. If this is so, the action of the Magistrate would be perfectly justified. I asked the complainant whether he would state so in an affidavit, and I gave him an opportunity of stating it in an affidavit. In the affidavit filed by him he has not contradicted the statement made on behalf of the petitioner that he left India in March. Under these circumstances, I hold that the orders of proclamation and attachment are without jurisdiction and as such they are set aside.

In re Swaminatha Ayyar — Petitioner.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 338 of 1941 (Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 321 of 1941), Decided on 23rd September 1941, to revise judgment of Joint Magistrate of Kumbakonam, D/- 18th December 1940.

Madras General Sales Tax Act (9 of 1939), Ss. 15 and 5 — Word "wilfully" in S. 15 does not qualify words "fails to submit a return" — Sale of hand-woven cloth — Licence necessary under rules under Act — Seller not taking out c licence— Subsequent exemption from taxation— Failure to submit return held rendered seller liable to fine.

The word "wilfully" in S. 15 (a) governs only the words "submits an untrue return" and not the words "fails to submit a return." Every person is supposed to know what the law is and if he fails to act in accordance with the law, then he has to suffer the consequences. [P 290*f*]

A seller of hand-woven cloth was convicted under S. 15 in failing to submit a return as required by the provisions of the Act and the rules made thereunder. Under the rules in force at the time when the seller was said to have committed the offence it was necessary for him to get a licence for selling even hand-woven articles. Subsequently, the Government had ordered that it was not necessary for persons selling d only hand-woven material to obtain a licence :

Held that as the rules in force at the time required the seller to submit a return, he was guilty of the offence of which he was charged. [P 290*g*]

Held further that although the seller contravened the provisions of the law, it would have been unnecessary for him to have submitted a return if he had taken out a licence; because he had nothing to enter in the return. If he had taken out a licence, then S. 90, Penal Code, would have covered the offence and he would have been entitled to an acquittal; but as he did not take out a licence, he was bound to submit a return. [P 290*g*]

Held also that as the seller was already in possession of a licence under the Sale of Cloth Act of 1937, all that was necessary for him to do was to take that licence to the assessing authority and get an endorsement on it but he failed to do that. [P 290*e*]

N. Rajagopala Aiyangar — for Petitioner.
A. S. Sivakaminathan, for Public Prosecutor — e for the Crown.

ORDER. — The petitioner has been convicted by the Joint Magistrate of Kumbakonam of an offence punishable under S. 15, Sales Tax Act, in failing to submit a return as required by the provisions of the Act and the rules made thereunder, and he has been sentenced to a fine of Rs. 50. The petitioner deals in hand-woven cloth on which, according to S. 5 of the Act, he is exempted from the taxation laid down in S. 3. Under the rules in force at the time when the petitioner is said to have committed this offence, it was however necessary for him to get a licence for selling even hand-woven articles. As he was already in possession of a licence under the Sale of Cloth Act of 1937, all that was necessary for him to do was to take that licence to the assessing authority and get an endorsement on it. He failed to do so. Since that date the Government have ordered that it is not f necessary for persons selling only hand-woven material to obtain a licence. It is contended that S. 15 does not apply to the petitioner because the petitioner did not know what the rules under the Act were and his failure to submit a return was not wilful. Section 15 (a) runs as follows :

"Any person who wilfully submits an untrue return or fails to submit a return as required by the provisions of this Act .... shall .... be liable to a fine ...."

It is argued that the word 'wilfully' governs the second part of the sub-section as well as the first. If this were so, then very few persons could be made liable for failing to take out a license, because every person would naturally plead that he did not know what was written in the Act or in the rules. Every person is supposed to know what the law is; and if he fails to act in accordance with the law, then he g has to suffer the consequences. A person might inadvertently send in a return which was not strictly correct; but he would not be punished for that if the mistake was due to some error in arithmetic or some cause which did not amount to a 'wilful act' in contravention of the rules. As the rules in force at the time required the petitioner to submit a return (see R. 6), the petitioner was guilty of the offence of which he was charged. Although the petitioner contravened the provisions of the law, it would have been unnecessary for him to have submitted a return if he had taken out a licence; because he had nothing to enter in the return. If he had taken out a licence, then I think S. 90, Penal Code, would have covered this offence and he would have been entitled to an acquittal; but as he did not take out a licence, he was bound to submit a return. It has been pointed out that in the Tamil translation of the h Act it is said that a return need only be sent in if the annual turn-over exceeds Rs. 20,000. As the annual turn-over of the petitioner is only Rs. 11,000, it is argued that he was entitled to rely on the Government translation of the Act and that therefore he committed no offence. There might have been some ground for the argument if the accused had put that forward in the lower Court; but the discovery of the Tamil translation seems to have been the act of his counsel rather than of the accused himself. The actual Act gives Rs. 10,000 as the limit below which a return is unnecessary. As the offence of the petitioner was only a technical one and he would not have been liable for any taxation if he had taken out a licence—which is not now necessary—I reduce the fine from Rs. 50 to Rs. 5. The excess fine paid will be refunded.

Appeal No. 14 of 1940 (converted into C. R. P. No. 1738 of 1941), Decided on 10th October 1941, against order of Sub-Judge, Devakottai, D/- 16th November 1939.

(a) Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), S. 19—Appellate decree passed after Act cannot be scaled down under S. 19.

According to the plain language of S. 19, it would not apply to a decree passed after the commencement of the Act. Consequently, a decree of the appellate Court passed after the commencement of the Act whether in the first instance or in modification or reversal or even in confirmation of the decree of the original Court cannot be scaled down under S. 19 : Case law relied on. [P 291*g*; P 292*e*]

(b) Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), S. 19—Appellate decree passed after Act affirming decree of trial Court passed before Act—Appellate Court's decree supersedes lower Court's decree—Decree to be executed is decree of appellate Court and not of Court below — Application under S. 19 should be made to appellate Court.

The final decree in the appeal is the final decree in the suit, whether that be one confirming, varying or reversing the decree of the Court of first instance, and the decree to be executed is the decree of the appellate Court and not the decree of the Court below : 11 All. 267 (F.B.); 15 Mad. 170; 18 Mad. 214 (F.B.); 32 All. 295 (P.C.) and 26 Mad. 91, Rel. on. [P 293*a*]

Consequently, the words "Court which passed a decree" in S. 19 cannot, in the case of a decree of the appellate Court, be said to mean the Court of first instance but must be taken to mean the appellate Court. [P 292*f*]

When the decree of the trial Court passed before the Act is affirmed in appeal after the Act came into force no doubt before the appeal is decided an application to the trial Court under S. 19 is competent, but if before the application is disposed of, the decree is passed by the appellate Court, the latter decree becomes final and the application to the lower Court becomes infructuous. Even if the debt has been scaled down before the appeal is decided, it is the duty of either party to bring the fact before or at the hearing of the appellate Court either by way of appeal or otherwise so that the appellate Court might pass the appropriate decree. To avoid anomalies and multiplicity of proceedings, a party ought to make the application to the appellate Court for the relief he is entitled to under an enactment which came subsequent to the passing of the decree of the original Court and get the necessary relief in accordance with that enactment, before the appellate decree is passed, because once a decree is passed it is not open to a Court to amend or review a decree except under Section 152 or O. 47, R. 1, Civil P. C. The relief under the Madras Act cannot be brought under any of those sections. Therefore the party runs the risk of losing the benefit under the Act if he does not urge before the appellate Court the plea which the new enactment gives him or if he has already obtained a decree in the first Court, he fails to bring it to its notice : 24 Mad. 1 (P. C.), Ref.; ('39) 26 A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 483, Disting. [P 293*b*, c, d]

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 41, R. 33 — Appellate Court — Powers of — New Act passed pending appeal — Appellate Court can pass decree in accordance with Act.

The authority of an appellate Court is not limited to determining the question whether the original Court was right according to the law in force at the time of its judgment. It is entitled to pass such a decree as would be in accordance with any later enactment which came into operation subsequent to such date : ('18) 5 A.I.R. 1918 Mad. 1299, Rel. on. [P 293*b*]

V. Ramaswami Ayyar — for Appellants.

T. M. Krishnaswami Ayyar and T. K. Sundararaman — for Respondent.

VENKATARAMANA RAO J. — This civil miscellaneous appeal, which was later converted into a civil revision petition, arises out of an application filed under Sec. 19, Madras Agriculturists Relief Act, for scaling down a debt due by the petitioner in respect whereof a decree was passed on 18th September 1935 by the Sub-Court of Devakottai and confirmed by the High Court on 28th February 1939. The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the application on the ground that though the petitioners are agriculturists within the meaning of the Act, they are not entitled to the benefits thereunder because they have been assessed to property or house tax within two years immediately preceding 1st October 1937 within the meaning of S. 3, cl. (c) of the Act. This view is challenged by the petitioners as unsound. But the learned counsel for the respondent-decree-holder submits that the dismissal of the application could be sustained on the ground that the application under S. 19 was incompetent and the Subordinate Judge of Devakottah had no jurisdiction to grant any relief thereon. His contention is that Sec. 19 of the Act does not apply to decrees passed after the commencement of Madras Act, 4 of 1938, namely, 22nd March 1938, and the appellate decree in this case was passed after the said date, that is, on 28th February 1939, that the said decree has become final and that if the petitioners wanted any relief under the Act, they should have made the application to the appellate Court before the decree was passed by that Court. In support of this contention he relied on the recent decisions of this Court reported in (1940) 2 M.L.J. 202,[1] (1940) 2 M.L.J. 473[2] and (1941) 1 M. L. J. 6[3] Apart from authorities, according to the plain language of S. 19, it would not apply to a decree passed after the commencement of the Act. In (1940) 2 M.L J. 202[1] our learned brothers Wadsworth and Patanjali Sastri JJ., took this view with reference to a decree passed by a trial Court after the commencement of the Act. In that case the suit was brought on 3rd January 1938 and a decree was passed on 18th April 1938. Between these dates the Act came into force that is, on 22nd March 1938. Though the written statement in that case was filed on 30th January 1938, the learned Judges held that it was the obvious duty of the petitioner to make an application to the Court before the passing of the decree claiming relief under the Act and as he had omitted to do so, the decree must be deemed to have become final. The reason is thus stated by Patanjali Sastri J. at p. 204 :

"All available pleas in answer to a claim should be made the subject of enquiry before the Court passes the decree . . . It may be laudable to rehabilitate agriculturists by a compulsory scaling down of their debts but it could be no part of this object to condone and thereby encourage, their laches in the conduct of legal proceedings. On the other hand, having regard to the expropriatory nature of the provisions, Courts should watch with jealous eye attempts to have the scope of the Act extended, under colour of interpretation, beyond what its terms expressly warrant. I am therefore of opinion, reading the Act as a whole, that the word 'decree' in Ss. 7, 8 and 9 must be taken to refer to decrees passed before the commencement of the Act."

This principle was extended by our learned brother Wadsworth J. to a case where a trial Court dismissed the suit but on appeal that decision was reversed by the appellate Court after the Act came into force: vide (1940) 2 M. L. J. 473.[2] He observed thus :

" At the time when the application was made, there was a good deal of difference of opinion on the question whether a decree passed after the Act came into force could be scaled down. That doubt has, I hope, been finally set at rest by our decision reported in (1940) 2 M.L.J. 202.[1] In the light of that decision, it must be held that the application to the lower Court to scale down the appellate Court's decree under S. 19 was not the proper procedure."

In (1941) 1 M. L. J. 6[3] the above principle was extended also to a case where a decree of the trial Court was modified in appeal after the passing of the Act. That was a decision of a Bench and the learned Judges Wadsworth and Patanjali Sastri remarked thus :

" We have held that S. 19, Madras Act 4 of 1938, has no application to decrees passed after the Act came into force, one reason being that any person who has a contention to urge which will affect such a decree must urge it in the pending proceedings and if he does not urge it he must be taken to have waived it. We see no reason to apply a different principle to proceedings in appeal of which the affected party has had notice."

In C. R. P. No. 1667 of 1939 the question again came up with reference to a decree passed by the District Munsif before the commencement of the Act which was confirmed by the Subordinate Judge before the commencement of the Act and which decree was again confirmed by the High Court in second appeal after the commencement of the Act. The appellate decree was passed by our learned brothers Burn and Lakshmana Rao JJ. When the Civil Revision Petition came up for hearing in the first instance before Wadsworth J. he referred it to a Bench on the ground that there was a reservation in the judgment of the appellate Court that the judgment-debtor might avail himself of the provisions of the Agriculturists Relief Act, though the decree did not contain any reservation in that behalf. In the course of the reference Wadsworth J. expressed the view that the principle laid down in the above cases should be applied even to a case where a decree has been confirmed by the appellate Court. He observed thus : " I do not think that it makes any difference, whether the decree is a reversing one or an affirming one." When the matter came up before the Bench, Burn and Lakshmana Rao JJ. they allowed the civil revision petition observing thus :

" Decrees passed after the commencement of Madras Act 4 of 1938 cannot be amended under S. 19 of that Act: vide (1940) 2 M. L. J. 202.[1] The order of the learned District Munsif is therefore wholly without jurisdiction."

It is thus clear that whether the decree of the appellate Court was passed in the first instance or in modification or reversal or confirmation of the decree of the original Court, nevertheless it would be a decree passed after the commencement of the Act and cannot be amended under S. 19 of the Act. If we may say so with respect, we entirely agree with this view as it follows from the plain language of the section. But Mr. Ramaswami Iyer would contend that though this view may be correct in so far as a decree was passed in the first instance by the appellate Court or the original Court's decree was modified or reversed by it, it would not apply to a case where the appellate Court merely confirms the original Court's decree; in the latter case according to him it would only leave the decree of the original Court standing and the only decree to be executed. He further contends that in view of the interpretation placed by Madhavan Nair J. in I.L.R. (1939) Mad. 520[4] on the language "a Court which passed a decree" in S. 19 as meaning even in the case of a decree of the appellate Court the Court of first instance, the application to the Sub-Court in this case was competent. He also contends that, when the Act came into force, his client had a right to apply to the Sub-Court under S. 19 of the Act, that he was not obliged to make an application to the appellate Court, that the debt could have been scaled down by the original Court before the appeal was decided and therefore the said right could not be lost by reason of the confirmation of the decree in appeal. The question is whether these contentions are tenable. Our Court has throughout followed the view taken by Sir John Edge in 11 All. 267[5] :

"In my opinion the effect of S. 579 of the Code (1882) (corresponding to O. 41, R. 35, Civil P. C., 1908) is to cause the decree of the appellate Court to supersede the decree of the Court below even when the decree of the appellate Court is one which merely affirms that decree and does not reverse it or modify it. In my opinion the only decree that can be amended is the decree to be executed, and the decree to be executed is the decree of the appellate Court and not the decree of the Court below."

It is this view that was followed in 15 Mad. 170[6] and later affirmed by the Full Bench in 18 Mad. 214,[7] which has since been followed. I may point out that this view was later approved by the Privy Council: vide 32 All 295.[8] As Bhashyam Ayyangar J. explained in 26 Mad. 91[9] :

"When an appeal is preferred from a decree of a Court of first instance, the suit is continued in the Court of appeal and re-heard either in whole or in part, according as the whole suit is litigated again in the Court of appeal or only a part of it. The final decree in the appeal will thus be the final decree in the suit, whether that be one confirming, varying or reversing the decree of the Court of first instance."

The contention that the decree of the original Court when it is confirmed in appeal is still the decree to be executed is thus opposed to principle. In regard to the argument based on the decisions in I.L.R. (1939) Mad. 520[4] and the decisions which followed it, they are distinguishable because the decrees passed by the appellate Court in those cases were before the passing of the Act. We therefore think it unnecessary to go into the correctness of the said decisions which was canvassed during the course of the argument. We shall now deal with the contention raised by Mr. Ramaswami Iyer that his client is not obliged to make an application to the appellate Court. It is no doubt true that before the appeal is decided an application to the trial Court under S. 19 is competent, but if before the application is disposed of, the decree is passed by the appellate Court, the latter decree becomes final and the application to the lower Court becomes infructuous. Even if the debt has been scaled down before the appeal is decided, it is the duty of either party to bring the fact before or at the hearing of the appellate Court either by way of appeal or otherwise so that the appellate Court might pass the appropriate decree. As pointed out in 40 Mad. 818[10] at page 822, the authority of an appellate Court is not limited to determining the question whether the original Court was right according to the law in force at the time of its judgment. It is entitled to pass such a decree as would be in accordance with any later enactment which came into operation subsequent to such date. To avoid anomalies and multiplicity of proceedings a party ought to make the application to the appellate Court for the relief he is entitled to under an enactment which came subsequent to the passing of the decree of the original Court and get the necessary relief in accordance with that enactment. The pendency of the appeal suspends the finality of the decree of the original Court and before a final decree is passed by it, all the relief which a party is entitled to and which would have been given by the original Court had the later enactment been in existence on the date on which it passed the decree should be urged before the appellate decree is passed, because once a decree is passed as pointed out by the Privy Council in 24 Mad. 1[11] at page 10, it is not open to a Court to amend or review a decree except under S. 152 or O. 47, R. 1, Civil P.C. And the relief under the Act cannot be brought under any of those sections. Therefore the party runs the risk of losing the benefit under the Act if he does not urge before the appellate Court the plea which the new enactment gives him or if he has already obtained a decree in the first Court, he fails to bring it to its notice.

We are of opinion that the application to the lower Court was incompetent and on this ground the dismissal of the application was proper. In this view, we think it unnecessary to go into the correctness of the other questions raised and considered by the learned Subordinate Judge. In the result the civil revision petition fails and is dismissed, but as the respondent did not raise any objection to the maintainability of the application in the lower Court, we direct each party to bear his own costs both here and in the Court below.

In re Chillara Seshamma — Petitioner.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 306 and Petn. No. 290 of 1941, Decided on 5th August 1941, to revise judgment of Sub Divisional Magistrate, Kavali, in C. A. No. 24 of 1940.

(a) Madras District Municipalities Act (5 of 1920), Ss. 249 and 313 — Whether place of sale is coffee-house—Test—Building with considerable accommodation – Regular meals served—All paraphernalia of coffee-house found in building—Building is coffee house.

It must be a question of fact to be decided in each case whether the circumstances under which the coffee is sold will indicate that the place of sale was a coffee-house or not. A person may, for example, sell cups of coffee from a phial having no seating accommodation under circumstances which may indicate that the phial could not be called a coffee-house. Where all the usual paraphernalia of a coffee-house is found in a person's building in which there is considerable accommodation and regular meals are served, the building must be regarded as a coffee-house : 51 M.L.J. (S.N.) 96, Ref. [P 294a]

(b) Madras District Municipalities Act (5 of 1920), Ss. 249 and 313 — Building licensed as meals hotel — Whether coffee also can be sold without further license (Quære).

Whether a person who is licensed to use a building as a meals hotel is entitled to sell coffee also without a further licence in the same building. [P 294a]

S. Suryaprakasam — for Petitioner.

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

ORDER. — The petitioner has been convicted for not taking out a licence for a coffee-house and that conviction has been upheld on appeal. She has been fined Rs. 5 and been ordered to pay the licence fee of Rs. 6. This revision case was admitted by my learned brother Lakshmana Rao J. because at the time when this petition came up for admission he was shown a short-notes report of a decision by Coutts-Trotter C. J. and Srinivasa Ayyangar J. in Cri. R. C. No. 556 of 1926 reported at p. 96, short notes of 51, M.L.J. I called for the judgment in question. It is a very short one, and it is not very clear from the judgment why it was held that the petitioner in that case was not conducting a coffee hotel. However, in Criminal Revision Case No. 557 of 1926, which was heard with it and in which the facts were very similar, it was held that there was no ground for holding that the Magistrate was wrong in coming to the conclusion that the petitioner in that case did keep a coffee-house. The distinction would seem to lie in the formality or informality under which the coffee or tea was sold. It must be a question of fact to be decided in each case whether the circumstances under which the coffee is sold will indicate that the place of sale was a coffee-house or not. A person may, for example, sell cups of coffee from a phial having no seating accommodation under circumstances which may indicate that the phial could not be called a coffee-house. In the present case, it is not denied that all the usual paraphernalia of a coffee house was found in the petitioner's building. There was considerable accommodation and regular meals were served.

It has been argued, rather as an afterthought, I think, that since the petitioner was licenced to use the same building as what is described as a meals hotel, she must be entitled to sell coffee also without a further licence. The learned Public Prosecutor thinks that if coffee were served with full meals she might not require a licence, but that if she sells coffee with lighter refreshments, then she would require a licence. It is rather difficult to draw a distinction of this kind; but as the matter comes here only in revision, I do not think it necessary for me to express any opinion on this question which was not raised in the lower Court. I am not prepared to interfere on that ground. The petition is accordingly dismissed.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 977 of 1938, Decided on 27th November 1940, to revise order of Dist. Court, West Tanjore, D/- 14th April 1938.

(a) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 53— Transfer not in good faith — S. 53 applies even if insolvent had no intention to defeat creditors.

Under S. 53 there must be both good faith and valuable consideration. If there is want of good faith the fact that valuable consideration has passed will not save the transaction. If lack of good faith is proved it is sufficient to enable the Court to pass the order annulling the transaction. The fact that the insolvent and his fellow conspirators may not have had in mind that the transaction would operate to defeat his creditors and acted merely with the object of putting the property beyond the reach of the insolvent's son does not make the transaction any the less a fraud on the creditors. What the Court has to consider is whether the transaction comes within the four corners of S. 53, and if it does, the Court has the power to set it aside. [P 295*a*,b]

(b) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 53— Setting aside transaction on application of Official Receiver—Effect.

In setting aside a transaction on the application of the Official Receiver, the Court is placing the property at the disposal of the Official Receiver for the benefit of the creditors. [P 295*c*]

(c) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 75— New point — Point raised in trial Court and in memorandum of appeal but dropped in appellate Court—Such point affecting person not party to revision petition cannot be allowed to be raised in revision.

In a proper case the High Court may allow a point of law not taken below to be raised under S. 75; but where the petitioner in a revision before the High Court has raised a certain point in the trial Court and in the memorandum of appeal but has dropped it in the appellate Court, and such a point affects his minor son who is not a party to the petition, the High Court will not allow such point to be raised, more especially where the petitioner has been a party to a conspiracy to defraud his son. [P 295*c*,d]

T. K. Sundararaman — for Petitioner.

A. Swaminatha Aiyar and S. Thyagaraja Aiyar — for Respondent.

LEACH C. J. — This application arises out of insolvency proceedings in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tanjore. On 27th October 1931, V. Ry. Badranandaji alias Vasudeva Sahib, was adjudicated an insolvent on his own petition, which had been filed on 11th March 1930 The insolvent is a son of an illegitimate son of the late Rajah of Tanjore and as the result of the suit which came up on appeal to this Court in 48 Mad. 1[1] and eventually went to the Privy Council, he became entitled to a considerable share in what is known as the Tanjore Palace Estate So far as the insolvent is concerned, his share was finally decided by the judgment of this Court, which was delivered on 21st January 1924. According to the District Judge of West Tanjore whose order is the subject-matter of this application for revision the insolvent is a man of depraved tastes and has merely led a life of pleasure. It has been established in the present proceedings that in 1928, he was living with a mistress named Ammanna. Ammanna had a daughter, who was the mistress of the petitioner, a Nattukottai Chettiar. On 12th March 1928, the insolvent conveyed the whole of his interest in the Palace Estate to the petitioner. By the same deed he purported to convey to the petitioner the interest of his son, who is a minor. This transfer took place within two years of the petition for adjudication. Respondent 1, who is the Official Receiver, applied to the Subordinate Judge of Tanjore for an order setting aside the transaction under the provisions of S. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act. The application was allowed and on appeal to the District Judge the Subordinate Judge's decision was confirmed. It has been found that the transfer of the insolvent's interest in the Palace Estate to the petitioner was the result of a conspiracy between the insolvent his mistress and the petitioner to defeat the insolvent's son for the benefit of the insolvent's mistress, and the petition falls to be dealt with on that basis. The Subordinate Judge set aside the transaction of 12th March 1928 in its entirety and his order was in no way limited by the District Judge. The petitioner has asked this Court to set aside the District Judge's order under the revisional powers conferred upon the Court by S. 75, Provincial Insolvency Act.

The petitioner has raised three contentions. In the first place he says that, although the transaction was mala fide so far as the son was concerned, that does not make it void as against the creditors and that the parties had no intention of defeating the creditors. In these circumstances it is said that an application will not lie under S. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act. In the second place the petitioner says that assuming the transaction falls within S. 53 it can only be set aside when the annulment will bring relief to the creditors. The third contention is that the Court has no power to set aside the transaction so far as it concerns the minor's share in the property. The first contention is really answered by the reading of S. 53. That section says that any transfer of property, not being a transfer made before and in consideration of marriage, or made in favour of a purchaser or incumbrancer in good faith and for valuable consideration, shall, if the transferor is adjudged insolvent on a petition presented within two years after the date of the transfer, be voidable as against the receiver and may be annulled by the Court. Therefore, there must be both good faith, and valuable consideration. If there is want of good faith, the fact that valuable consideration has passed will not save the transaction. The lack of good faith has been proved and this was sufficient to enable the Court to pass the order annulling the transaction. It may be mentioned, however, that only part of the consideration passed. The fact that the insolvent and his fellow conspirators may not have had in mind that the transaction would operate to defeat his creditors and acted merely with the object of putting the property beyond the reach of the son for the benefit of his father's mistress does not make the transaction any the less a fraud on the creditors. The insolvent admittedly owed large sums of money and was unable to pay his debts. In transferring the property he was defeating his creditors. But what the Court has to consider is whether the transaction comes within the four corners of S. 53, and if it does the Court has the power to set it aside.

There is no substance in the second contention and it was not pressed below. The transaction is clearly one which can be set aside under S. 53 and in setting it aside the Court is giving relief to the insolvent's creditors. The Court is placing the property at the disposal of the Official Receiver for the benefit of the creditors. We are not prepared to allow the petitioner to raise the third contention. It was mentioned in the petitioner's affidavit in the trial Court and in the memorandum of appeal to the District Court, but it is obvious that it was dropped in the Courts below because their judgments are silent on the question. The minor has not been a party to this petition and as the point was not taken below we cannot allow the petitioner to ask that the position should be altered to the minor's disadvantage in his absence. In a proper case the Court may allow a point of law not taken below to be raised under S. 75, Provincial Insolvency Act, but this is not a case in which we consider the discretion should be exercised in favour of the petitioner. He has been a party to a conspiracy to defraud the insolvent's son and as he did not press this point either before the Subordinate Judge or the District Judge he will not be allowed to take it here in an application for revision. The result is that the petition fails and will be dismissed with costs in favour of the Official Receiver.

In re Ammu Pujary — Appellant.

Criminal Appeal No. 433 of 1941, Decided on 1st October 1941, against order of Court of Session, South Kanara Division, in C. C. No. 19 of 1941.

(a) Penal Code (1860), S. 97 — Accused while apprehending further violence from his assailant committing violence upon him — Right of self-defence is established.

When an accused person commits an act of violence upon another person in circumstances which prove that he is apprehending further violence from that person, nothing further need be proved to establish that the accused is acting in the exercise of his right of self-defence. When circumstances show that unmistakably, it is wrong to throw upon the accused the burden of proving that he had in fact consciously exercised his right of self-defence when he used his knife. Of course situations may arise in which in spite of the fact that some violence is being used against an offender, he regards that violence as negligible and acts with the deliberate intention of killing, and without any intention at all of defending himself. [P 295*h*; P 296*a*]

(b) Penal Code (1860), S. 97 — Murder — Onus is on accused to show circumstances justifying his causing death.

In the case of a charge of murder it is for the accused to make out that circumstances existed which would justify his causing the death of the deceased. [P 296*b*]

Public Prosecutor — for the Crown.

KING J. — The appellant has appealed from jail against his conviction by the learned Sessions Judge of South Canara on two charges, one for the murder of the deceased Giriappa and secondly, for causing hurt by a dangerous weapon to P. W. 3. The learned Judge in convicting the appellant of murder has held that he did not kill Giriappa in exercising the right of private defence. It seems to us that the learned Judge's reasoning in regard to this part of the case is open to much criticism. The learned Judge concedes in para. 11 of his judgment that according to the case for the prosecution itself, facts were established which gave the appellant the right of private defence. The facts were that the deceased had struck him with a stick and was prepared to strike him a second time and the learned Judge held that there were grounds for his apprehending that he would be hurt. But in paras. 11 and 12, the learned Judge unduly stresses the proposition that the appellant must prove that he bona fide believed that he was about to be killed or to suffer grievous hurt before he can plead the right of private defence at all. This mistaken view is repeated at the conclusion of para. 13 ; and in para. 15 the learned Judge in analysing the situation does so, so subtly as to require the appellant to prove that he had what he calls the "problem" of self-defence before his mind and that with that "problem" in view, he deliberately took the action he did in order to save his life. By this kind of reasoning the learned Judge has of course excluded any possibility of consideration of a plea that the appellant was justified in defending himself but had exceeded his right of self-defence and therefore his offence might be reduced from the offence of murder to that of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. We desire to make it clear that, when an accused person commits an act of violence upon another person in circumstances which prove that he is apprehending further violence from that person, nothing further need be proved to establish that the accused is acting in the exercise of his right of self-defence. Circumstances themselves show that unmistakably, and the learned Judge is wrong in throwing upon the accused the burden of proving that he had in fact consciously exercised his right of self-defence when he used his knife. Of course situations are conceivable in which, in spite of the fact that some violence is being used against an offender, he regards that violence as negligible and he acts with the deliberate intention of killing, and a without any intention at all of defending himself. But these circumstances have not been made out in the present case. It is clear from the evidence that physically speaking the deceased was a more robust man than the appellant. It is clear that he used a fairly stout stick in order to beat him and threaten him. One can only therefore make the natural presumption that, when the appellant took out his knife and stabbed the deceased, he was doing so in order to prevent his receiving any further injuries himself.

The question then arises whether the appellant was so far justified in his action as to be entitled to an acquittal or whether his offence amounts to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. We are unable to hold that the appellant has made out any facts sufficient to show that he was justified in caus ing death. His case was that he received blows b upon the head but none of the prosecution witnesses admits any such fact. They speak of the one blow delivered by the deceased as falling upon the appellant's person or body. The appellant was medically examined on 15th January which was nine days after the offence and there were no marks of any injuries then found upon him. It seems clear from that fact that no serious blow can have been inflicted upon him by the deceased. It is of course for the appellant to make out that circumstances existed which would justify his causing the death of the deceased. This, in our opinion, he has quite failed to make out. On the other hand, as we have already pointed out, the circumstances which are held to have been proved by the learned Judge himself according to the evidence for the prosecution show beyond doubt that in using his knife the appellant must have been acting in the exercise of his right c of self-defence, and must have exceeded that right because all that he could reasonably have apprehended was the infliction upon himself of simple hurt. In these circumstances we set aside the conviction for murder and convict the appellant instead of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and for this offence sentence him to rigorous imprisonment for five years. The conviction and sentence under S. 324, Penal Code, are confirmed and we order that the sentences shall run concurrently.

WADSWORTH J. — This appeal is preferred against an order allowing an application under S. 23 of Madras Act, 4 of 1938. No appeal lies but a petition has been filed to convert the appeal into a civil revision petition. We have allowed that petition subject to payment of the deficient court-fee and have treated the appeal as a civil revision petition. The decree which gave rise to the sale was passed in a suit on a simple mortgage dated 17th May 1928. The suit was filed in 1934. While the suit was pending the mortgagor sold the equity of redemption to defendant 8 and the sale deed recites that the sale was subject to a usufructuary mortgage in favour of defendant 6. The preliminary decree was passed on 7th March 1935. Subsequently, there was a final decree and certain items were sold before Act 4 of 1938 was operative. On 17th November 1937, the decree-holder brought to sale items 4 and 5 and purchased them himself. On 20th June 1938, that is to say, within the period allowed under S. 23 of the Act, the mortgagor applied under S. 23 to set aside the sale of these items. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the mortgagor being an agriculturist by reason of the ownership of other lands, had an interest in the land sold and was entitled to apply on the basis that S. 23 does not require that the applicant must have had an interest in the land sold either on 1st October 1937, or thereafter. This view of the law requires modification in the light of our decision in C. M. A. Nos. 255 and 258 of 1939. In the judgment in that case, we observed that the clause "where in execution of any decree any immovable property in which an agriculturist had an interest has been sold" contemplates the existence of an interest owned by an agriculturist at the time of the sale. We also held that it was not necessary that the judgment-debtor who applied to the Court on the basis that he was an agriculturist entitled to the benefits of the Act should be the same agriculturist as the person who had an interest at the time of the sale. It follows from this decision that the basis of the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is to some extent incorrect.

The respondent here, the mortgagor, has sought to support the decision on two different grounds; firstly, he has contended that since the mortgagor as a judgment-debtor has a right to redeem the mortgage, this right of redemption, subsisting on the date of the court auction sale, is an interest in the property sold We cannot accept this contention. Whatever may be the position in the case of a decree on a usufructuary mortgage or a mortgage by conditional sale, on the facts of the present case, the most that the mortgagor could get by redeeming the mortgage would be a right to the return of the mortgage deed with an endorsement of discharge and the delivery of the title deeds of the land, which he would then have to hold as a trustee for his vendee. We cannot accept the contention that such a right connotes an interest in the property sufficient to satisfy cl. (1) in S. 23 of Act 4 of 1938. The case in 40 M.L.J. 497[1] which has been cited by the respondent has no bearing on the present facts.

The second contention is that, granting that there must be an agriculturist with an interest in the property sold at the time of the sale, defendant 6 is such a person. It appears from the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge that the sale by the mortgagor to defendant 8 was subject to usufructuary mortgage in favour of defendant 6. Defendant 6 was impleaded in the suit and he appeared by an advocate. The decree recites that he was impleaded as a person claiming a right to enjoyment of the mortgaged property. We do not know what was the extent of defendant 6's usufructuary mortgage nor whether it was subsisting at the time of the sale; nor has it been established that defendant 6 is an agriculturist The lower Court however proceeds on the assumption that defendant 6's usufructuary mortgage was subsisting and if so, since the land in question is agricultural land he would prima facie be an agriculturist unless disqualified under one of the provisos to S. 3 (ii) and it would be incumbent upon the decree-holder to establish the disqualification. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that this Court is not justified in instituting an inquiry into the question of defendant 6's status and interest in the absence of a specific averment in the application that defendant 6 had at the time of the sale such an interest as would provide a basis for the application by the mortgagor. In fact the application contains no express averment as to the existence of an interest in any agriculturist at the time of the sale and in the lower Court it does not appear to have been realised that this was a matter of any importance The applicant having succeeded on the basis of his general contention, that as the mortgagor of the property and the judgment debtor he himself had such an interest as would entitle him to maintain the application and that contention having been negatived by this Court, it does not seem to us right to refuse to the applicant an opportunity to establish a subsidiary contention upon which he could have fallen back in the lower Court had the lower Court rejected his main contention More especially is it desirable to show this amount of latitude in view of the fact that at the time when this application was heard by the trial Court there was a very considerable doubt as to the precise effect of the words used in the opening portion of S. 23. In the result therefore treating this appeal as a revision petition we allow the petition and set aside the order of the trial Court and remand the application for fresh disposal directing the lower Court to take such evidence as may be tendered regarding the existence of an interest in favour of defendant 6 at the time of the Court sale in these items and the question of the agriculturist status of defendant 6. Costs in this Court will abide the result.

ORDER. — The account starting in 1933 has a series of settlements, each giving rise to a fresh principal. The lower Court has given a decree on the basis of the last settlement with interest thereafter at five per cent. on the amount so settled under S. 9 of Act 4 of 1938. This is correct. Unless a debt falling under S. 9 relates back to a debt incurred before 1st October 1932 so as to invoke the provisions of S. 8, there is nothing in S. 9 to justify the re-opening of settlements or the re appropriation of payments on the basis of a hypothetical original principal. Civil Revn. Petn. No. 678 of 1940, Decided on 13th October 1941, to revise decree of Sub-Judge, Ottapalam, D/- 25th November 1939.

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938), S. 8 — Member of Hindu joint family joining with manager in renewal of note executed by manager alone is also entitled to scale down debt under S. 8.

For the purpose of a renewal under the explanation to S. 8 there must be a substantial identity of the debt and of the parties. If an individual or family is a party to a succession of documents, one renewing the other and there is no break in the real identity of the debt, as by partition, that individual or family can scale down the debt even though others may have been parties at one stage or another to the different documents. When there is a debt due from a joint family acknowledged by the execution of promissory notes by different coparceners, each is in fact on behalf of the family renewing a liability by which the family was bound under the previous documents executed by other coparceners. Although when it comes to the execution of the decree, the coparcener's personal properties may only be liable if he has personally signed the bond, he is in fact signing as a coparcener and as a coparcener he has been liable through the whole series of bonds. Looked at in this way, it does not seem to be practicable to treat the coparcener who signs for the family as a different person incurring a different liability from the other coparceners who are bound by the debt, although in fact the actual executant of the bond may suffer a decree against his personal properties in addition to the joint family properties. Therefore where a member of a Hindu joint family joins with the manager in the renewal of a note executed by the manager, such member is entitled under explanation to S. 8 to trace back his liability to the original principal advanced and to scale down the debt under S. 8 : ('41) 28 A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 202 and ('41) 28 A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 356, Rel. on.

K. P. Raman Menon — for Petitioner.

P. Govinda Menon — for Respondent.

ORDER. — The petitioner was defendant 2 in a small cause suit filed on a promissory note dated 25th April 1936, executed by defendant 2 himself and by his father defendant 1. This promissory note can be traced back to four earlier notes all executed by defendant 1 alone for himself and for the family of which he was the manager. The parties are Nambudiri Brahmins. The lower Court has, under Madras Act 4 of 1938, scaled down the debt under S. 8 as against defendant 1 and the joint family assets. Against defendant 2 personally the Court has given a decree based on the suit promissory note with interest reduced under the provisions of S. 9. Defendant 2 contends that on the basis of the previous decisions of this Court, he having been bound as a member of the joint family by the earlier notes, is entitled under the explanation to S. 8 to trace back his liability to the original principal advanced in 1924 and to scale down the debt under S. 8. The lower Court has not given any reasons for treating the liability of defendant 2 differently from the liability of the joint family but it has been contended by Mr. Govinda Menon for the respondent that the decision is correct for the following reasons. Under the Act, an undivided Hindu family is a person. So long as we are concerned only with the liability of the family it does not matter how that family may have been represented in the various documents succeeding each other, so long as there is a single debt and the same person, namely, the joint family, is the debtor. But it is contended that, when an individual coparcener makes himself personally liable for a joint family debt, it must be deemed that there are two liabilities due from two persons, one the liability due from the joint family person and the other the liability due from the individual person; and it is therefore contended that, when the individual person only becomes liable under the last note executed in 1936, he in his individual capacity, is entitled to relief only under S. 9 and not under S. 8.

There is a certain plausibility in this reasoning but we have come to the conclusion that not only does it run counter to the view taken by implication in a considerable number of our decisions, but also it is not the correct way of looking at the matter having regard to the principles laid down in the Act. We have of course recognised that for the purpose of a renewal under the explanation to S. 8 there must be a substantial identity of the debt and of the parties If an individual or family is a party to a succession of documents, one renewing the other, and there is no break in the real identity of the debt, as by partition, we have recognised that that individual or family can scale down the debt even though others may have been parties at one stage or another to the different documents. When we have a debt due from a joint family acknowledged by the execution of promissory notes by different coparceners, each is in fact on behalf of the family renewing a liability by which the family was bound under the previous documents executed by other coparceners. Although when it comes to the execution of the decree, the coparcener's personal properties may only be liable if he has personally signed the bond, he is in fact signing as a coparcener and as a coparcener he has been liable through the whole series of bonds. Looked at in this way, it does not seem to be practicable to treat the coparcener who signs for the family as a different person incurring a different liability from the other coparceners who are bound by the debt, although in fact the actual executant of the bond may suffer a decree against his personal properties in addition to the joint family properties. This is the view which we have taken in a large number of cases, although the point has not been previously argued as it has been put before us to-day. Instances of such cases may be found in (1940) 2 M.L.J. 786[1] and (1941) 1 M.L.J. 39.[2]

These decisions have been followed in many more decisions which have not been reported and it seems to us that very clear reasons would be necessary to justify us in departing from the principle underlying these decisions.

It has been argued that this case stands on a different footing because the defendants are Nambudiries belonging to a community in which until 1933 property was ordinarily impartible and in which a junior coparcener could not oridinarily bind the family. It does not seem to us that these considerations really affect the present case, for the manager of the family was a party to all the notes and defendant 2 signed in addition to the manager, probably as a matter of more abundant caution at the instance of the creditor. In the result we must allow this civil revision petition and modify the lower Court's decree so as to make defendant 2 personally liable only to the same extent as defendant 1. The petitioner will be entitled to his costs in revision.

Second Appeal No. 863 of 1940, Decided on 27th October 1941, against decree of Sub-Judge, Coimbatore, in A. S. No. 6 of 1939.

Contract Act (1872 as amended in 1930), Ss. 148, 178-A and 178 - Goods entrusted for safe custody—Pledge by depositee is invalid.

The amendment of 1930 has not effected any change in the law as to the right of a gratuitous bailee or a person entrusted with the goods for a specific purpose. Entrusting a person with goods for safe custody is a species of bailment. [P 300*c*,e]

Where it is only a case of safe custody, the pawnor has no title at all voidable or valid nor "juridical possession" as opposed to bare custody. If the contract of bailment is valid, he gets only a right to be in custody and if it is voidable for reasons mentioned in Ss. 19 and 19-A, Contract Act, even then, it cannot come under S. 178-A, because it is not a case of the pawnor's getting a defective title or 'possession.' Nor is S. 178 applicable as it is confined to cases of mercantile agents. [P 300*b*,e]

Consequently, the old rule that a person cannot give to another a title higher than what he himself has and which is subject to certain exceptions embodied in Ss. 178 and 178-A continues to apply and the goods entrusted for safe custody cannot be the subject of a valid pledge by the depositee : 4 Cal. 497 ; 24 Bom. 458 ; 27 Mad. 424 ; ('22) 9 A. JUDGMENT. — The question in this second appeal is whether after the Contract Amendment Act of 1930 which came into force on 1st July of that year, jewels entrusted for safe custody can be the subject of a valid pledge by the depositee. The lower appellate Court found that the respondent bank took the pledge bona fide and without any notice of the defect in the title of the pawnor and that the pledge is valid. The second appeal is filed by the owners of the jewels. The appellants contend that the pawnor is not entitled to create a valid pledge in respect of the jewels which were merely entrusted for safe custody. It is urged by the respondent that having regard to the amendment of the various sections, the prior decisions of this and the other High Courts that a pledge made under such circumstances is not valid do not apply to cases arising after the amendment. The relevant sections old and new are :

NEW	OLD
178. Where a mercantile agent is, with the consent of the owner, in possession of goods or the documents of title to goods, any pledge made by him, when acting in the ordinary course of business of a mercantile agent, shall be as valid as if he were expressly authorised by the owner of the goods to make the same : provided that the pawnee acts in good faith and has not at the time of the pledge notice that the pawnor has not authority to pledge.	178. A person who is in possession of any goods, or of any bill of lading, dock warrant, ware house keeper's certificate, or warrant or order for delivery, or any other document of title to goods may make a valid pledge of such goods or document:
178-A. Where the pawnor has obtained possession of the goods pledged by him under a contract voidable under S. 19 or S. 19-A, but the contract has not been rescinded at the time of the pledge, the pawnee acquires a good title to the goods, provided he acts in good faith and without notice of the pawnor's defect of title.	Provided that the pawnee acts in good faith, and under circumstances which are not such as to raise a reasonable presumption, that the pawnor is acting improperly.
	Provided also that such goods or documents have not been obtained from the lawful owner or from any person in lawful custody of them by means of an offence or fraud.

It is found by both the lower Courts that the jewels were entrusted for safe custody to the pawnor and the lower appellate Court finds that the pawnee, i.e., the bank took the pledge in good faith. On these facts, is the pledge valid ? Sections 178 and 178-A after amendment correspond to S. 178 before amendment. Section 178 as it stood before the amendment in so far as it relates to our case said this :

" A person who is in possession of any goods may make a valid pledge of such goods provided that the pawnee acts in good faith and under circumstances which are not such as to raise a reasonable presumption that the pawnor is acting improperly; provided also that such goods have not been obtained from their lawful owner, or from any person in lawful custody of them by means of an offence or fraud."

The case of a servant being in custody of the goods of the master, 4 Cal. 497,[1] the case of a wife being in custody of the goods of the husband, 24 Bom. 458,[2] at p. 464, the case of a person getting possession under an agreement of hire, 27 Mad. 424[3] and 45 Mad. 173,[4] and the case of a person to whom goods were entrusted for safe custody 11 Bom. 704,[5] came up for consideration before the amendment and the decisions held that in such cases the persons who pawned them had no possession in law treating the expression 'possession' as that which an owner has in his goods. They held that mere physical custody is not 'juridical' possession which is contemplated by S. 178: see 24 Bom. 458.[2] Now the position has been made clear by the new Ss. 178 and 178-A. New S. 178 is confined to cases of mercantile agents. S. 178-A says that if the pawnor obtains possession of the goods under a contract which is voidable under S. 19 or 19 A, Contract Act, then, a pledge by him would be valid if the pledgee had no notice of the want of defect of titles provided also that the contract had not been rescinded at the time of the pledge. Thus, S. 178-A applies to cases where the pawnor obtained possession of the goods under a contract which is bad under Ss. 19 and 19-A, Contract Act. Here it is not a case where the pawnor obtained possession of the goods under a contract which is voidable for coercion, misrepresentation, fraud or undue influence which are the four categories provided for by Ss. 19 and 19-A. In the cases not covered by S. 178-A, the old rule that a person cannot give his alience a title higher than what he himself has continues to apply. The ordinary rule is that a person cannot give to another person a title higher than what he himself has That rule is subject to certain exceptions which are embodied in Ss. 178 and 178-A. Section 178 does not apply because it is confined to cases of mercantile agents. Section 178-A does not apply because possession of the goods was not obtained under a contract which is voidable under Ss. 19 and 19 A for coercion, undue influence, fraud or misrepresentation.

It was urged that by the recent amendment the Legislature extended to bona fide pledgees protection even in cases where possession of the goods was obtained under a voidable contract and that this assumes that where the goods were obtained under a valid contract, the pledge must be a fortiori valid. The argument is put thus: where the pawnor gets the goods by practising fraud, misrepresentation or undue influence, the pledge is valid provided the further conditions laid down by the section are fulfilled Why then is the pledge invalid where he got possession under a contract and which is not open to any of the above infirmative circumstances? Entrusting a person with goods for safe custody is a species of bailment. Bailment is a contract under S. 148, Contract Act. If the contract of bailment is vitiated by fraud or misrepresentation or undue influence, even then the goods can be the subject of a valid pledge. If so, it is urged that it must be so in a case where the contract of bailment under which the goods were obtained by the pawnor is not open to any of the infirmative circumstances just mentioned. This argument assumes that if the contract of bailment is vitiated under Ss. 19 or 19-A, the pawnor can create a valid pledge. The pawnor does not get possession he gets only bare custody A person in custody of goods under a contract of bailment of this kind would still continue to be under the same disability as before. Further, the wording of Sec. 178-A appears to indicate that by reason of the contract which is bad for fraud, undue influence etc, the pawnor should obtain title to the goods and possession thereof in the strict sense, i. e., juridical possession such that an owner has. Section 178-A says that where the pawnor has obtained possession of the goods under a voidable contract, a pawnee gets a good title provided the pledgee acts in good faith and without notice of the pawnor's defect of title. This means that but for the fraud, coercion, misrepresentation or undue influence, the pawnor would have got a perfectly valid title. Where it is only a case of safe custody, the pawnor had no title at all voidable or valid nor 'juridical possession' as opposed to bare custody. If this contract of bailment is valid, he gets only a right to be in custody and if it is voidable for reasons mentioned in Ss. 19 and 19-A, Contract Act, even then, it cannot come under S. 178-A, because it is not a case of the pawnor's getting a defective title or 'possession' as explained above. As Messrs Pollock and Mulla have pointed out in the latest edition (Edn. 6) on pp. 550 and 551, the result is the same both before and after the amendment in the case of a gratuitous bailee or of a person who is entrusted with the goods for a specific purpose.

I hold that the lower appellate Court is wrong in the view that it has taken that the pledge is valid. The decree of the lower appellate Court is therefore reversed and that of the District Munsif restored with costs here and in the lower appellate Court. The order of the District Munsif as to costs of that Court will stand. The jewels will be returned to defendants 2 to 5. Leave refused.

Second Appeal No. 409 of 1940, Decided on 7th November 1941, against decree of Dist. Court, Tinnevelly, D/- 27th October 1939.

(a) Hindu law—Adoption—Validity—Consent of majority of sapindas is not always necessary —Sapindas of equal grade—Two out of six consenting—Others' refusal actuated by improper motives—Adoption is valid.

The consent of the majority of the sapindas is not always essential for the validity of an adoption. It is not a question of majority or minority. A mere numerical majority, whether in favour of or against an adoption, will not by itself determine the question. Adoption being a proper act it will be presumed that when the majority give their consent such assent was given on bona fide grounds. But where the majority refuse, it is open to the widow to prove that the refusal was actuated by improper motives. When the majority give or withhold their assent from improper considerations, such assent or dissent will be of no avail to the party relying on it. [P 301*e*, f]

Consequently, where only two out of the six sapindas of equal grade give their consent to the adoption and it is found that the withholding of their consent by the rest was actuated by improper motives, the adoption is valid: 23 Mad. 486 and 26 Mad. 627, Rel. on. [P 301*d*, e, f]

 (b) Hindu law—Adoption — Joint family—Widow has no inherent power to adopt—Husband's authority not given—Widow must seek consent of sapindas within joint family — Sole male member minor or lunatic—Widow cannot adopt with consent of divided sapindas.

In Madras, the widow of a deceased member of a joint Hindu family has no inherent power to make an adoption. If the husband did not give his authority and the widow has to get the consent of the sapindas it is only within the joint family that she must seek the requisite assent. Where there are no sapindas either agnates or cognates to give the requisite authority or where the only sapinda in existence refuses to give his consent though improperly, a the widow cannot ignore that refusal though improper, and act upon the consent of a divided kinsman and therefore in such a case she cannot make a valid adoption at all. Even where the sole male member of the joint family is a lunatic or a minor, she has no right to travel outside the joint family and make an adoption with the consent of the divided sapindas: ('40) 27 A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 950, Rel. on; Case law discussed. [P 302*g*; P 303*c*,d]

JUDGMENT. — This case raises a very important question whether the widow of a deceased member of a Hindu joint family can make a valid adoption to her husband with the consent of the b divided sapindas when there is only one coparcener alive who by reason of mental infirmity is not in a position to give or withhold his consent. Plaintiff had a brother Sethuramalingam Pillai who died on 6th January 1926 leaving two widows, defendants 1 and 2 and a daughter defendant 3. At that time the father of the plaintiff and Sethuramalingam Pillai was alive and he died in July 1926 leaving a widow defendant 6 in the suit. Defendants 1 and 2 adopted defendant 4 with the consent of certain divided sapindas of their husband on 11th December 1930. At that time, it is common ground that the plaintiff was suffering from some mental infirmity. Paragraph 8 of the plaint states that from the beginning of the year 1926, the plaintiff was not in a sound state of mind and para 10 states that since the beginning of the year 1931 the plaintiff completely recovered from the unsound state of mind from which he had been c suffering for about five years. The trial Court (the Subordinate Judge of Tinnevelly) held that the plaintiff was from January 1926 to January 1931 so totally devoid of his senses as to disqualify him from inheriting his father's properties. On appeal the District Judge confirmed the finding of the trial Court that the appellant was insane at the time of the adoption. The plaintiff being the only coparcener and his state of mind being such as has been found by both the lower Courts, the question is whether the adoption made by defendants 1 and 2 with the consent of divided sapindas is valid in law. There were six divided sapindas and two of them gave their consent and the remaining four wrote refusing to give their consent. The six agnatic relations were of equal degree of relationship being the sons of the plaintiff's grandfather's brothers.

The main reason given by the four reversioners d for withholding their consent is, as stated in the replies, that the plaintiff was in proper senses and that therefore there was no necessity for an adoption. This has been found by both the lower Courts to be false and that at the time when their assent was sought, the plaintiff was actually insane. For this reason both the lower Courts have held that the refusal by the four dissenting sapindas was actuated by improper motives. I have gone through the several replies and I agree with the lower Courts that the reasons given for withholding their consent are wholly improper Thus, we are left with the consent of two persons whose consent is beyond any attack. On the authority of the decisions of this Court in 23 Mad. 486[1] and 26 Mad. 627[2] the adoption would be valid notwithstanding four out of the six sapindas of equal grade withholding their consent because e their refusal was actuated by improper motives. In a case of this kind it is not a question of majority or minority. If the majority of the sapindas consent, then there will be a presumption in favour of the consent being bona fide. But where the majority refuse, it cannot be said that it is not open to the widow to prove that the refusal was actuated by improper motives. On p. 488 in 23 Mad. 486[1] Subramania Ayyar J. says this :

" It should, at the same time, be borne in mind that a mere numerical majority, whether in favour of or against an adoption, will not by itself determine the question. Adoption being a proper act it will be presumed that when the majority give their consent such assent was given on bona fide grounds. If however it be shown that the majority give or withhold their assent from improper considerations, such assent or dissent will be of no avail to the f party relying on it."

In 26 Mad, 627[2] Benson and Bhashyam Ayyangar JJ. referred to the above observations with approval. It is urged by the learned advocate for the appellant that a widow can make an adoption only if she gets the consent of the majority of the sapindas and where, as in this case, she has not been able to get the consent of the majority, the adoption is not valid. I do not agree with the contention. No decision has been brought to my notice which says that the consent of the majority of the sapindas is always essential for the validity of an adoption. I therefore hold that the adoption is not invalid on this ground.

The next and the most important question is whether defendants 1 and 2 were entitled to get the consent of the divided agnates for the reason that the plaintiff was at the time of the adoption mentally g defective and not in a position to give or withhold his consent. It is urged for the appellant that the Judicial Committee has definitely laid down that in the case of joint families, the widow of a deceased coparcener must seek the requisite authority within that family. If the husband himself gave his authority, she might adopt. But if the husband did not give his authority and the widow has to get the consent of the sapindas, it is urged that it is only within the joint family that she must seek the requisite assent. Mr. Viswanatha Sastri urges that as the joint family continues even when one male member exists, a widow cannot make an adoption unless she gets the consent of that person and that if that person refuses his consent even though for improper reasons, she cannot travel outside the joint family and seek the authority of divided sapindas. His next proposition is that even where the sole h male member of the joint family is a lunatic or a minor, she has no right to travel outside the joint family and make an adoption with the consent of the divided sapindas. 12 M.I.A. 397[3] at pp. 441 and 442 was a case of a divided family but the Judicial Committee stated the law as to the case of a joint family in the following terms :

"The question who are the kinsmen whose assent will supply the want of positive authority from the deceased husband, is the first to suggest itself. Where the husband's family is in the normal condition of a Hindu family—i. e., undivided—that question is of comparatively easy solution. In such a case, the widow, under the law of all the Schools which admit this disputed power of adoption, takes a no interest in her husband's share of the joint estate, except a right to maintenance. And though the father of the husband, if alive, might, as the head of the family and the natural guardian of the widow, be competent by his sole assent to authorize an adoption by her, yet, if there be no father, the consent of all the brothers, who, in default of adoption, would take the husband's share, would probably be required, since it would be unjust to allow the widow to defeat their interest by introducing a new coparcener against their will."

The case of a joint family came up for decision before the Judicial Committee in 1 Mad. 69.[4] There the widow of the holder of an impartible estate ignored the husband's coparcener and got the consent of a divided sapinda. She also set up the written authority of the husband. The Judicial Committee held in favour of the written authority and upheld b the adoption. But they laid down the law on the subject having regard to the way in which Hollaway J. treated the question in the High Court. At page 81 they say this :

"Positive authority does not do more than establish that, according to the law of Madras, which in this respect is something intermediate between the stricter law of Bengal and the wider law of Bombay, a widow, not having her husband's permission, may adopt a son to him, if duly authorized by his kindred. If it were necessary, which in this case it is not, to decide the point, their Lordships would be unwilling to dissent from the principle recognized by the Travancore case, viz., that the requisite authority is, in the case of an undivided family, to be sought within that family. The joint and undivided family is the normal condition of Hindu society. An undivided Hindu family is ordinarily c joint not only in estate, but in food and worship, therefore, not only the concerns of the joint property, but whatever relates to their commensality and their religious duties and observances, must be regulated by its members, or by the manager to whom they have expressly or by implication delegated the task of regulation. The Hindu wife upon her marriage passes into and becomes a member of that family. It is upon that family, that as a widow, she has her claim for maintenance. It is in that family that, in the strict contemplation of law, she ought to reside. It is in the members of that family that she must presumably find such counsellors and protectors as the law makes requisite for her. There seems to be strong reasons against the conclusion that, for such a purpose as that now under consideration, she can at her will travel out of that undivided family and obtain the authorization required from a separated d and remote kinsman of her husband."

In 41 Mad. 998,[5] Mr. Ameer Ali delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee referring to the Ramnad case, 12 M.I.A. 397,[3] says this at p. 1009 :

"That the requisite authority in the case of an undivided family is to be sought by the widow within that family ; that it is in the members of that family that she must presumably find such counsellors and protectors as the law makes requisite for her ; and that she cannot at her will travel out of that undivided family and obtain the authorization required from separate and remote kinsmen of her husband."

Dealing with a case of joint family in Bombay where a widow has inherent power to make an e adoption, after referring to the case in 12 M. I. A. 397[3] and the decisions in Madras, the Judicial Committee said this in 57 Bom. 157[6] at p. 172 :

"The board held that the consent to be obtained, when the family was undivided, must be the consent not of a separated kinsman who had no interest in the property, but of his (the husband's) coparceners to whom his interest had passed on his death by survivorship, and it was in this connexion that the observations of the board quoted above were made."

The learned advocate for the respondents does not dispute the general proposition that ordinarily in the case of a joint family, the authority must be sought within that family. He urges, however, that where the sole surviving male member is a lunatic and therefore incapable of giving his consent, his very existence must be ignored and that she can in f that case go outside the family and get the consent of the divided sapindas. He relies upon certain observations of the Judicial Committee in 43 Mad. 650[7] at p. 654. After referring to the case in 41 Mad. 998[5] they said this :

"This does not mean that the consent of a near sapinda who is incapable of forming a judgment on the matter, such as a minor or a lunatic, is either sufficient or necessary; nor does it exclude the view that, where a near relative is clearly proved to be actuated by corrupt or malicious motives, his dissent may be disregarded. Nor does it contemplate cases where the nearest sapinda happens to be in a distant country and it is impossible without great difficulty to obtain his consent, or where he is a convict or suffering a term of imprisonment. The consent required is that of a substantial majority of those agnates nearest in relationship who are capable of g forming an intelligent and honest judgment on the matter."

These remarks were made with reference to divided family and hence they are of no assistance to a case where in a joint family the male members are either minors or persons who by reason of their defective mental capacity are unable to form an intelligent opinion on the question whether a new coparcener should be introduced by the widow making an adoption. This question is not covered by direct authority but it has been held that a widow has no inherent power to make an adoption and that therefore where there are no sapindas, either agnates or cognates to give the requisite authority or where the only sapinda in existence refuses to give his consent though improperly, she cannot make a valid adoption at all. This had been decided by a Bench h of this Court in (1940) 1 M L.J. 779[8] and in so doing the learned Judges relied upon the observations of the Judicial Committee in I.L.R. (1938) Mad. 551[9] at p. 560. The Judicial Committee there say :

"Their Lordships would not be prepared to hold on the authorities that the only kinsmen whose assent need be sought are the agnates, nor is there any evidence as to what sapindas of Irrudalaya were in existence at the date of the Rani's adoption. Their Lordships think moreover that it would be equally difficult for them to hold that under the Madras law there would be any residuary power in the widow to adopt in the absence of sapindas, but the contention was so clearly abandoned in India that it is not necessary to consider it further."

There the contention had been abandoned in the lower Courts and therefore the Judicial Committee after making the above observations did not make a definite pronouncement. The question however directly arose for decision in (1940) 1 M.L.J. 779.[8] There, there was only one sapinda and he refused to give his consent and his refusal was found to be improper and yet the adoption was held to be invalid. Thus, a widow has no inherent power to make an adoption in a case where the only sapinda improperly refuses to give his consent. In the case of a joint family, if the only surviving coparcener is an adult free from any mental defect and refuses to give his consent though improperly, it seems to me, that a widow of a deceased coparcener cannot ignore that refusal though improper, and act upon the consent of a divided kinsman. This is the view expressed in Mayne's Hindu law, Edn. 10 at p. 219 :

"There is however the distinction that in the case of a joint family, adoption would mean the introduction of a new coparcener into the joint family. On principle it would seem she can adopt with the assent of a substantial majority of the coparceners in the family. But it is fairly clear that even where the coparceners improperly refuse their assent, she will not be entitled to adopt with the assent of her husband's divided kinsmen, as it would be introducing into the joint family a coparcener against their will."

There are grave reasons why a widow ought not to be allowed to travel outside the joint family even when the surviving members are minors or persons incapable of giving their consent by reason of mental defect. As in this case, the person who is mentally defective may recover. In fact, in this case he recovered within a few months after the adoption. In the case where the sole coparcener is a minor, his rights ought not to be affected by the action of a divided kinsman. If, as the Judicial Committee stated, the fact that their right in the joint family property is affected by the introduction of a stranger into the family is the reason for directing a widow to seek the requisite assent within the joint family, then, it stands to reason that where, for instance, the sole surviving member is a minor, his rights ought not to be affected by the consent given by a divided kinsman. So also in the case where the sole member is mentally defective. Inherent power in a widow being ruled out, the position of defendants 1 and 2 in this case is no better and no worse than that of the widow in (1940) 1 M. L. J. 779.[8] I therefore hold that the adoption of defendant 4 by defendants 1 and 2 is invalid for want of requisite authority. The decisions of the lower Courts are reversed and a decree is given in favour of the plaintiff. Under the circumstances of this case, each party will bear his or her own costs throughout. Leave to appeal is granted. At the time when I delivered the judgment, it was not noticed that there are other issues in the suit which have to be tried before a decree is given as prayed for. Therefore, the proper order to pass is to reverse the decrees of the lower Courts and to send the case back to the trial Court for trying the other issues and to pass an appropriate decree. Court-fee paid on the second appeal will be refunded. As directed already each party will bear its own costs upto date. Costs of further proceedings will be provided for by the lower Court.

Second Appeal No. 989 of 1939, Decided on 12th December 1941, against decree of Sub-Judge, Chittoor, in A. S. No. 59 of 1938.

Limitation Act (1908), Art. 49 — Plaintiff entrusting specific moveable property to defendant on understanding that it would be returned —Suit to recover property or value—Limitation starts on defendant's refusal to return property.

Where the plaintiff entrusts specific moveable property to the defendant on the understanding that the same would be returned to the plaintiff, limitation for a suit for the return of the property or its value starts when the defendant's possession becomes unlawful. The defendant's possession in such a case being permissive to start with, cannot become unlawful unless there is at least a refusal on the part of the defendant to return the property. A mere demand by the plaintiff will not be enough. Until the defendant asserts title in himself or until he refuses to return the property his possession does not become unlawful. Mere silence on demand being made does not constitute such refusal: 35 Mad. 636, Rel. on. [P 304*e*, g]

A. Viswanatha Ayyar — for Appellant.

V. T. Rangaswami Ayyangar and K. Ramaswami Ayyangar — for Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff whose suit for the recovery of certain empty Standard Oil Company four gallon drums or their value has been dismissed by the lower appellate Court is the appellant in this second appeal. The defendant, while admitting that he received these drums, pleaded that he had returned the drums. Both the lower Courts disbelieved this plea and held that the defendant had not returned any of the drums. The suit has been dismissed by the lower appellate Court on the ground that it is barred by limitation under Art. 49, Limitation Act. That Article runs thus :

"Suit for other specific moveable property, or for compensation for wrongfully taking or injuring or wrongfully detaining the same.	Three years.	When the property is wrongfully taken or injured, or when the detainer's possession becomes unlawful."

In this case the plaint alleged that specific moveable property was to be returned and that that was the understanding. The prayer is for the return of these drums. Then it was alleged that the defendant was wrongfully detaining them. Therefore, on the allegations in the plaint limitation would start when the defendant's possession became unlawful. a The lower appellate Court held that possession became unlawful when demand was made by the plaintiff six months after the drums were given. The drums were given in 1928. The demand was made in the early part of 1929 and the drums were not given. That the defendant's possession became unlawful in 1929 is the view of the lower appellate Court. In this Court, in addition to supporting this view of the lower Court, Mr. V. T. Rangaswami Iyengar, the learned advocate for the respondent, has put forward another point, namely, that the suit was not for the recovery of specific moveable property or for compensation for wrongfully detaining the same. He says that it could not have been in the contemplation of the parties that the very same drums should be returned and that the suit is really for the recovery of similar drums or for their value. If this contention is accepted, Art. 49 would not b apply. The plaintiff made a distinct allegation in the plaint that the contract was that the defendant who took by way of loan 203 empty Standard Oil Company four gallon drums did so on the understanding and undertaking that they would be returned to the plaintiff after use by the defendant. This allegation makes it clear that the very same drums were to be returned. In the written statement as the defendant took up the stand that he had returned all the drums, he contented himself with saying that the allegations in para 3 of the plaint are incorrect. There is no plea that, even if they were not returned, the contract was that identical drums were not to be returned but only drums of similar quality.

The plaintiff examined himself and deposed that, after the defendant became the agent he wanted c some empty drums for his use, that he gave the drums and that the arrangement was that the defendant should return the drums to him whenever they were required. It is clear that the plaintiff's evidence is that the very drums should be returned. There was no cross-examination on this point. Advantage is taken of a statement in the evidence of the plaintiff's clerk that the defendant was to return drums of similar nature. It appears to me that what the witness meant is that if he had done it, probably there would have been no trouble in plaintiff accepting them. Any way having regard to the fact that the plaintiff's statement was not challenged in cross-examination, I am not prepared to accept the statement of the clerk in cross-examination. On the pleadings and on the evidence of the plaintiff, I hold that the suit is for the recovery of specific moveable property. I may also mention that this aspect was not suggested in the lower Courts and both the lower d Courts proceeded on the footing that specific articles were to be returned and that, when on demand the defendant did not return them forthwith, his possession became unlawful. So, we have to see whether the view of the lower appellate Court that when there was a demand and non-compliance, the defendant's possession became unlawful is correct.

In this case the evidence is that about six months after the entrustment there was a demand and that the defendant did not return the drums. The plaintiff says that shortly before the suit and before the registered notice Ex. H was given, he made oral demands and that the defendant was promising to return them. He was cross-examined on this point and was asked on how many occasions he made the demand and whether he mentioned the 203 drums in all these demands. Here again there is no cross-examination specifically on the point whether the defendant did not promise to return the drums. Even apart from this promise to return the drums, e I am of opinion that in a case of this kind the defendant's possession did not become unlawful until there was a refusal by him to return the drums. He came into possession of the drums with the consent of the plaintiff. It was permissive possession to start with. Permissive possession cannot become unlawful unless there is at least a refusal on the part of the defendant to return the drums. A mere demand by the plaintiff will not be enough. Unless the defendant openly asserts that he was not going to return the drums, his possession cannot be said to be unlawful. This point is in my opinion directly covered by the decision of a Bench of this Court (Benson and Sundara Iyer JJ.) in 35 Mad. 636.[1] There a jewel was handed over to the defendant for raising money by pledging it with a third party. The defendant raised money and advanced it to the plaintiff. f The plaintiff repaid the loan and asked the defendant to return the jewel and the defendant promised to get it and return it. He never refused to return the jewel until two years before the date of the suit. The plaintiff made a written demand for the return of the jewel on 18th August 1904. The defendant's refusal to return the jewel was on 29th April 1906 by means of notice and the suit was instituted on 18th February 1908 within three years of the defendant's refusal but more than three years after the plaintiff's demand. Dealing with the question when the defendant's possession became unlawful the learned Judges say :

"The defendant must be taken to have held possession of the jewel on behalf of the plaintiff until the date of Ex. 3. We are therefore of opinion that under Art. 49, Limitation Act, 1908, the suit is not barred by limitation. We are unable to agree with g Mr. Srinivasa Iyer's contention that mere silence on defendant's part when he received Ex. B would on this account amount to refusal."

They referred to and relied upon the decision of the Calcutta High Court in 12 C. W. N. 1010[2] at p. 1014. Sitting as a single Judge I am bound by this decision. It is unnecessary for me to refer to the Calcutta decision which was followed in the above case or to any other cases. I hold that the defendant's possession which to start with was permissive did not become unlawful until he asserted title in himself or until he refused to return the drums. The refusal was admittedly within three years before the date of suit. I therefore reverse the decree of the lower appellate Court and restore that of the District Munsif with costs here and in the lower appellate Court. The defendant will have two weeks from today to return the drums. Leave to h appeal refused.

Talasani Venkata Reddi — Respondent.

Appeals Nos. 606 and 607 of 1940, Decided on 2nd December 1941, against order of Dist. Court, Anantapur, D/- 6th September 1940.

Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 75 (3)— Recording of finding that Court had jurisdiction is not order within S. 75 (3).

The recording of a mere finding, albeit in a formal manner, that the Court has jurisdiction to entertain an application cannot be deemed to be an order within the meaning of S. 75 (3). A decision upon jurisdiction has only the effect of regulating procedure and where it is not sufficient to dispose of the application, hardly stands on a different footing from a ruling as to the admissibility of a document tendered or the relevancy of a question put and objected to in the course of the trial. Such decisions as to details of procedure and admissibility of evidence may, no doubt, be regarded as orders in a sense but such decisions by themselves are not open to appeal apart from the final decision disposing of the application or matter : 7 M. I. A. 283 (P.C.) ; ('33) 20 A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 500 ; ('36) 23 A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 525 and ('34) 21 A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 194, Rel. on. [P 305*h*]

Consequently, no appeal lies from the decision of the Insolvency Court that it had jurisdiction to entertain the application to scale down the debt under the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act.[P 306*b*]

K. Srinivasa Rao — for Appellants.

V. S. Narasimhachar — for Respondent.

PATANJALI SASTRI J.—These two connected appeals arise out of an application presented to the Court of the District Judge, Anantapur, exercising jurisdiction in insolvency for scaling down the debt due to the appellant in each case in accordance with the provisions of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act. The appellant in C. M. A. No. 606 held a promissory note executed by the insolvent debtor, the respondent in these appeals, and the appellant in C. M. A. No. 607 had obtained a decree against him. Both the creditors had proved their debts but the respondent objected to their payment in full by the Official Receiver on the ground that the debts should be scaled down under the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act. The Official Receiver overruled the objections and paid the full amount of the principal with interest at six per cent. per annum as provided in S. 48 (2), Provincial Insolvency Act. Thereupon the respondent filed I. A. Nos. 21 and 31 of 1939 in the Court below praying that the debts should be scaled down and that the sums paid by the Official Receiver in excess of the amounts due as scaled down should be recovered from the appellants. While these applications were pending, the respondent also applied to the Court for annulment of his adjudication on the ground that all his creditors had been paid in full, and the adjudication was annulled on 31st July 1940. The petitions referred to above were heard on 6th September 1940 on the preliminary objection raised by the appellants that the Insolvency Court had no jurisdiction to scale down the debts under Madras Act 4 of 1938, and the learned Judge pronounced what is styled an "order" holding that the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the applications and posting them for trial on the merits to 23rd September 1940. The appellants have brought these appeals with the leave of this Court challenging the correctness of this decision.

Mr. V. S. Narasimhachariar, the learned counsel for the respondent, has raised a preliminary objection to the maintainability of these appeals on the ground that the so-called order of the lower Court is nothing more than a finding on one of the points arising for determination in the petitions filed by the respondents which still await disposal, and that no appeal lies under S. 75, Provincial Insolvency Act, against a mere finding where it does not lead to or involve a disposal of the matter in which it is made. Sub-s. (3) of that section under which these appeals have been filed provides that a person aggrieved by any order other than those specified in Sch. 1 made by a District Court otherwise than in appeal from an order made by a subordinate Court may appeal to the High Court by leave of the District Court or of the High Court. It is argued for the appellants that the Court below having formally expressed its decision upon one of the points for determination in the applications and issued also a decretal order, there is here an "order" made by a District Court otherwise than in appeal, and that the appeals are therefore competent under the provisions referred to above. Our attention was also called to the definition of "order" in S. 2, cl. (14), Civil P. C., as "formal expression of any decision of a civil Court which is not a decree" and stress was laid on the fact that, while the Code prohibits appeals from orders save as otherwise expressly provided therein (S. 104), S. 75, sub-s. (3) provides for a right of appeal from any original order of a District Court other than those specified in Sch. 1. It was therefore urged that no limitation ought to be placed upon appeals from such orders by reading into the provision any restrictive or qualifying words from consideration of expediency.

While we are sensible of the difficulty of stating in sufficiently clear-cut and definite terms what is and what is not an order for the purposes of S. 75, Provincial Insolvency Act, we are convinced that the recording of a mere finding, albeit in a formal manner, that the Court has jurisdiction to entertain an application cannot be deemed to be an order within the meaning of that section. A decision upon jurisdiction has only the effect of regulating procedure and, where it is not sufficient to dispose of the application, hardly stands on a different footing from a ruling as to the admissibility of a document tendered or the relevancy of a question put and objected to in the course of the trial. Such decisions as to details of procedure and admissibility of evidence may, no doubt, be regarded as orders in a sense but it could not, we apprehend, have been intended that such decisions should by themselves be open to appeal apart from the final decision disposing of the application or matter. The consequence of holding that such decisions are appealable might well be to make them conclusive unless they are displaced in appeals preferred against them by the party who is adversely affected and, as pointed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 7 M. I. A. 283[1] at page 302 nothing would be "more detrimental to the expeditious administration of justice than the establishment of a rule which would impose upon the suitor the necessity of so appealing (i. e., from every interlocutory order) ; whereby on the one hand he might be harassed with endless expense and delay, and on the other inflict upon his opponent similar calamities."

1. (1857-59) 7 M. I. A. 283 : 3 W. R. 45: 1 Suther 325 : 1 Sar. 645 (P.C.), Maharaja Moheshur Singh v. Bengal Government.

A somewhat close analogy is to be found in the decision of this Court in 64 M. L. J. 735[2] where it was held that findings on objections raised by a judgment-debtor in an execution application on the ground of lack of jurisdiction and limitation could not be made the subject of appeal when such finding did not result in the dismissal of the application but led to its adjournment for further hearing. It will be noticed that S. 2 (2), Civil P. C., makes "the determination of any question within S. 47" a "decree" and S. 96 provides that an appeal shall lie from every decree passed by any Court exercising original jurisdiction save where otherwise expressly provided. Notwithstanding this wide language used, this Court (Beasley C. J., and Bardswell J.) held that no appeal lay observing :

"No final order has been passed in execution by the learned Subordinate Judge. He has merely dealt with the two legal objections which were raised in the course of the execution proceedings. By his order he has not stopped execution proceedings from going on. What he has done quite obviously is to make an order that they are to go on to a final determination. In my view, the learned Subordinate Judge has made no order as yet which can be the subject of an appeal."

The position here is similar. The view we have expressed above is also in accord with the decision of the Rangoon High Court in A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 525[3] under S. 8, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act and of the Lahore High Court in A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 194[4] (a case of refusal to frame issues). We therefore uphold the preliminary objection and dismiss these appeals but make no order as to costs as the appellants might well have thought it necessary to file these appeals lest it should subsequently be argued by the respondent that the decision now under appeal has become conclusive.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 156 of 1939, Decided on 17th November 1941, to revise order of Dist. Court, Guntur, D/- 9th September 1938.

Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 6 (e)— Fact of sale of debtor's property in execution of decree is sufficient for purposes of S. 6 (e) — Subsequent setting aside of sale is immaterial —Words "property has been sold in execution of a decree" in S. 6 (e) of Act and O. 21, Rr. 89 and 90, Civil P. C.— Meaning of.

The enumeration of the various acts of insolvency in S. 6 contemplates those acts which in the public eye shake the credit of a debtor and are likely to cause a scramble amongst the creditors for his assets. The words "property has been sold in execution of a decree", in O. 21, Rr. 89 and 90, Civil P. C., refer not to an indefeasible sale, but to a sale which has been actually held but which may be set aside as a result of subsequent proceedings. No greater weight can be given to the words "property has been sold in execution of the decree" in S. 6 (e), Provincial Insolvency Act than they carry in Rr. 89 and 90 of O. 21, Civil P. C., to which S. 6 (e) naturally relates. Consequently, the fact of a sale of the debtor's assets in execution of a decree is enough for purposes of S. 6 (e) and a subsequent deposit whereby the sale is set aside or a subsequent objection founded on some material irregularity resulting in the setting aside of the sale, will not alter the fact that the property was sold in execution of the decree : ('38) 25 A. WADSWORTH J. — The petitioner here was adjudged an insolvent on a creditor's application under S. 9, Provincial Insolvency Act, and the order of adjudication was confirmed in appeal. The civil revision petition challenges the correctness of this appellate order. The grounds on which the adjudication was challenged in the Courts below relate to the subsistence of the debt in favour of the petitioning creditor, having regard to an alleged agreement for sale and also having regard to a possible retrospective operation of Act 4 of 1938. These contentions are not now pressed. The argument before us has been confined to the question whether the judgment of this Court in C. M. A. No. 330 to 332 whereby the court sale which formed the act of insolvency has been set aside, would warrant the cancellation of the order of adjudication. The judgment referred to was passed on 23rd October 1941 so that at the time of the adjudication and also at the time when the appeal to the lower Court was heard, the contention which has been urged before us could not have been advanced. It is argued that there is no act of insolvency when a sale in execution has been held and that sale has not been confirmed or having been confirmed, has been set aside as a result of a deposit under R. 89 of O. 21, Civil P. C.

There appears to be no decided case covering this actual point. Two cases have been quoted, A. I. R. 1938 Lah. 819[1] and A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 564,[2] in which it was held that the date of the sale for the purpose of limitation to an application under S. 9, Provincial Insolvency Act, is not the date of the confirmation, but the date of the actual sale. We have also been referred to (1785-1800) 100 E. R. 33[3] in which it was held that a clear and unequivocal act of bankruptcy such as suspension of payment cannot be explained away by the subsequent circumstance that the creditor was paid. It seems to us that none of these cases really touch the point which we have to decide. Under S. 6 (e), Provincial Insolvency Act, a debtor commits an act of bankruptcy if any of his property has been sold in execution of the decree of any Court for payment of money. Under O. 21, Civil P. C., we find both in R. 89 and in R. 90 the words "where any immovable property has been sold in execution of a decree" used to indicate a sale which has been held and awaits confirmation and one which is liable to be set aside either as a result of a deposit or as a result of an objection to the procedure. That is to say, the words "property has been sold in execution of a decree", when used in O. 21, Civil P. C., refer not to an indefeasible sale, but to a sale which has been actually held but which may be set aside as a result of subsequent proceedings. It seems to us that there is no apparent necessity for giving greater weight to the words in S. 6, Provincial Insolvency Act, than they carry in the relevant rules of O. 21 to which cl. (e) of S. 6, Provincial Insolvency Act, naturally has reference. The enumeration of the various acts of insolvency in S. 6 seems to contemplate those acts which in the public eye shake the credit of a debtor and are likely to cause a scramble amongst the creditors for his assets. The man may actually be solvent, but may still commit an act of insolvency by suffering something to be done which shakes his apparent credit, as when he disappears from his normal dwelling house or hides himself from his creditors or under the corresponding provision of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, suffers some attachment of his property in execution of a decree to subsist for 21 days. All these are outward and visible signs that a man's credit has been shaken and they are circumstances which are likely to cause a panic amongst his creditors. Consequently they justify any creditor in asking the Court to step in and see that there is a fair distribution of the debtor's assests.

Having these considerations in mind it is but natural that the Legislature should lay down as one of the criteria for judging whether a man's ostensible credit has been shaken, the fact of a sale in Court of his assets in execution of a decree. The question whether the sale is eventually set aside for some irregularity or whether the debtor eventually finds it to his interest to deposit the amount of the particular decree is not really material. It is the very fact that his circumstances are sufficiently embarrassed to make him to submit to a sale of his property, which justifies the creditor in asking the Insolvency Court, to take charge of his estate. We have had our attention drawn to a Full Bench decision in I.L.R. (1940) Mad. 441[4] to which we were both parties in which it was held that an adjudication based on an alleged fraudulent preference would necessarily have to be cancelled or annulled on a judicial finding that there was no fraudulent preference. But that decision apart from its being concerned with the question whether the adjudication is to be annulled or not seems to us to depend on quite different considerations. If there is no fraudulent preference, there is no act of insolvency and a judicial finding which binds the parties that there has been no such fraudulent preference, destroys once and for all the basis of the insolvency. But as we read S. 6 (e) when there has in fact been a sale in execution a subsequent deposit whereby the sale is set aside or a subsequent objection founded on some material irregularity resulting in the setting aside of the sale, will not alter the fact that the property was sold in execution of the decree. We do not wish to say anything which will be read as deciding that an insolvency petition could or could not be maintained on the strength of a sale which had been set aside before the insolvency petition was presented; nor do we wish to prejudice any application to annul the adjudication which might be preferred on the basis that the setting aside of the sale is a sufficient reason for the annulment of the insolvency. These are matters with which we are not now concerned. We confine ourselves to holding on the facts of this case that the property of the insolvent has been sold in execution of a decree notwithstanding the fact that this Court in appeal has set aside the sale and we are of opinion that the setting aside of the sale is not a sufficient reason for cancelling the order of adjudication in revision. In this view we dismiss the civil revision petition with costs.

The execution application presented by the decree-holder was returned by the Court to rectify certain defects namely the claim for costs made by the petitioner was obviously in excess of what was actually due to him and certain draft sale papers which had been required to be produced were not produced.

The application, however, was not re-presented within the time fixed by the Court :

Held that the order returning the application for rectification of defects could not be said to be unjustifiable or wrong. [P 310*d*]

Held further that the decree-holder, having failed to comply with the proper order of the Court within the time given to him, could not advance the contention that the application which had been with him throughout should be deemed to be pending. [P 310*e*]

The decree in the suit by the jenmi for the redemption of a kanom was passed in July 1937 before the Act came into force and was only modified by the High Court after the Act came into force by reducing the amount that was decreed in favour of the defendants under S. 6 (2), Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act, after the full set off allowable to the plaintiff in respect of a decree for arrears of rent which at the date of the suit had become time barred had been taken into consideration :

Held that S. 15, Agriculturists Relief Act, not being retrospective in character could have no application. Moreover the only decree that S. 6 (2), Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act, contemplated was one for improvements after the arrears of rent, etc., had been set off. Consequently, the arrears of rent embodied in the decree for which a set off ought to have been allowed by the trial Court would be wiped off in any case and could not be held to have been decreed. Nor could those arrears of rent be regarded as due or payable after the Act came into force. [P 310*h* ; P 311*a*]

Appeal No. 437 of 1938

ABDUR RAHMAN J.—The main question to decide in this appeal relates to the plaintiff's claim for setting off the arrears of the rent due to him by the defendants against the value of improvements found to be payable by the former to the latter. A decree was secured by the plaintiff Devaswom in regard to the arrears of rent but it has become barred by limitation. The properties in suit including certain other items of property, sixty-three in all, belong to the plaintiff Devaswom. They were demised by it on a kanom of Rs. 116 to defendants 1 to 55, who were members of a tarwad, for a period of five years so far as paddy lands were concerned and for a period of twelve years in respect of parambas. It appears that a kuzhikanom deed was executed by the plaintiff Devaswom on 26th February 1917 in favour of one V. Krishnan Nair who was then karnavan of the defendants' tarwad. Since he died without executing a corresponding marupat, the marupat on the basis of which the present suit was instituted, Ex. A was executed by the next karnavan Kunhoonhan Nair and defendant 2 in favour of the plaintiff Devaswom, on 9th June 1917. The plaintiff Devaswom assigned one year's rent. The assignee brought a suit O. S. No. 175 of 1922, obtained a decree, and in execution the tenancy rights of defendants 1 to 55 were sold and purchased by defendant 56. The other defendants who are now in possession are claiming under defendant 56.

The plaintiff Devaswom brought a suit O. S. No. 487 of 1921 for the recovery of rent due for the year 1096 (corresponding to 1920-21) in respect of both paddy lands and parambas and obtained a decree for the same on 17th December 1923. The amount claimed in the suit as rent forms one of the amounts which is being claimed in the present suit. The plaintiff Dewaswom brought another suit O. S. No. 373 of 1922 for rent and for recovery of paddy lands alone, shown as items 33 to 63 in the marupat. This was decreed although items 62 and 63 in the marupat were excluded from the decree on the ground that they were parambas and the suit in regard to them was premature. The items of property which were recovered in the execution of the decree passed in that suit do not form the subject-matter of the present suit. The suit for redemption, out of which the present appeal arises was instituted by the plaintiff Devaswom for the recovery of paramba lands on payment of a kanom of Rs. 116. Arrears of rent amounting to Rs. 6305-6-11 including those for which the decree was passed were asked to be set off against the value of improvements found to be payable to the tenants by the plaintiff. The defendants claimed the value of improvements in excess of the amount claimed by the Devaswom but contended that the arrears of rent for which the decree had been obtained could not be set-off, against the improvements due to them as the decree had become barred by time.

The Subordinate Judge of Tellicherry passed a decree for redemption in favour of the plaintiff Devaswom on payment of the value of improvements due to various defendants detailed in the judgment but accepted the plea advanced by the defendants and refused to allow the set-off to the plaintiff in respect of the amount for which the decree had been obtained. The plaintiffs appeal and the first contention as stated above advanced on their behalf is that they were legally entitled to have the amount of rent covered by the decree in O. S No. 487 of 1921 set-off under S. 6 (2), Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act (I of 1900) against the improvements decreed in favour of the defendants in spite of the fact that the decree in its favour might have been barred by time. It was also contended that the decree passed in O. S. No. 487 of 1921 was not barred by time in fact; but on hearing the learned counsel for the appellants, we were not satisfied that this contention had any force and we did not for reasons which we will give later in this judgment call upon the other side to address us on that point. The third contention advanced on behalf of the appellants was that the improvements in regard to items 44, 64, 66 and 66-A should not have been allowed by the lower Court. This question is discussed in para. 65 of its judgment. Mr. Govinda Menon who appeared in this case on behalf of some of the respondents did not oppose this contention as he said that the clients for whom he was appearing had no concern with this claim made on behalf of the appellant. It was urged in the end that costs should not have been awarded against the plaintiff when it had substantially succeeded in the suit. The last three questions being of minor importance, we would like to address ourselves to start with on the first question that is by far the most important one to be determined in this appeal.

In view of the decisions of this Court in 7 Mad. 545,[1] 8 Mad. 381[2] and 8 Mad. 415,[3] it was not disputed that a jenmi was entitled to set off the arrears of rent due to him without any regard to limitation against the kanom amount and the value of improvements. Nor was it, in view of A.I.R. 1927 Mad 189[4] contested that the plaintiff could have lost his right to set off even if a decree for rent had been obtained in its behalf, provided that it had not become barred by time on the date on which the present suit was instituted. But it was contended that if a decree for arrears of rent had been obtained by a jenmi and it is allowed to be barred by time, the jenmi would not retain the right to have it set off against the kanom amount and the value of improvements. The question to decide is whether this contention is correct. Our attention has not been drawn to any decision in which this question had directly arisen for decision but reliance was placed on certain observations of Devadoss J. in A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 189[4] (which were admittedly in the nature of obiter) and of Krishnan J. in a decision by a Division Bench of this Court in 41 Mad. 1043.[5] The question in our view really turns on a correct interpretation of S. 6 (2) which reads as follows :

"If in such a suit the Court finds any sum of money due by the defendant to the plaintiff for rent or otherwise in respect of the tenancy, the Court shall set off such sum against the sum found due under sub-s. (1) and shall pass a decree declaring as the amount payable to him on ejectment the amount (if any) remaining due to the defendant after such set-off."

The words underlined (italicised here) by us are, in our opinion, important and it cannot be reasonably argued that arrears of rent will not remain due even if a decree has been passed in regard to them, but which has remained unsatisfied. There is a great deal of difference between a decree becoming unenforceable in a Court of law by lapse of time and thus making it impossible for a decree-holder to realise his dues by a process of Court and a decree becoming satisfied. Limitation in such cases bars the remedy but does not extinguish the right. The unpaid rent must still be regarded as due although it may not be possible for the person to whom the rent is due to bring a suit again for realising that debt from his debtor. If limitation cannot prevent debt which is uncovered by a decree, from being claimed by a jenmi by way of set-off against the kanom amount and improvements as held in 7 Mad. 545,[1] 8 Mad. 381[2] and 8 Mad. 415,[3] and if the mere passing of a decree, if it is alive, does not, on the ground of merger or any other principle of law, debar a plaintiff, as held in A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 189[4] from getting a set-off under the aforesaid section of the Tenants' Improvements Act, there can be nothing in our opinion, which can be held to debar a plaintiff from getting a set-off in spite of the fact that the decree had become barred by time. It is instructive to compare the words "amount due by the plaintiff to the defendant" in this sub-section with the words "legally recoverable" in O. 8, R. 6, Civil P. C. It has been held that if the defendant's claim is barred by the law of limitation at the date of suit it cannot be pleaded by way of set-off under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure; but the Courts have in construing that section confined that rule to a legal set-off merely, while in cases of equitable set-off claimed by a defendant no such exception has been engrafted for the simple reason that in granting equitable set off the Court is not necessarily confined to the limits introduced in O. 8, R. 6, Civil P. C. The ordinary cases between lessors and lessees may be different. It has been held in a Madras case, 39 Mad. 939,[6] that it was not open to a lessee to claim by way of equitable set off an unliquidated claim for damages which was barred at the date of suit. The same rule cannot however be applied to a kanom where the landlord is declared bound by the statute to pay for improvements effected by the tenant during the period of his tenancy which is usually 12 years and a tenant has to be made liable to pay the whole of the rent due by him to his landlord before a decree declaring the amount payable to him for improvements can be passed only after the set-off for rent in respect of the tenancy has been allowed to the landlord. We are aware of the dictum of Devadoss J. in A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 189,[4] where he said that a decree that was barred by limitation could not be set off but we really see no reason or principle on which, in view of the clear words of S. 6 (2), Tenants' Improvements Act, it can be supported. Reliance was placed by Mr. Govinda Menon on the observations of Krishnan J. in 41 Mad. 1043[5] where that learned Judge accepted the principle of the American law given by Jones in S. 936 of his treatise on Mortgages which was to the effect that :

"The merger of the note in a judgment does not extinguish the debt and the mortgage continues a lien till it is satisfied or the judgment is barred by statute of limitation."

The other learned Judge Mr. Justice Phillips constituting the Division Bench was not however prepared to go to that extent. He observed as follows :

"It would appear that under American law the respondent's contention is correct (vide Jones on Mortgages, S. 936) but the position is not so clear either in English or Indian law, for, it would appear from a passage in 21 Halsbury 325 that the original charge would still remain unless the decree became satisfied and it is questionable whether a decree that has become barred by limitation is on the same footing as a decree that has been satisfied."

Since there was no question of set off in 41 Mad.

a 1043[5] such as is being claimed by the plaintiffs in the present suit, it is unnecessary in the circumstances to consider Krishnan J.s observations more closely. The decision in that case can be no authority for the contention that if the decree for rent had been obtained the amount decreed would cease to be due as rent under the Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act even if the decree is barred by limitation. In our opinion, the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 16 Cal. 307[7] goes to show that there could have been no merger in spite of the decree having been passed in favour of the mortgagee for certain interest so as to preclude him from claiming the same amount in a redemption suit instituted against him subsequently by the mortgagor. The judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council may have been, as remarked by the learned Judges in 20 All. 401[8] at p. 407 very brief; but the summary of the decision of the Judicial b Commissioner against which the appeal was taken to the Privy Council given in the facts of that case and the argument addressed to their Lordships of the Judicial Committee leave no room for doubt as to the contention advanced before them and as to the view which ultimately prevailed. The mortgagee in 20 All. 401[8] had, in the words of the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court "preferred to seek one remedy" and his debt should have been on this principle regarded by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the Calcutta case to have become merged in the decree and was only payable under the decree and not otherwise. But it was not so held by their Lordships.

The relationship between the parties in the present case is really that of a mortgagor and mortgagee and in taking an account between the parties c which S. 6 (2) contemplates, the plaintiff who is in the position of the mortgagor would, in our opinion, and in accordance with the language of that sub-section be entitled to a set-off even in regard to a decree that was barred by limitation. The other questions need not detain us long. It was contended on behalf of the appellant that the decree in favour of his client was not barred by limitation. This contention was based on the fact that an application for execution was presented by him on 7th August 1933 but it was returned by the Court on 10th August 1933 to rectify certain defects that existed in the petition. It was not re-presented by him. Relying on certain decisions of this Court, it was argued that the application for execution which was according to law should not have been returned and the effect of the wrongful return by the Court was that the application should be deemed to be pending. We do not d however agree with that contention. Whatever may have been the effect of the order of the execution Court, if it was not justified, it cannot be said in this case that the order passed by the execution Court on 10th August 1933 was an unjustifiable or a wrong order. The claim for costs made by the petitioner was obviously in excess of what was actually due to him and the application had therefore to be returned for amendment. Moreover, certain draft sale papers had not been produced and they were required to be produced. The execution Court had given three weeks' time for amendment and for the production of the papers and having failed to comply with the proper order of the Court within the time given to him he cannot advance the contention that the application which had been with him throughout should have been deemed to be e pending.

The improvements to which objection has been taken by the appellants should not have been in our opinion allowed in regard to items 64, 66 and 66-A although the grant in regard to item 44 appears to be justified. As for the last item, the tenants appear to have built the compound walls and unless the plaintiff had shown that they had only repaired the old walls compensation should have been and was rightly granted. In regard to item 64 however the onus was on the defendants to establish that they had effected the improvements for which they could have claimed compensation and not for the plaintiff Devaswom to show that the trees had not been grown by the tenants. That would be the proof of negative fact and unless the law required the plaintiff to prove a negative fact, which it did not, it should have been proved by the defendants. Similarly f the statement of D. W. 4 should not have been, in the absence of the marupat, accepted in regard to items 66 and 66-A. As for costs, there is no reason why we should interfere with the discretion exercised by the Court below. Ordinarily, the mortgagor is liable to pay the costs of the mortgagee in a redemption suit. But, in the circumstances of the case, the Court had decreed only a portion of the costs in regard to court-fee and in regard to the expenses of a commission incurred by them. In other respect, they were directed to bear their own costs. There is no reason why we should interfere with that discretion. The result is that the appeal will be accepted to the extent that the item covered by the decree in O. S. No. 487 of 1921 would be allowed to be set off as against the claim for improvements allowed to the defendants. The claim for improvements in regard to items 64, 66 and 66-A g is disallowed. The plaintiff will have, in the circumstances, three-fourth of the costs of this appeal. Time for redemption is extended by three months from this date. An application has been filed by Mr. Govinda Menon under S. 15, Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (4 of 1938). It may be posted for hearing next week.

C. M. P. No. 5946 of 1941.

ABDUR RAHMAN J.—It has been contended by Mr. Govinda Menon that since the amount of rents covered by the decree is being allowed by us for the first time now, it should be deemed to have been discharged as his client had in accordance with the provisions of S. 15, Madras Agriculturists Relief Act, deposited the sum due for faslis 1347 and 1346 before the dates mentioned in that section. In view however of the decree that was passed in this case in July 1937 before the Agriculturists h Relief Act came into force, and which we are now only modifying by reducing the amount that was decreed in favour of the defendants under S. 6 (2), Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act (1 of 1900) after the full set of allowable to the plaintiff had been taken into consideration, we are of opinion that S. 15, Agriculturists Relief Act, not being retrospective in character, can have no application and the amount due for improvements allowed to the defendants should have been decreed by the lower Court after the arrears of rent included in the decree that is now barred by limitation had been taken into account. Viewed thus, the rent could not be regarded as due or payable after the Act came into force. The only decree that S. 6 (2), Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act, contemplates is one for improvements after the arrears of rent, etc., have been set off. The rent would thus be wiped off in any case and cannot be held to have been decreed. It would therefore follow that the rents alone included in the sum of Rs. 1960 for which the decree was passed excluding costs and interest would be deducted out of the improvements and the balance that is found to be due after the amount of rents has been deducted will remain payable to the defendants. The parties are directed to bring in a draft decree.

V. K. Naganatha Ayyar and others — Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 950 of 1940, Decided on 10th December 1941, against decree of Sub-Judge, Tuticorin, in A. S. No. 120 of 1938.

(a) Tort—Wrongful attachment—Damages—Municipality not being able to realise arrears of house tax from owner moving Magistrate to take action under Sch. 4, R. 36, Madras District Municipalities Act—Magistrate issuing warrant to attach moveables found inside owner's house —House occupied by owner's divided brother—Tax Superintendent being asked to do so pointing out house to constable—Constable attaching moveables as per warrant and Superintendent attesting search list — Action against Municipality and Superintendent by owner's divided brother for damages held not maintainable.

The municipality not being able to realise arrears of house tax from the owner moved the Magistrate under Sch. 4, R. 36, Madras District Municipalities Act. The Magistrate thereupon issued a warrant for the attachment of moveables found inside the house. The house however was not in the occupation of the owner, but that of his divided brother. On being asked to do so, the Tax Superintendent accompanied the constable to whom the warrant was entrusted for execution and pointed out the house in question. The moveables in the house were attached as per warrant and the search list was attested by the Tax Superintendent. The owner's brother whose moveables were attached brought an action for damages for wrongful attachment against the municipality and the Tax Superintendent :

Held that there was no case against the Tax Superintendent and the suit against him was rightly dismissed. [P 312*b*]

Held further that the municipality was entitled to move the Magistrate to take action under R. 36 and the further proceedings were all taken by the Magistrate. Therefore, the Municipal Council in moving the Magistrate to take action against the defaulter did no more than what it was justified under the law to do and therefore the suit against the Municipal Council as well was rightly dismissed. [P 312*b*,c]

(b) Tort — Seizure of goods authorised by warrant — No action lies for damages even if warrant was improperly obtained.

If goods are seized under a writ or warrant however improperly obtained which authorised the seizure, the seizure is lawful and no action for damages will lie in respect of the seizure unless the person complaining can establish a remedy by some such action as for malicious prosecution : ('31) 18 A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 28, Rel. on. [P 313*a*,c]

JUDGMENT.—One K. A. Anthonimuthu Pillai was the owner of two houses Nos. 60 and 61 in Vaniarvilai Street, Tuticorin. The municipal tax for house No. 61 was in arrears. The owner K. A. Anthonimuthu Pillai was prosecuted The Bench Court convicted and fined him and also directed him to pay up the arrears. The arrears were not paid and the Bench Court then issued a warrant to attach the moveables of K. A. Anthonimuthu Pillai. The warrant proved infructuous. The Court then issued a second warrant through the Sub-Inspector of Police to attach all the moveables found in the house No. 61. That house was then occupied by the defaulter's divided brother B. A. Anthonimuthu Pillai. Attachment was effected by the Head Constable to whom the warrant was entrusted for execution by the Sub-Inspector. When the warrant was returned at one time saying that the house was locked, the following order was passed by the Magistrates :

"The warrant should be executed properly. It is no use saying that the house is under lock and that the accused is absent from the town. Steps should be taken to attach all the moveable properties found inside the house of the accused and the village Munsif's attakshi obtained for doing so. The warrant should be returned for execution on or before 10th June 1936 without fail.

(Sd) N. M. Roche Victoria, 21-5-1936,
President in charge."

Thereupon the Head Constable took the village Munsif and proceeded to execute the warrant. On that occasion they sought the help of defendant 1, the Tax Superintendent of the municipality and he was asked by the municipal authorities to render help to the constable. Defendant 1 pointed out the house and later attested the search list which was prepared by the Head Constable. The present suit was laid against four defendants, the first being the Tax Superintendent, the second the Head Constable, the third the village Munsif and the fourth, the Municipal Council of Tuticorin. The plaintiff's case is that there is enmity between him and defendant 1 and that he got the others to execute the warrant by attaching all the properties of the plaintiff, B. A. Anthonimuthu Pillai including moveables which are not attachable under S. 60, Civil P. C., and under the provisions of the District Municipalities Act which embody the prohibition contained in S. 60, Civil P. C. Both the lower Courts dismissed the suit and the appellant urges that the dismissal is wrong for the reason that his properties were attached for the arrears due by his brother K. A. Anthonimuthu Pillai. He says that he was not the defaulter and that the President could only issue a warrant for the attachment of the moveables of the defaulter and that if his moveables were attached, he was entitled to damages on the ground of wrongful attachment. He also says that even wearing apparel, cooking vessels and bedding were attached all of which are not attachable and that the whole thing was engineered by defendant 1.

Both the lower Courts have found that the plaintiff has not proved that there was any enmity between the appellant and respondent 1, the Tax Superintendent and the appellant's case that he was at the bottom of the whole thing is not proved. What has been found against respondent 1 is that he pointed out the house No. 61 to the Head Constable and that too on being asked to do so. Evidence to the effect that there was a protest against the attachment of the articles on the ground that they belonged to B. A. Anthonimuthu Pillai and that respondent 1 asked the Head Constable to go on with his attachment notwithstanding the fact that the moveables did not belong to the defaulter is disbelieved. On these findings there was no case against respondent 1 and the suit against him was rightly dismissed. He was not a party to the attachment. He did not point out the articles to be attached and he took no part in it. He showed the house no doubt but it is not the case of the appellant that by merely showing the house, he was guilty of any illegal conduct. The subsequent attestation of the search list does not carry the case further. I therefore agree with the lower Courts in holding that respondent 1 was not liable for any damages for the wrongful attachment, if any, of the goods of the appellant. Respondent 4, the Municipal Council, must also be exonerated because there is nothing to show that respondent 4 sought the attachment of the moveables of the appellant. They complained, as they were entitled to do, to the Magistrate that the arrears were not paid. Under R. 30 (1) of Sch. 4, District Municipalities Act, if the amount due on account of any tax is not paid within fifteen days, the executive authority may recover by distraint the amount due on account of the tax together with the warrant fee and the distraint fee. Clause (2) says:

"If for any reason the distraint, or a sufficient distraint, of the defaulter's property is impracticable, the executive authority may prosecute the defaulter before the Magistrate."

Under Rule 36 (1) :

"Every person who is prosecuted under sub-r. (2) of R. 30 shall be liable, on proof to the satisfaction of the Magistrate that he wilfully omitted to pay the amount due by him or that he wilfully prevented distraint or a sufficient distraint, to pay a fine not exceeding twice the amount which may be due by him on account of the tax and the warrant fee."

Then clause (2) of R. 36 says :

"Whenever any person is convicted of an offence under sub-r. (1), the Magistrate shall, in addition to any fine which may be imposed, recover summarily and pay over to the Municipal Council the amounts, if any, due under the heads specified in cls. (a) and (b) of sub-r. (1)."

In this case the municipality tried to recover the arrears and they failed. They tried to execute a warrant against the moveables of the defaulter and there again they were unable to get anything. Then the defaulter was prosecuted under cl. (2) of R. 30. It was proved to the satisfaction of the Magistrate that he wilfully omitted to pay the amount due by him. Then the Magistrate convicted him of that offence and sentenced him to pay the fine and under cl. (2) of R. 36, the Magistrate issued the warrant that all the moveables found in premises No. 61 should be attached. This he was certainly entitled to do and there would have been no trouble if the warrant had been confined to the moveables of the defaulter, but under R. 35, if the tax due on account of any building remains unpaid at the end of the period specified in sub-r. (1) of R. 30, the executive authority may, if the said tax has remained unpaid for more than twelve months, require the occupier for the time being of such building to pay the amount within a specified time and may distrain and sell any moveable property found in the building. In certain cases, even the moveables which do not belong to the defaulter, if found on the premises, may be liable to attachment. In this case, rightly or wrongly, the Magistrate issued a warrant directing the attachment and seizure of the moveables found inside the house No. 61. All that the Municipal Council is said to have done is to move the Magistrate to take action under R. 36. This the Municipal Council was entitled to do and the further proceedings are all taken by the Magistrate. Therefore, the Municipal Council in moving the Magistrate to take action against the defaulter did no more than what it was justified under the law to do and therefore the suit against the Municipal Council as well was rightly dismissed. Then coming to the case of respondents 2 and 3—the Head Constable and the Village Munsif—it is clear from what has just been said that they were acting under the express orders of the Magistrate in attaching all the moveables found in the house in question. The Village Munsif is not said to have done anything more than what he was directed to do under the warrant, namely, to attest the search warrant. As regards the Head Constable, he obeyed the warrant as he was bound to do and he is not concerned with the question whether the warrant was rightly issued or wrongly issued. Under the Judicial Officers' Protection Act of 1850 :

"No officer of any Court or other person, bound to execute the lawful warrants or orders of any . . . Judge, Magistrate, Justice of the Peace, Collector or other person acting judicially shall be liable to be sued in any civil Court, for the execution of any warrant or order, which he would be bound to execute, if within the jurisdiction of the person issuing the same."

That is, if the warrant authorised it and he executed the warrant, he is protected under this section. The question is put beyond doubt by the decision of the Judicial Committee in a case from Ceylon 61 M. L. J. 330.[1] There certain goods which once belonged to the insolvent were removed to a godown belonging to the appellant. The defendant in the action moved the Court to issue a search warrant because he suspected that it was really the goods of the insolvent which were removed to the appellant's godown. It was however found that they had been lawfully sold to the appellant sometime before the insolvency and that the ownership passed to the appellant and they ceased to be the insolvent's goods. The insolvency Court issued a search warrant and the respondent went with the officer entrusted with the execution of the search warrant and pointed out the goods to be seized. Those goods were seized and ultimately it was found that they were not the goods of the insolvent. The appellant sued the respondent for damages for wrongful attachment and for the loss sustained by him. The Supreme Court of Ceylon dismissed the action holding that there was no malice proved. The Judicial Committee reversed the decision holding that the attachment in that case authorised only the seizure of the insolvent's goods which may be found in the premises belonging to the appellant and that it did not authorise the a seizure of any goods found in those premises. They say that if the seizure was not authorised by the order, then the case stands on a different footing altogether. They said this:

"A distinction must be drawn between acts done without judicial sanction and acts done under judicial sanction improperly obtained. If goods are seized under a writ or warrant which authorised the seizure, the seizure is lawful and no action will lie in respect of the seizure, unless the person complaining can establish a remedy by some such action as for malicious prosecution. If, however, the writ or warrant did not authorise the seizure of the goods seized, an action would lie for damages occasioned by the wrongful seizure without proof of malice."

In that particular case the search warrant ran in the following terms:

"These are therefore by virtue of the Insolvent
b Ordinance, 1853, to authorise and require you with necessary and proper assistants to enter in the daytime into the premises aforesaid and there diligently to search for the said property and if any property of the said insolvents shall be there found by you on such search that you seize the same to be disposed of and dealt with according to the provisions of the said Ordinance."

The warrant did not authorise the seizure of all goods found in those premises but directed him diligently to search for the property of the insolvent and said that if any property of the insolvent was found on such a search, then, the officer was to seize the same to be disposed of according to the orders of the Insolvency Court. This decision gives the distinction to be drawn between a case where an act was authorised by the warrant however improperly obtained, and a case where it was not autho-
c rised by the warrant. In this case, the seizure of the goods in question was certainly authorised by the warrant. As stated already, it directed the officer in express terms to seize all the goods found on the premises. The goods in question were found in the premises and their seizure was therefore authorised by the warrant. In such a case, there is no room for any action for damages, unless, as the Judicial Committee says, the case is brought under some other head of tort such as malicious prosecution or otherwise. The suit was therefore rightly dismissed against all the respondents and the appeal is dismissed with costs (one set). No leave.

Second Appeal No. 412 of 1940, Decided on 8th December 1941, against decree of District Court, Bellary, D/- 24th October 1939.

(a) Hindu law — Maintenance — Widow — Widow's daughter and son-in-law when can be maintained.

Ordinarily it is only the widow that can claim to be maintained from the property left by her husband. The daughter, if indigent, may be maintained, but the daughter's husband and others cannot be maintained. If there is enough income and if it is not a question of borrowing, then it is open to the widow to maintain the son-in-law and other persons as well; but if it is a question of borrowing then the e question would be whether the widow was entitled to incur any expenditure for the maintenance of any one except herself. It is only if the daughter is indigent and if her husband is not able to protect her that the mother would be entitled to borrow even for the purpose of maintaining the daughter. [P 314*d,e*]

(b) Hindu law — Maintenance — Widow — Widow is entitled to live in same state in which she lived during her husband's life-time — But maintenance should be fixed with regard to circumstances of family.

Where a widow or the widow and her daughter are to be maintained out of the property left by the widow's husband, they are entitled to live in the same state in which they were living during the widow's husband's lifetime, but having regard to f the circumstances of the family, the Court can fix a reasonable sum as maintenance. [P 314*f*]

(c) Hindu law—Widow—Necessity—Widow handing over to creditor most of income realized on harvest in shape of grain and day after day taking sums from him for daily consumption — Whether particular amount taken binds reversion.

Where most of the income when realized on harvest is handed over by the widow to the creditor in the shape of grain and day after day she goes on taking from the depositee sums required for the daily consumption or for other daily needs and also making payments, the Courts have to be careful in saying whether the general balance at the end of a long period of such continued dealings is really such as would be binding on the reversion. In such a case merely because a particular amount, say Rs. 15 or g Rs. 20 was taken for the purpose of paying kist, it does not mean in the first instance that it is a borrowing nor would it lead to the conclusion that it is necessary to borrow it. The Court must see whether the amount was drawn from out of the deposits or it is a fresh loan; if it is having regard to the general income of the family whether the widow can be held to be justified in borrowing for the payment of the kist. JUDGMENT. — This is a reversionary action filed by the daughter of one Basalingappa for a declaration that a mortgage decree and the proceedings in execution of that decree in O. S. No. 299 of 1934 are not binding upon her. The properties in h question admittedly belonged to her father Basalingappa, who died before 1913, leaving a widow who died after the suit and the plaintiff, his daughter. Respondent 1 and respondent 2's grandfather lent monies to the widow and ultimately a mortgage deed for Rs. 3500 was executed on 7th September 1922. On this mortgage, a suit was filed by respondent 1 against the mortgagor, the widow impleading the co-mortgagee's grandson as a defendant. A mortgage decree was passed and the properties were purchased by respondent 1. The present suit is filed for a declaration that the mortgage, the decree in the suit and the sale in execution are not binding on the plaintiff, the next reversioner. The suit was decreed by the trial Court but on appeal the District Judge reversed the decision of the trial Court and held that the mortgage was proved to be binding on the estate of Basalingappa. Exhibit 12, the mortgage in favour of respondent 1 and the grandfather of respondent 2 was executed on 7th September 1922 for Rs. 3500 partly in discharge of an earlier mortgage, Ex. 8 and also in discharge of the amounts due on further dealings. The prior mortgage, Ex. 8 was of the year 1919 and it was for a sum of Rs. 1500. By the time of Ex. 12, the amount due under it is said to have amounted to Rs. 1966. The amount of Rs. 3500 for which Ex. 12 was executed was made up of Rs. 1966 due under the prior mortgage, Ex. 8, Rs. 809, the amount due on dealings, and Rs. 725 due on a promissory note executed by the plaintiff's husband. Exhibit 8 was in turn executed in respect of prior dealings. Apparently it was in discharge of Exs. 5, 6 and 7 but this is not quite clear and the matter requires investigation.

The learned District Judge relies upon Exs. 1 to 4 which are said to be patti books, the account books themselves not having been produced. Except in a few cases, so far as I have examined the entries with the help of the advocates on either side, no purposes are mentioned as against most of these items. From Ex. 1 it appears that there was a debt due by Basalingappa to the extent of Rs. 200 and that it was reduced to Rs. 100 by the widow. And then Ex. 2 shows that in 1915 the debt due was reduced to Rs. 16. So in 1916 the amount due was only Rs. 16. The Judge says that the reduction could not have been out of the income but that it must have been out of borrowings effected from third parties by the widow. But he does not refer to any evidence and the evidence has to be canvassed to see whether this statement of the Judge is based on any evidence. The estate left by Basalingappa consisted of 40 acres of dry land. The Judge says in para. 17 that the income according to respondent 1 himself would be Rs. 300 to 400 in a good year, Rs. 100 to 200 in a bad year and the net income on lands would be Rs. 100 to 200; that is, if the lands are leased out the income would be Rs. 100 to 200, otherwise, if they are cultivated by the widow with the help of farm servants it will be Rs. 100 to 200 in a bad year and Rs. 300 to 400 in a good year. There is no attempt to find out how much of the 40 acres was leased out and how much was cultivated by the family. That some lands were cultivated by the widow is shown by the fact that several of the amounts borrowed from respondent 1 and his co-mortgagee are said to have been for agricultural purposes, purchase of bulls, payment to field labourers and for cultivation expenses. A finding must be arrived at on the evidence available as to what roughly was the income, which the widow was getting from her lands. In this connexion, when the defendant himself gives the figures at Rs. 300 to 400 or Rs. 100 to 200 the Court may safely take the higher figure because it is not likely that the defendant would be making much of a mistake in giving that sum.

Then another point requiring mention is that the Judge in para. 15 seems to take it that even the son-in-law's maintenance would be a proper charge on the family. He says that the widow had to maintain not merely herself but the daughter and son-in-law as well and that Rs. 300 or even Rs. 600 cannot be said to be unreasonable in their circumstances. This seems to me to be absolutely unsupportable. Ordinarily, it is only the widow that can claim to be maintained from the property left by the husband. The daughter, if indigent, may be maintained but you cannot go further and say that the daughter's husband and others also should be maintained. If there is enough income, and if it is not a question of borrowing, then it is open to the widow to maintain the son-in-law and other persons as well; but if it is a question of borrowing, where it is said that the estate is bound by all these loans, then the question would be whether the widow was entitled to incur any expenditure for the maintenance of any one except hereslf. There is no evidence that the son-in-law was indigent. On the other hand, there are indications that he was having some trade of his own. Unless the Court can say that the maintenance of the daughter is reasonable in the circumstances of this case, having regard to the husband's circumstances, the amount borrowed for her maintenance cannot be claimed to be a charge against the reversion. A daughter goes out of the family on her marriage. Thereafter, for her maintenance she is to look to her husband's family and not to her father's family. It is only if she is indigent and if her husband is not able to protect her that the mother would be entitled to borrow even for the purpose of maintaining the daughter. That question has to be considered and without a finding on this point the view of the learned Judge that all the three ought to be maintained cannot be supported. This will have a very material bearing on the general question considered by the Judge. If only the widow or the widow and the daughter are to be maintained then the question would be what would be a reasonable sum to be spent for their maintenance, having regard to the circumstances of the family. No doubt they must keep body and soul together and they must live, that is, they would be entitled to live in the same state as they were living during Basalingappa's time. But people whose income is only Rs. 200 cannot say that they require Rs. 50 or 30 per month. There are very many people who maintain themselves on much less than that and it is a question what amount can be reasonably said to be required for the purposes of the maintenance.

Another point which appears from the account pattis, Exs. 1 to 4 is that it looks as if these creditors constituted themselves general bankers for the widow. They seem to have been lending from day to day for rice, for dal, for payment of assessment and for every conceivable purpose. There are several cases in the Ceded Districts in which most of the income when realised on harvest is handed over to the creditor in the shape of grain and day after day they go on taking from the depositee sums required for the daily consumption or for other daily needs. In a case of that kind Courts have to be careful in saying whether the general balance at the end of a long period of such continued dealings is really such as would be binding on the reversion. In such a case merely because a particular amount, say Rs. 15 or 20 was taken for the purpose of paying kist, it does not mean in the first instance that it is a borrowing, nor would it lead to the conclusion that it is necessary to borrow it. Their whole income was with the depositee and they go on drawing from out of it. Are they drawing from out of the deposits or are they fresh loans? If they are loans, having regard to the general income of the family, is it a case in which the widow can be held to be justified in borrowing for the payment of the kist? This is not a case of a stranger bona fide advancing monies to the widow. It is a case when right from the very beginning, that is, from the time of the death of the husband the creditors have had continuous dealings with the widow, they lending time after time at short intervals and payments being made by the widow. It is not possible to say from the extracts of the accounts whether the payments generally really represent the income which the widow got from the lands. These questions have to be considered before we can say that the mortgage for Rs. 3500 is binding on the estate when only seven years before the total indebtedness was only Rs. 16. The decree of the lower appellate Court is set aside and the appeal remanded to the lower appellate Court for fresh disposal in the light of the above observations. The Court fee paid on the memorandum of second appeal to be refunded. The other costs will abide and will be provided for in the revised decree.

Appeals Nos. 439 of 1939 and 20 of 1940, Decided on 28th October 1941, against order of Sub-Judge, Tinnevelly, D/- 25th March 1939.

Madras Impartible Estates Act (2 of 1904), S. 4—Applicability of Act—Holder of impartible estate can incorporate into it other immovable property owned by him—Incorporation—Proof of—Villages not part of impartible estate treated as impartible by zamindar and many of his successors—Succession to villages governed for generations on footing of their being impartible—Villages must be deemed to be incorporated into impartible estate.

It is incorrect to say that the Act can apply only to the estates mentioned in the schedule, as they existed at the time of the Permanent Settlement in 1802, and in so far as they are recognized in the sanads then granted. The Act must apply to an estate as it was constituted at any time in or after 1904 which is material in any litigation. If therefore at the time when proceedings are sought to be taken in execution against certain items of property they formed portions of the estate such proceedings must fail. An impartible estate is not something which is permanently fixed and incapable of either diminution or augmentation and in regard to the latter kind of change the holder of an impartible estate can, if he wishes, incorporate into it any other immovable property which he owns. The question whether such incorporation has or has not taken place is one of intention, and such intention can be proved either directly or as a presumption from other facts.

[P 315*g*,h]

But the act of incorporation must be the act of the owner himself and not of anyone who is managing his estate for him : ('40) 27 A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 814, Rel. on. [P 316*a*]

The fact that there is no specific differentiation of the incomes of the after-acquired property and of the impartible estate is not sufficient to prove incorporation. [P 316*a*]

Where certain villages not forming part of the impartible estate were treated by the zamindar and many of his successors as impartible and not private property, and succession to those villages has proceeded for generations on the understanding that they were impartible, such treatment constitutes the act of incorporation of the villages into the impartible estate. It is not necessary that the property incorporated shall cease to possess any separate identity for any purpose whatever. [P 316*b*,d]

KING J. — The question at issue in these appeals is whether two items of property belonging admittedly to the zamindar of Talaivankottai, can be proceeded against in execution of personal decrees obtained against the zamindar's late father. These items of property are : (1) A bungalow at Courtallam acquired by the then zamindar in 1905 ; (2) the villages of Dharukapuram and Pattakurichi granted in inam to a remote ancestor of the zamindar in 1207. The second appeal is concerned with the former item only. There the District Judge has held that this property is liable to attachment. In the first appeal the Subordinate Judge of Tinnevelly has held that both items are not so liable.

The estate of Talaivankottai is one of those mentioned in the schedule to the Madras Impartible Estates Act (2 of 1904). If therefore these items of property are part of that estate, it would seem to follow that they cannot be taken in execution of a personal decree such alienation being prohibited by S. 4 of the Act. The learned advocate for the appellant in C. M. A. No. 439 has, however, propounded the novel theory that the Act can apply only to the estates mentioned in the schedule, as they existed at the time of the Permanent Settlement in 1802, and in so far as they are recognized in the sanads then granted. There being no proof that the second item with which we are concerned is included in the sanad he contends that the Act cannot apply to it—and a fortiori the Act cannot apply to property acquired after 1802. We are totally unable to accept this argument in the absence of any support for it in the definitions contained in the Act itself. It is, we think, sufficiently obvious that the Act must apply to an estate as it was constituted at any time in or after 1904 which is material in any litigation. If therefore at the time when proceedings were sought to be taken in execution against these two items of property they formed portions of the Talaivankottai estate such proceedings must fail. The law is clear that an impartible estate is not something which is permanently fixed and incapable of either diminution or augmentation, and in regard to the latter kind of change it is now well-settled that the holder of an impartible estate can, if he wishes, incorporate into it any other immovable property which he owns. The question whether such incorporation has or has not taken place is one of intention, and such intention can be proved either directly or as a presumption from other facts. These appeals must therefore be decided on this issue of fact whether the two items of property have been incorporated or not in the Talaivankottai estate.

In regard to the Courtallam bungalow the evidence of incorporation is very meagre. The learned Subordinate Judge relies only upon Ex. 9 which is a report from the Collector of Tinnevelly sent in 1922 to the Court of Wards in which it is stated that as the Estate Manager says that the bungalow was purchased with the estate funds the bungalow may be treated as part of the impartible estate, and upon the fact that there is nothing in the accounts of the zamindari to show that the income from the bungalow has been kept separately from the zamindari's general income. In regard to Ex. 9, there is no specific proof that the recommendation of the Collector was acted upon by the Court of Wards. Even if it were, it is insufficient to effect incorporation as A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 814[1] lays it down that the act of incorporation must be the act of the owner himself and not of anyone who is managing his estate for him. So far as the accounts are concerned, the evidence that there is no specific differentiation between two heads of income is, in our opinion, far from being sufficient to prove incorporation. This part of the zamindar's case, it may be mentioned, was not seriously pressed by the learned advocate who appeared for the zamindar. It must therefore be held that the Courtallam bungalow has not been shown to be part of the impartible estate and may therefore be proceeded against in execution.

The principal evidence with respect to the inam villages is furnished by the records of two suits one in 1817 and the other in 1859, which show conclusively that at those periods the Courts held that the right of succession to these villages must be governed by the rules of succession relating to impartible estates. This evidence seems to us, though it is, of course not available in support of any strict plea of res judicata, to prove conclusively that at some period long before 1817 the villages must have been incorporated with the zamindari proper. The learned advocate for the appellant in C. M. A. No. 439, while accepting the fact that the successions to the villages have proceeded for generations on the understanding that the villages were impartible argues that they have never lost their identity as a separate item of property, and never became completely merged in the zamindari. In support of this argument he relies upon the facts that the villages were not included in the sanad at the Permanent Settlement, and were enfranchised in 1865 by the Inam Commissioner. We do not think that these facts are sufficient to show that the villages had not been incorporated in the zamindari. In 1802, of course, the main question in which Government and the zamindar were alike interested was the determination of the amount of peishkush to be paid. This was long before the legal doctrine of incorporation had been thought of, and any omission on the part of the then zamindar to claim that these villages on which revenue was already being paid in the form of quit rent, should be included in his sanad as property upon which peishkush was payable cannot, in our opinion, outweigh the significance of the fact that the villages had been treated by that zamindar and many of his predecessors as impartible estate and not private property. It is such treatment which constitutes the act of incorporation. It is not necessary that the property incorporated shall cease to possess any separate identity for any purpose whatever. Here, though the separate identity remained in regard to the relationship between the zamindar and the Government, it had disappeared entirely in regard to the all important questions of succession and alienability and the other incidents of property held as impartible estate.

We are therefore of opinion that in regard to these villages the order of the learned Subordinate Judge is right, and must be confirmed. In regard to the bungalow, as we have already said, his order must be set aside. To that extent the appellant's execution petition will be restored to file and the Subordinate Judge directed to dispose of it according to law. The parties in this civil miscellaneous appeal will give and take proportionate costs throughout. C. M. S. A. No. 20 of 1940 requires no separate discussion. It is dismissed with costs.

In re Narayana Reddiar — Petitioner.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 424 of 1940, Decided on 19th September 1941, to revise order of Dist. Munsif, Cuddalore, D/- 9th September 1939.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 151—Plaint rejected for non-payment of deficit court-fee — Plaintiff filing review application and tendering deficit court-fee along with it — Review application rejected — Plaintiff held entitled to refund of deficit court-fee—Court held could return same under S. 151—Ss. 13, 14 or 15, Court-fees Act held did not apply.

The plaint was rejected by the Court for the plaintiff's failure to pay the deficit court-fee. Subsequently, the plaintiff put in an application for review of the order rejecting the plaint and along with it tendered the deficit court-fee. The review application was rejected and the Court refused to refund the deficit court-fee :

Held that the plaintiff was entitled to return of the court-fee which was tendered with the review application and although Ss. 13, 14 or 15, Court-fees Act, had no application the Court could grant a certificate for refund under its inherent powers under S. 151, Civil P. C.: ('28) 15 A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 29, Disting. [P 317*a*,b]

ORDER. — This is a revision against an order refusing an application for the grant of a certificate in respect of court-fee paid by the plaintiff to the extent of Rs. 183-14-0 on 11th January 1939 in the following circumstances. A suit for money due on a hypothecation bond was instituted by the plaintiff in the Court of the District Munsif of Cuddalore. The plaint had a stamp of rupee one to start with, but it appears that a stamp of Rs. 70 was paid later on while the suit was pending. The plaint should have had a stamp of the value of Rs. 254-14-0. There was thus a deficit of Rs. 184-14-0. Since the plaintiff did not make up this deficiency, his plaint was rejected on 9th January 1939. Two days later, he applied for a review of this order by I. A. No. 139 of 1939 and along with this application for review he tendered the deficit court-fee of Rs. 183-14-0; but his application was rejected on 25th April 1939. The petitioner therefore asked for a certificate authorising him to receive the refund of court-fee. This was refused on the ground that if the sum of Rs. 71 which was paid by him when the suit was pending could not be refunded to him the sum of Rs. 183-14-0 would not be equally refundable. In coming to that conclusion the District Munsif relied on 6 Pat. 602[1] but the case has obviously no application. In that case the appellant had applied for refund of court-fee that he had affixed on the memorandum of appeal. Had he paid the court-fee after the appeal was dismissed, this decision might have had some application to the facts of the present case. But there the money was paid in before the appeal was disposed of. The plaintiff is not asking for a refund of Rs. 71 which he had paid before the suit was dismissed. The reasoning therefore given by the lower Court for the dismissal of this application is fallacious. A court-fee of Rs. 183-14-0 was put in by the plaintiff with his application with the object of its being utilised if and when the application for review was accepted by the Court. If the application for review was not to be accepted as in this case it was not, the court-fee put in with the petition for review would have had to be refunded. In accordance with the rules, the court-fee stamp in this case was cancelled as soon as it was put in. What the lower Court should have done when it rejected the application for review was therefore to grant a certificate to the petitioner authorising him to receive the amount which he had paid. It is true that Ss. 13, 14 or 15, Court-fees Act, have no application, but it has been held that the court-fee can be refunded under the inherent powers of the Court. It may be that the court-fee in this case was not paid by a mistake of either party or in obedience to a wrong order of the Court, but it is equally clear that it was not meant to be utilised until the petition for review presented on behalf of the petitioner was accepted by the Court. The Munsif was therefore wrong in rejecting the application for the grant of a certificate. He should have granted one under S. 151, Civil P. C. I would therefore accept the revision and direct that a certificate in regard to the court-fee of Rs. 183-14-0 should be issued to the petitioner by the lower Court.

N.R. Samiappa Mudaliar and others— Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 156 of 1939, Decided on 23rd October 1941, against decree of Sub-Judge, Tiruvarur, in A. S. No. 2 of 1938.

(a) Practice — Second appeal — New point— Point not raised in lower Courts nor in memorandum of second appeal allowed to be raised as case was one of trust.

A point which was not raised in the lower Courts nor in the memorandum of grounds of second appeal was sought to be raised at the time of argument to the effect that the respondent who was a trustee had purchased certain property which ought to be surrendered to the trust. It was allowed to be raised having regard to the fact that it was a case of trust. [P 318*d*]

(b) Trusts Act (1882), S. 88—Scope — Property ceasing to be trust property—Person subsequently becoming trustee is not debarred from purchasing it.

Section 88 assumes that the property must be trust property at the date of purchase or that the trustee must have purchased an outstanding claim on it such as an encumbrance. Therefore, a trustee is not debarred from purchasing a property which was once a trust property but had become lost to the trust before he became a trustee and has become the absolute property of another by adverse possession.
